> I do not know of any provision by which we may suspend the rules. Ordinarily, when we undertake to do anything contrary to the rules of the Senate, it is done by unanimous consent. We have by resolution suspended the joint rules, but the rules of the Senate are imperative; and there is no provision in our rules, as there is in the rules of the House of Representatives, by which they may be suspended.

After a long debate it was decided by a majority of the Senate that the rules might be suspended in this way. The very rules the Senator from Missouri eulogized so enthusiastically have been followed in this case, and strictly followed. The motion was presented in writing, laid over a day, and then by a vote of the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Rules, one of the greatest committees of the Senate, a committee that numbers in its membership some of the most prominent and gifted Members of this body. That committee, by a majority vote, has reported to the Senate that the motion should be adopted, and I have no fear, therefore, Mr. President, of the result.

Before I take my seat I wish to refer to the Senator's statement that this bill has been pending before no committee. A bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia was introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] December 10, 1914, and the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] introduced a similar bill June 24, 1914. For months and months a proposition of this kind has been pending before one of the committees of the Senate, and the emergency here to-day might easily have been avoided by the action of the committee on one of these bills.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] cites the precedent of 1861, and I think it is a precedent which should be adopted by the Senate at this time; that is, I think the Senate ought to decide now whether in the future it proposes to have this rule or whether it proposes to abolish it. It certainly is not right for the Senate to have a rule prohibiting legislation upon an appropriation bill binding upon the minority and not binding upon the majority.

The Senate deals with 12 or 14 appropriation bills every year, and it is a rule of the Senate, as it is a rule of the House of Representatives, that legislation shall not be engrafted upon an appropriation bill. When the Senator from Texas stigmatizes the Senate as a body which does not recognize the rule of the majority, he should include the House of Representatives in the same category, because the House of Representatives is more a stickler for the rule that legislation shall not be engrafted upon an appropriation bill than is the Senate.

The Senator knows that this very bill when in the House could not have been amended as he now proposes to amend it in the Senate. We have, as I said, some 12 or 14 appropriation bills that come to the Senate every year. The question is,

Do we propose to do our legislating upon those appropriation bills, or do we propose to keep them clean, clear-cut bills of appropriation? It certainly would not be right to maintain this rule and occasionally vacate it for the purpose of doing the will of a temporary majority, because rules are not only intended for the government of the majority but for the protection of the minority as well.

The very rule that we shall not ingraft legislation upon an appropriation bill is to restrain a majority, because a minority could not do it. Now it is proposed by a mere majority to relieve the majority of the restraints which the rules have put upon it.

I think, Mr. President, that the motion is in order. I think it is perfectly proper to move to suspend the rules, but I think also that the suspension of the rules should be in accordance with parliamentary precedent by a two-thirds vote and only by a two-thirds vote. I shall ask the Chair, and I do ask the Chair now, to pass upon the question or to submit it to the Senate, that a two-thirds majority shall be held necessary to suspend the rule. Now is the time for the Senate to decide whether it is going to enforce its rules or not. If it is not going to enforce this rule prohibiting legislation upon an appropriation bill, it ought to repeal the rule.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in the House this very amendment could have been put on an appropriation bill by a report from the Committee on Rules through the vote of a bare majority.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is true that the Committee on Rules in the House has that power, but no Committee on Rules of the Senate has had it or will claim it. That is not the question before the Senate. The question is what the Senate is going to decide now. Is it going to permit legislation on these 14 appropriation bills as they come to the Senate at any time without any limit in accordance with the rule of the temporary majority?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is not the issue at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I say it is the issue, because if you do it in this case you can not refuse to do it in the other cases.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is a different proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. You would have to permit the majority to decide at any time whether to legislate upon an appropriation bill. You can not make fish of one and fowl of the other.

Mr. JAMES. In the House of Representatives if a motion is made to suspend the rules it requires a two-thirds vote to adopt it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly; that is the rule in the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is there any rule requiring a two-thirds vote to suspend in the Senate?

Mr. JAMES. It is the rule required in the House, and parliamentary law requires it in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is prematurely taken. The present question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee? After that question has been determined and the report of the committee is before the Senate the Chair will make some observations on the point of order, but not now. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to adopt the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I want to interrogate the Senator from Texas on one point. If the motion which the Senator from Texas has made prevails, I will ask the Senator if it is then his purpose to offer the amendment to the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Immediately?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. For that reason I shall vote against the motion made by the Senator from Texas. The Senate by unanimous consent has agreed that the committee amendments shall first be considered. If the Senator intends to withhold his amendment and before the bill is concluded offer his amendment, I will take a different view.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, that is a mere matter of procedure. I understood the Senator to ask me if it was my intention to offer the amendment before the reading of the bill had been concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I meant to ask the Senator if he intended to offer it immediately. The Senator does not so intend?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall offer it after the committee amendments have been considered.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, understanding that the pending question is simply whether the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules, I wish to say that I shall vote in favor of that motion, because I am willing that the Senate shall consider it. It will not be supposed, however, that because I vote in favor of the measure now, therefore I am in favor of the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules, to which I am opposed, for reasons which I shall give later.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from Texas is very unfortunate indeed in trying to suspend the rules for legislation upon an appropriation bill. I call attention of the Senate to paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, which says:

> 3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. President, that paragraph of Rule XVI was adopted for the very purpose of facilitating the passage of appropriation bills. If the rules could be suspended by a majority vote of the Senate and legislation allowed upon appropriation bills, a majority within a week or two before the close of a short session of Congress could add any sort of legislation on an appropriation bill or defeat the passage of the appropriation bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if it is not a fact that there is hardly a bill brought before the Senate in which legislation, necessary legislation, is not engrafted by the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. It is always by unanimous consent. An objection by one Senator would eliminate it from the bill. No one is objecting to legislation of that kind.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is very true.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is not involved in the question pending.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly by unanimous consent there would be no objection, but the mistake the Senator from Texas is making is quite as great if the majority consented as it would be if the whole Senate agreed to it. The moral notion of the act is not affected by the number of Senators who approve or disapprove it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; under the rules there is no question but that by unanimous consent we may put legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is not a Senator permitted under the rules to move to suspend the rules in the form the Senator from Texas has proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, and I say that the Senator from Texas is well within his right. He had a perfect right to make the motion he did make, but I say it is unfortunate that it should be on an appropriation bill, because of the fact that it is establishing a bad precedent, and we do not know where it will lead to. It may be done at a time when there will be a greater issue involved than the one at present presented. The result perhaps may be that the appropriation bills in a short session would fail utterly. That could be easily accomplished if this is made the practice of the Senate. If I were interested in legislation that was vital to my State, I would not care how important it may be to me or to my people, I never would undertake under the rules of this body to place it upon an appropriation bill by moving a suspension of the rules of this body.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator would not hesitate to do that if he thought it necessary legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. I simply say that there are other ways not only in the House but in the Senate of reaching that end and reaching it in the regular procedure of the Senate and of the House. As far as I am concerned, if this question came up in any other way I would be willing to vote for it; I would not hesitate a minute to vote for it, but, Mr. President, if I vote for this motion I would be estopped forever afterwards from complaining on the part of any other Senator doing the same thing, no matter whether the object sought was good or bad.

It seems to me that we are establishing a precedent here that is very, very dangerous indeed, and it is for that reason, and that only, that I shall vote against the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. May I ask what the precise question is now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. LODGE. The question of consideration is raised?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question of consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Of course if that carries the report will be open for debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be. The yeas and nays have been called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to take this occasion to say that the method of legislation in operation here—and which is perfectly legal—which enables us to include many subjects in the same measure, without regard to the title of the bill, is fundamentally wrong. I think I am within bounds when I assert that fully 50 per cent of the objectionable legislation of Congress is in the form of riders or amendments that are not germane to the subject matter of the title of the bills to which they are attached. This is a great abuse of legislation. Much obnoxious legislation has been made possible through this agency. I believe that we should limit as far as possible the practice of placing upon bills, and particularly upon appropriation bills, matters which are extraneous or foreign to their subject matter and which should be considered and stand or fall upon their own merits. I recall in 1898, if my memory serves me rightly, an addition to the general appropriation bill relating to homesteads and other filings upon lands embraced within the area of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad, simple and apparently harmless, the hidden purpose of which could not well be foreseen or suspected, but under which hundreds of thousands of acres of the best of the public domain were gathered into the ownership of that great corporation, a measure which is yet in force and which, standing upon its merits, never could have received, in my judgment, the approval of Congress.

Now, of course, in referring to that incident as an illustration I do not want to be understood as even indirectly intimating the presence of such an element in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Texas; but without reference to its merits, instead of encouraging we should limit the practice of interjecting into measures before the Senate subjects by way of riders and amendments which are entirely foreign to their purpose and their titles, which ought to be considered fully and stand or fall upon their own merits.

Our procedure is quite analogous to the institution in the courts of an action to collect a promissory note and ending in a decree of divorce.

We can not predict what will be the outcome of any bill under our system after it has been reported from the committee until it gets through the conference and then comes up for final determination. In almost every instance the bill, if it is at all important, is reported back and passes, if at all, with a great many subjects attached to it, of which its author never dreamed, which would not receive the approval of a majority of the Senate if they were considered upon their own merits as distinct subjects of legislation.

I shall vote against the suspension of this rule for the reasons stated.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I believe that the proceeding now contemplated by the motion of the Senator from Texas is destructive of all orderly legislative procedure. If a measure is of importance it should receive in ordinary course the attention of a committee of this body. It is designed by the means now attempted to ask the Senate to vote upon a measure of vital importance without having the information which usually accompanies consideration by a Senate committee.

I say, the plan now contemplated is revolutionary and destructive of parliamentary procedure. A day or two since while considering a supply bill, a proposal ordinarily out of order was made by the attempt to ingraft upon a supply bill legislation of the first importance.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. O'GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why has not the Senator moved to repeal Rule XL if he thinks this procedure is so dangerous? We are proceeding under the rules of the Senate. One rule is just as good as another.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I believe in the wisdom of the Members of this body who adopted Rule XL and all other rules which, tested by experience, have been helpful in bringing about proper and wise legislation. This immediate proposal was sent to the Rules Committee for consideration, and with a notice of perhaps less than one hour that committee was convened and asked to pass upon the propriety of recommending to the Senate the consideration of the amendment advocated by the Senator from Texas. Of that committee, although the report does not disclose the fact, three members opposed the report which had been submitted and is now before the body. The junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and myself registered our opposition to this report, and we reserved the right to continue our opposition to it on the floor of the Senate.

For these reasons, briefly stated, I am opposed to the favorable consideration of the report submitted by the majority of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are confusing two perfectly distinct propositions. The question now is not whether the rule shall be suspended, but whether the Senate shall consider the motion of the Senator from Texas to suspend the rules.

The Senator from Texas had a right to make the motion under the rules of the Senate. It was the duty of the Senate to consider that motion under the rules of the Senate. It was sought to refer the motion to the Committee on Rules. I voted for that motion because I thought it was the orderly course of procedure. But if I had believed that there would have been any disposition on the part of the Senate to refuse to consider the report of the Committee on Rules, my vote would have been cast against the reference to the Committee on Rules. I think it is a question of high privilege upon the part of the Senator from Texas. If we refuse to take up the report of the Committee on Rules, the Senator from Texas is denied an absolute right which he has under the rules of the Senate, namely, the right of moving to suspend a particular rule upon giving a specified notice.

When we have taken up the report of the Committee on Rules, which does present the merit of the motion made by the Senator from Texas, then the consideration suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] will be pertinent; but it seems to me that we ought not to hesitate a single moment about our vote to take up the report and thus give to the Senator from Texas the unquestioned right, which he has, during the course of the debate upon the District bill, to move to suspend the rule which relates to that consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I had the right to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and on that account I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is unavoidably absent and is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and I vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. I announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], and in his absence I refrain from voting.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I find that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is paired, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—49.

So Mr. SHEPPARD's motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move the adoption of the report, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules. The Senator from Nebraska raises the point of order that a two-thirds majority shall be held necessary to suspend the rules.

The Constitution of the United States provides that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." The Senate has assumed the right to be a self-governing body, and under this clause of the Constitution has made its own rules, and has so sedulously guarded its prerogatives that it has even reserved the right to appeal from the decision of the presiding officer; it pays no attention to anything that the presiding officer says or to any opinion he has if it does not happen to coincide with the view of the Senate.

The present presiding officer believes that the Senate has reserved to itself the exclusive right to say what its rules are, how they may be adopted, and how they may be abrogated or temporarily laid aside. The present presiding officer does not believe that it is within the province of the present occupant of the chair to determine whether Rule XL should be strictly construed in accordance with the literal language thereof. or whether the Senate of the United States proposes to construe the same in accordance with well-known parliamentary procedure. The Chair therefore submits to the Senate the determination of the question as to whether or not it requires a two-thirds majority to adopt the report of the Committee on Rules providing for a suspension of a certain rule.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, on that I ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that if the Senate should decide that it requires a two-thirds vote to put Rule XL in operation, it would write something into the rule that is not there. It would write language into the rule that does not belong there. Wherever our rules require a two-thirds vote, they specify that fact. For instance, Rule X provides:

> Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order.

Treaties to be ratified require a two-thirds vote, and it is so specified in the rule relating to them. There is no requirement mentioned in this rule for a two-thirds vote or a three-fourths vote or a unanimous vote. The logical inference, therefore, is that the rule may be put into operation by a majority vote. The rule reads, in part, as follows:

> No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.

When a similar question was before the Senate in 1861 a majority of the Senate suspended the rules. It seems clear to me that the intention of this rule is to give a majority of the Senate an opportunity to assert itself. It gives us an opportunity to answer a very just criticism that has been going the rounds to the effect that the Senate is a body where the will of the majority is stifled, where it rests within the power of a few Senators indefinitely to obstruct its proceedings.

I take it that one of the most solemn issues we have ever faced is involved here, an issue entirely outside the question involved in the amendment which I have introduced. The question is, Shall the Senate to-day vote to construe this rule in such a way that the majority may not exercise its will?

Mr. O'GORMAN. May I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator from Texas refers to the precedent of 1861, when it was determined that a majority vote was all that was necessary to suspend a rule. I desire to ask the Senator whether at that time the claim was made that it required a two-thirds vote?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That particular question was not raised. The question raised was as to the power of the Senate by a majority vote to suspend the rules. It was so clear that a majority could suspend them that nobody thought of raising the question as to two-thirds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] requests the yeas and nays. Is the request seconded?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the rule which it is proposed to suspend contains no provision as to the majority requisite for its suspension. On the face of it it might be inferred that that meant that it could be done by a vote of a bare majority.

I think in this connection it is well to consider the practice of the Senate and just what this action would mean. It is always a risk to speak from memory, but in the nearly 22 years that I have had the honor to serve in the Senate I have never seen an attempt made to suspend the rules for any purpose, and especially not for the purpose of putting what is known as a rider, general legislation, and out of order under our rules, upon an appropriation bill. Therefore, Mr. President, I think that it is only reasonable to consider what I believe to be the universal practice in parliamentary bodies in regard to changes in the rules.

So far as my knowledge extends, in all parliamentary bodies of which I know anything, a vote larger than a majority is required to suspend the rules. In my own State, in the legislature, it requires a two-thirds vote, and after a certain date in the session on the question of suspending the rule against the introduction of new business it requires a four-fifths vote. In the House of Representatives two-thirds is established by their rules as necessary to suspend the rules, and, if I am not mistaken, that is the rule of the Democratic national convention. That general practice, of course, rests upon a sound basis.

Mr. JAMES. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is true, as he has stated, that the two-thirds rule, to which he has referred, is the rule of Democratic national conventions. That question was brought to issue in the last national Democratic convention held at Baltimore, when Mr. Bryan proposed his famous Belmont resolution. It was there held, and never denied, that it required a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the national Democratic convention adopted the rules of the House of Representatives to govern its procedure; and the rules of the House of Representatives require a two-thirds vote. It was not a declaration that it was general parliamentary law.

Mr. JAMES. Nobody has disputed that. I merely stated what occurred.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator has stated what occurred, but it occurred because the rules of the House of Representatives had been adopted as the rules of procedure for the national Democratic convention. That is a rule which is specific, and not general parliamentary law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it matters not how the rule was adopted; it remains the fact that the Democratic national convention adopted the rules of the House of Representatives, and that rule among the others; and the Republican national convention adopted the rules of the House of Representatives, and that rule among the others.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the rules adopted by the Democratic national convention were the rules of the Democratic Congress, which was the first one that had assembled in 20 years.

Mr. LODGE. That is simply an illustration of the general practice to which I have referred; and the ground on which that general practice rests is the sound ground that if the rules are to be suspended by a majority vote there are no rules. The suspension of the rules must have a greater sanction than an ordinary matter.

Mr. President, in my judgment the question of suspending a rule by a majority of votes is infinitely more important than the question subsequently involved. If we pull down our rules in this way, and particularly if we allow the rules to be suspended for the purpose of permitting Senators to attach general legislation of any sort or kind to appropriation bills, the appropriation bills will find great difficulty in becoming laws even in the longest session we can hold.

I need not enter on the essential viciousness, as it has always been held, of placing general legislation on appropriation bills except in cases of emergency. Here it is proposed to take down the entire protection surrounding appropriation bills and to throw them open to the action of a majority. A decision that the rules can be suspended by a majority would, in my opinion, destroy the force of every rule governing our procedure.

It seems to me that it is within the power of the Senate, as the Chair has so well said, to settle this question for itself, and to settle it now. It is not so much a question of whether by technical argument we can bring a decision by a bare majority within the letter of the rule as it is a question of whether the Senate means to make a radical change in its whole method of conducting legislation. Therefore, Mr. President, I sincerely trust that the Senate will protect itself and protect its rules by requiring a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules on the first occasion, so far as I know, when an effort has been made to suspend them by the vote of a bare majority.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is a very important one. It is as to whether or not a majority of the Senate can control its procedure.

Under general parliamentary law the majority has the right to control the deliberations of all legislative bodies, except in so far as that majority may be restricted by specific rules. We have as much right to determine that three-fifths or four-fifths or nine-tenths shall be required to modify or suspend a rule as to determine that it requires two-thirds to suspend a rule.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. JAMES. What would the Senator have said if he had been a Member of the Senate back in the days of the force bill if such an amendment as that had been offered as a rider to an appropriation bill?

Mr. SWANSON. That presents entirely another question.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. When the question of consideration comes up the matter can be debated until the 4th of March, under the rules of the Senate, if a Member of that body cares to take the responsibility of such action. If it should be determined that a two-thirds vote is required to modify or change a rule, a week from now or two weeks from now a majority of the Senate may desire to change the rule in order to secure the enactment of some other legislation; but it would be met by the action which some Senators desire to take and could not enact the legislation unless it had the support of a two-thirds vote.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the Senator has dodged my question. The question I asked was, Would he have voted at that time that a majority of the Senate could have tied the force bill onto an appropriation bill necessary to run the affairs of this Government?

Mr. SWANSON. If I had voted as I believe the rules were, I would have voted then as I shall vote now, for I am going to vote according to the rules. I do not think I have a conscience as pliable as the Senator from Kentucky seems to suggest, which would prompt me to vote according to whether I favored or disfavored the particular measure involved.

Mr. JAMES. I would not suggest that a Senator who takes an oath to support the Constitution and the rules of this body has a conscience pliable enough to vote one way on one issue at one time and another way on the same issue at a different time.

Mr. SWANSON. The suggestion of the Senator could have no other interpretation except that upon the force bill I would vote differently on the question of the rules from what I would now.

Mr. JAMES. But still I have not heard the Senator answer the question how he would have voted. If the issue had been raised of tying the force bill onto an appropriation bill necessary to run the affairs of this Government, would he have voted that a majority of this body, which was then Republican, had the right to tie that vicious measure onto that legislation?

Mr. SWANSON. I would have voted as I am going to vote now, that a majority of the Senate has a right to change its rules.

Mr. JAMES. That still does not answer the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANSON. At that time I might have sought delay; I might have been inclined to vote against anything that would defeat the force bill or against anything that might aid the force bill; but the question before us now, as the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested, with nothing of that character involved, with no politics in it, with no sectionalism in it, is whether a majority of the Senate can change its rules. What is the general parliamentary law on the subject?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield to the Senator a little later. The general parliamentary law is that a majority has a right to change and fix its rules, except so far as that majority may have bound itself by specific rule designed to take care of the minority. I can not find anywhere that, in the absence of a specific rule or statute, there is anything to control the majority of any legislative body.

In the House of Representatives a two-thirds vote is required to suspend the rules. Why is that? It is not because of general parliamentary law, not because of custom, but by a specific rule of the House itself, which requires a two-thirds majority to suspend its rules and pass a bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield first to the Senator from Mississippi, who sought to interrupt me a moment ago.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was just going to suggest that the measure proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is almost as meritorious as the force bill was infamous, and it would be a very severe test of the Senator's loyalty to duty to vote for any measure, however meritorious it might be within itself, which would have promoted the passage of the force bill or to vote against a measure, however bad within itself, which would result in the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I say in accordance with its procedure the Senate has repeatedly modified its rules simply by a majority vote. We have modified rule after rule by a majority vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia probably has not forgotten the fact that a statute written by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] establishing a vagrancy law in the District of Columbia was attached to the District of Columbia appropriation bill after a point of order had been submitted to the Senate. The Senator probably remembers the fact also that the present statute relating to the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia was by a majority vote put on the District of Columbia appropriation bill after a point of order on it had been submitted to the Senate. I think I am correct in saying that the same procedure took place in reference to the public-utilities law, which is now on the statute books. So that we have, as the Senator says, frequently, by a majority vote practically, set aside the rule which says that there shall not be attached to an appropriation bill an amendment containing general legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, Mr. President, if I may be permitted to proceed, under general parliamentary law—and I have been able to find no authority in opposition to this contention—a majority of any legislative body controls its proceedings, except so far as its own rules may restrict that majority rule.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, is it not a fact that general parliamentary law and practice in this country, and in England as well, are precisely to the contrary? Does not the legislature of the Senator's own State have a rule that a two-thirds vote is necessary to suspend the rules?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; but that is under a specific rule requiring a two-thirds vote, showing that general parliamentary law is otherwise. There would be no necessity for a specific rule requiring a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules unless under general parliamentary law the rules could be suspended by a majority vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I wish to remind him that under the practice in the House of Representatives when the Committee on Rules brings in a rule providing that a rider may be attached to an appropriation bill, in effect suspending the rules of that body, it does not require a two-thirds vote to adopt the rule brought in, but only a majority vote. The Post Office appropriation bill, which has recently come over from the House, has 10 or 12 provisions of general law which were added to it by a majority vote on a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I take it that there is no law better established in connection with parliamentary procedure than that the majority rules, except in so far as they are restrained by constitutions, statutes, or specific rules. The rules of the Senate in regard to unanimous-consent agreements were changed by a majority by adopting a new rule requiring that the roll should be called to demonstrate the presence of a quorum when a request was made for unanimous consent to fix the time for a final vote on the passage of a bill or resolution.

Since I have been here the custom of the Senate has been to change or alter the rules of the Senate simply by a majority vote, and I have not been able to find anything in parliamentary law, except where there is a specific rule to that effect, which restrains the right of the majority.

As a general thing, rules are adopted to protect the minority, and it is always specifically indicated when they are designed to nullify or restrict the power of the majority.

I think the Senate would make a serious mistake and would establish a precedent that would bother it in the future, and would be far-reaching in controlling its deliberations, if it should decide that its rules can only be modified or suspended or changed by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, Rule XL of the Senate provides that any of the rules of the Senate may be suspended after giving one day's notice if a motion therefor receives a majority of the votes in this Chamber. The rule itself, Mr. President, does not say what number of votes are requisite to carry the motion to suspend the rules provided for in the rule referred to.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] insists that under general parliamentary law, in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary, a majority vote is all that is necessary in order to carry a suspension of the rules. Mr. President, I have some authorities to submit to the Senate that the very reverse of that proposition is true; that in the absence of specific provision in the rules themselves on this subject the common parliamentary law and practice of the country would prevail; and I propose to submit some authorities—some very respectable authorities, I think—who hold that the common and ordinary parliamentary practice in this country is to the effect that ordinarily and generally a motion to suspend the rules in any legislative body must be affirmatively supported by two-thirds of the votes cast on that question before it shall prevail. I quote first from the Manual of General Parliamentary Law, written by Mr. Speaker Reed:

SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Unless the rules themselves provide for their own suspension, they can be suspended by unanimous consent only. It is usual to provide that under certain circumstances and at certain times two-thirds may suspend the rules.

Speaker Reed did not here refer to the rules of the House of Representatives, because the succeeding section of his work, which is a general work on American parliamentary law, refers especially to the suspension of the rules of the House of Representatives. Further, I read from section 57 of Mr. Reed's Manual of General Parliamentary Law as follows:

GENERAL PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

It is usual to say that general parliamentary law is derived from the practice of the British Parliament as modified by the parliamentary customs of this country; but the difference between the system in use here and the English system is so great and so radical that it would perhaps be more accurate to say that American general parliamentary law, while it acknowledges its English origin, rests upon the practice of American assemblies.

If that be sound, I want to appeal to the Senate, and to every Member of it, that each Senator refer to his own knowledge of what the American practice is on this question throughout this Republic. The general practice in all legislative and parliamentary bodies with which I am acquainted or about which I have any information is that a motion to suspend temporarily one or more of the rules of that body requires more than a majority. It requires a two-thirds majority in every case that I know. The practice of the legislatures of the different States, the political conventions of the different parties—in fact, all parliamentary practice with which I am acquainted—is to that effect; and there is sound reason for it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, my contention is that anything this body is authorized to do under its rules a majority is authorized to do, unless there is a rule which requires more than a majority. If the Senate is authorized to change its rules, as it is under that rule, then a majority is all that is required to do it, unless there is something in the rule requiring more than a majority.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand the Senator's contention; but, on the contrary, the contention I present is that while Rule XL itself provides for a suspension of the rules when notice in writing has been given, yet the rule itself is silent as to how much vote is required in order for the motion to suspend to prevail; and in the absence of a specific declaration in the rules themselves, following the general and almost universal American practice, two-thirds is required.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator draw a distinction between changing a rule and suspending a rule?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly I draw such a distinction. It was drawn 53 years ago on this floor by a great Senator from a great State. The Senator who drew it then said that while a majority ought to be allowed to change its rules, if they were to be changed permanently—and that was fair enough, because everybody had to live up to it, minority and majority as well—once the rules were established, they ought not to be changed temporarily, on impulse, unless two-thirds of the Members were willing to make that special change.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator that that is a distinction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that if it were otherwise one rule could be suspended to-day, another rule could be suspended to-morrow, and the minority of this body would be perfectly helpless.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course the majority can change a rule, but the question of suspending a rule for a particular purpose is another thing.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is an entirely separate thing. There is an element of unfairness, Senators, in making a rule that is supposed to apply to us all, and to both sides, that a majority can change or alter at its whim. It is not fair to either side, and it is not fair to any Member on either side, to do any such thing as that.

Let us have our general rules, and, if they are not fair, let a majority vote, of course, alter them. Then we will all know that we must live up to them. But when you want to suspend all those general rules just for a temporary purpose, for one occasion, it ought, in all American fairness to a minority, to take more than a simple majority of the body to do it.

I have other authority, too, on that proposition. I read next from one of the best known writers on parliamentary law, Robert:

It is necessary for every assembly, if discussion is allowed, to have rules to prevent its time being wasted and to enable it to accomplish the object for which the assembly was organized, and yet at times their best interests are subserved by suspending their rules temporarily.

He is stating American general parliamentary law and American general parliamentary practice.

In order to do this some one makes a motion "to suspend the rules that interfere with," etc., stating the object of the suspension. If this motion is carried by a two-thirds vote, then the particular thing for which the rules were suspended can be done.

Why, there is not a Senator within the sound of my voice on either side of this Chamber who will dare controvert the proposition that almost the universal practice throughout this country, in all American parliamentary and legislative bodies, is that no temporary suspension of the rules shall take place except by a two-thirds vote of the body.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HARDWICK. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the almost universal practice to have the previous question in parliamentary bodies, but we have not it in the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Ah, but, if the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, there is nothing in this rule that inhibits the operation of general American parliamentary law. If Rule XL of the Senate had said that this could be done by a majority vote, then the general parliamentary practice and the general parliamentary law of this country would make no difference. Of course we could make a rule providing that it could be carried by a simple majority; but the point is, we have not done it.

Senators, I do not know that I want to prolong this debate. I do not know that I can add to it. It seems to me that it is manifestly unfair, under a general rule like this, to change temporarily, for one purpose, on one occasion, by a simple majority vote, rules that we have said were fair for us all on all occasions. If that can be done in this way, then I venture the prediction, although I am loath to do it, that there is hardly a rule in our Manual that is sacred. There is hardly a rule in it that in any moment of heat and passion can not be altered, amended, or thrown away.

Senators here of old standing and of long and honorable careers on this floor talk about a cloture rule. Why can we not establish that by a majority vote if we can suspend all rules or any part of the rules by a majority vote? What is the protection for the minority if Senators are to be allowed, by a simple majority vote, to suspend a rule that it ought to require a two-thirds vote to suspend on any one particular occasion?

Reference has been made to the special rules in the House of Representatives, and an effort has been made to analogize this proceeding to that proceeding. It is an entirely different, separate, and distinct case. No resolution about this matter, in point of fact, under correct parliamentary law, has ever been referred by this body to the Committee on Rules. The Senator from Texas, following the exact language of Rule XL, merely gave notice that at a certain time, after 24 hours should have elapsed, he proposed to make a motion to offer this amendment as an amendment to the appropriation bill. He did not offer a written resolution at all, but in some way the question was referred to the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Rules reported it back. This is not a special rule made for this particular case; but even assuming that the committee, of course, has acted strictly within its rights and in accordance with the instructions of the Senate, this is, after all, a mere report on a proposition to act under a general rule of the Senate. It seems to me that it would virtually abrogate every rule we have, or render it possible for a majority to abrogate just for the moment, and for a single purpose, any and every rule the Senate has on its books.

The Senator from Texas also said, if I understood him correctly, that when this question was up in 1861 the question as to whether the Senate could adopt this sort of a proposition by a majority vote, or whether it required more than a majority vote, was not raised by anyone.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I said the particular question of two-thirds was not raised. The right of a majority to change it was invoked and was sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. But if the Senator from Texas will examine the RECORD, as he probably has, he will find that Senator Hale argued one side of this question, insisting then, just as some of us are insisting now, that although a majority might have the right to change a rule permanently, a simple majority ought not to have the right temporarily and whimsically to lay that rule aside when they were unwilling to change it permanently. The Senator to whom I have referred mentioned the fact that the House of Representatives required a two-thirds vote to accomplish that very thing, and he contended then and there that more than a simple majority vote was necessary for the Senate to do that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And the Senate overruled him.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand; and not in 53 years has an attempt been made to follow so outrageous a precedent. It is the only precedent on record in the history of the Senate. I challenge the Senator to name any other instance. It is such a bad precedent that for 53 years we have ignored it, and almost everybody had forgotten it. I think it is time now that the Senate should make the true and correct and just precedent on this question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There was no danger in it if it was not followed for 53 years.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is furnishing the danger now. That is the point.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If 53 years elapse after to-day before it is again invoked, there will not be any particular danger in this.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; and if we fix this right we will not hear of this sort of thing, if the Senator will pardon me, for 53 years more.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I dislike to trespass so much upon the attention of the Senate, but I wish to direct particular attention to the fact that the House of Representatives, in passing on the question discussed by the Senator from Georgia, did not follow the rule he laid down. Section 47 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives says:

All proposed action touching the rules, joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There is no provision there as to what vote is required to adopt a report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the Senator know that a motion can be made there from the floor that is not referred to any committee on certain days, at certain times, to suspend the rules and pass a bill or resolution, and that it takes a two-thirds vote to carry through such a motion? In other words, the general motion to suspend the rules there requires a two-thirds vote to carry it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly; but I am not referring to that proposition. I am referring now to the point made by the Senator that, under the practice in American parliamentary bodies, where no specified vote was required to change the rules it would take two-thirds to change them. That was his proposition.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is yet.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This question came up in the House of Representatives. There was nothing specific in the rules of the House as to whether a majority vote or a two-thirds vote was necessary to adopt a report of the Committee on Rules suspending the rules of the House of Representatives. I now cite the instance in which this very question was raised in the House of Representatives:

On April 29, 1902, Mr. John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution providing a special order for the consideration of the bill "to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings," etc. Mr. Thomas J. Creamer, of New York, made the point of order that the resolution suspended a rule of the House——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator allow me to conclude?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly I will.

Mr. SHEPPARD (reading):

Mr. Thomas J. Creamer, of New York, made the point of order that the resolution suspended a rule of the House, and therefore that it would require a two-thirds vote for its adoption.

Now the Senator from Georgia would have us believe that the House of Representatives ought to have refused to sustain the report of the Committee on Rules by a mere majority vote.

The Speaker said:

"The question has been fought out again and again, and is well settled, that the Committee on Rules can bring in a rule providing for order of business in the House. * * * There have been many decisions that a rule from the Committee on Rules which fixes the order of business with the approval of the House does not require a two-thirds vote."

That has been the unquestioned practice ever since. So the House of Representatives did not follow the practice described by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to state that the Committee on Rules suspended the rules on me five times in one day in order that they might accomplish a particular result.

Mr. SHEPPARD. By a majority vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; by a majority vote each time.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, the Senator has put up a man of straw to knock down that I did not put up myself at all. I said from the beginning that under the practice and under the rules there, by special rule reported from the Committee on Rules, the House of Representatives did change the rules or suspend them by a simple majority vote——

Mr. SHEPPARD. But there was no special rule for a majority vote in the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. But that under the general rules of the House providing for suspension under motion made upon the floor, as the Senator from Texas wants to do here, the rule has been invariably that a two-thirds majority was required.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My motion was referred to the Committee on Rules. We are now discussing the report of the Committee on Rules on my motion. It is not analogous at all to a motion made on the floor of the House to suspend the rules.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, he misstates, as I understand, the rules of the House. When I served in that body the rules provided that on a certain day in the week, or five days before adjournment——

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what I said.

Mr. SWANSON. Under a special rule, a motion should be in order to suspend the rules and pass a bill, which requires a two-thirds vote, by a specific rule of the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SWANSON. It never has been contended in that body that the general parliamentary law required anything more than a majority to pass anything that that body was able to pass.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, what I contended—and the Senator has not been able to controvert it, and he can not—is that it is the general parliamentary practice all over this Republic, in his State and in mine and in every other State.

Mr. SWANSON. I say it is not the general parliamentary practice. I say it is the practice by a specific rule everywhere it is invoked, not by general parliamentary law. It is the custom of those bodies, and when they want to have that custom they invoke the rule to do it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, one matter has come out in the course of the debate to which, reluctantly, owing to the source from which it comes, I am unable to give my assent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] cited various instances where the Senate itself has done the very thing that is sought to be done here. He cited, I think, some matters in connection with this same bill in prior years, where we put on this bill, by this process, amendments in regard to a revenue system for the District of Columbia, and so forth. But there is this distinction: This is a proposition to suspend a rule of the Senate. That question did not come up in the cases cited by the Senator from New Hampshire. In each and every case cited by the Senator from New Hampshire the Senate voted that the provision was not obnoxious to the rule of the Senate, but that it was in order under the rule. So, instead of suspending the rule, the Senate voted that they were enforcing the rule.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, to me this raises a very important point. As I understand it now, the proponents of this amendment claim that a Senator can propose to amend or suspend this rule; that a majority can suspend it, and that majority, therefore, can keep the matter from going to the committee, and the majority, therefore, can write it into the statutes. If that is correct, I can see some hope for the volunteer officers' retirement bill. [Laughter.] If I am correct in my position, I shall lose no time in preparing a notice to put that on the next bill which comes before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not this one?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will offer it here, to give the day's notice, though we may not have an opportunity to exercise it. I will offer it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the practice of the Senate itself in regard to the majority making and amending and modifying the rules:

On the 11th day of January, 1884, the Senate of the United States adopted by majority vote the body of rules under which we now act, to become effective January 21, 1884, on a report from the Committee on Rules, William P. Frye, chairman, John Sherman, John J. Ingalls, Isham G. Harris, and George J. Pendleton being the committee.

Recently, by majority vote, the Senate has made various amendments to these rules.

On January 16, 1914, by a majority vote, the rules were amended so as to put under Rule XII a third section, as follows:

> No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the presiding officer, it shall be disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present; and when a unanimous consent is thus given the same shall operate as the order of the Senate, but any unanimous consent may be revoked by another unanimous consent granted in the manner prescribed above upon one day's notice.

That was adopted by a majority vote.

On January 14, 1914, by a majority vote, the Senate amended Rule XIV, as follows:

> After section 2 insert:
> "Provided, That the first or second reading of each bill may be by title only unless the Senate in any case shall otherwise order."

Again, the Senate, by a majority vote, on January 14, 1914, made the following amendment to Rule XIX:

> Add an additional section, to wit:
> "Whenever confusion arises in the Chamber or the galleries or demonstrations of approval or disapproval are indulged in by the occupants of the galleries, it shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce order on his own initiative and without any point of order being made by a Senator."

That was adopted by a majority vote.

Again, on the 2d day of March, 1914, an amendment was made in the rule fixing the standing committees—Rule XXV—so that the Committee on Naval Affairs should consist of 16 instead of 15 Senators. That was adopted by a majority vote.

On the 12th of April, 1912, another amendment was made to that rule, as follows:

> Resolved, That the several standing committees of the Senate having a membership of more than three Senators are hereby respectively authorized to fix, each for itself, the number of its members who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee; but in no case shall a committee, acting under authority of this resolution, fix as a quorum thereof any number less than one-third of its entire membership——

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will permit me to finish this sentence, I shall be glad to yield:

> Nor shall any report be made to the Senate that is not authorized by the concurrence of more than one-half of a majority of such entire membership.

This amendment to the rules was adopted by majority vote. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understand that it is pretty generally admitted here that a majority of the Senate can amend the Senate rules. I refer to a permanent amendment of the rules; not a suspension of the rules. Has the Senator a precedent there where it involves simply a suspension of the rules? I ask because it is very important.

Mr. OWEN. I have not concluded my remarks. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator was quoting precedents, and I just wanted to know how that was.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is interrupting me while I am quoting one set of precedents, and I am not desirous of being diverted to another question.

Mr. SHIVELY. Very well.

Mr. OWEN. In the case of Rule XXXIV the Senate again, by a majority vote, on March 9, 1914, amended the first section of that rule by adding the following words:

> No smoking shall be permitted at any time on the floor of the Senate or lighted cigars be brought into the Chamber.

That was done by a majority vote of the Senate.

Rule XL simply provides that—

> No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule or any part thereof shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.

It is not denied that the Senator from Texas conformed literally to this rule—that he did give the notice, that it has been printed, that it has been before the Senate the time required by Rule XL. Now the question comes up and the argument is made that there is a vast difference between a permanent amendment of a rule and an amendment in the way of a suspension for the day, leaving the general rule to stand thereafter. The effect of a suspension in an individual instance is merely a temporary amendment of a permanent rule, instantly reestablishing the rule thereafter. There is no material difference in principle between an amendment and a suspension, except that an amendment may be a permanent suspension of a preexisting rule. If we may amend by majority rule, surely we can suspend by majority rule, as the greater power includes the lesser power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The rule itself uses the word "suspend."

Mr. OWEN. The rule uses the word "suspend" in connection with the other provision for modifying or amending any rule, so that the amendment and suspension are exactly upon the same basis under Rule XL.

It has been the practice of the Senate to govern itself by the majority rule. When it desires to change from that rule, as in a special order, the Senate has adopted a rule providing that it takes two-thirds to fix a special order. It has also provided, in pursuance of the Constitution, that it takes two-thirds to adopt a treaty; but even in that respect the Senate has adopted a rule that in considering a treaty an amendment to the treaty can be adopted by a majority of the Senate, although the treaty itself, under the Constitution, must be adopted by a two-thirds rule.

Mr. President, I think it is a matter of vital consequence to the United States that the Senate of the United States shall be permitted to conduct its affairs by a majority rule. We have in this Chamber a system against which I have long protested, the rule of the majority by the minority, under the endless-debate system. Right now this body is in the throes of an endless-debate proposition being brought up by indirection, so as to avoid the responsibility of a filibuster, when in point of fact we have a filibuster on this floor. The reason why, as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have not brought in a rural credit bill is because of the filibuster now being conducted on this floor under the color of great and particular pains being taken with regard to everything which arises or can be made to arise for discussion. It ought not to deceive the country. It did not deceive my committee; and my committee has not taken action in reporting that bill because we know that the time is going to be consumed by the minority opposing the program of the majority.

When the Republicans come into power in this country I want them to rule the Senate, and I would vote for a majority rule if they were now in control. I think it is of vital interest to this country that the Senate should have majority rule; and I think, moreover, we should have a cloture rule that will make an end to the waste of the time of the Senate and put an end to the control of the majority by the minority through the exercise by the minority of the so-called "unlimited debate," which gives a substantial veto to the minority.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I should be sorry to postpone further the report of the rural-credits bill, but I think I am justified in calling the attention of the Senate to the observations of a great political leader and statesman whom some of our Members are too apt to forget. I will take the liberty of reading to the Senate the first section of Jefferson's Manual. I am going to read it because it seems quite clear that the question which is now to be presented is not a question as to what the rule of the Senate shall be, but it is a question whether the Senate shall be bound by its rule.

We all agree that the rule which prohibits general legislation upon an appropriation bill is a wise and salutary rule. We would none of us be willing to withdraw the protection of that rule from the public business. We intend to continue that rule and to insist upon its application in all matters in which we do not individually wish to violate it, and the question now before the Senate is whether whenever a majority of us wish to violate it it shall be held for naught. Mr. Jefferson says:

> Mr. Onslow, the ablest among the speakers of the House of Commons, used to say it was a maxim he had often heard when he was a young man, from old and experienced members, that nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of administration and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons than a neglect of or departure from the rules of proceeding; that these forms as instituted by our ancestors operated as a check and control on the actions of the majority, and that they were in many instances a shelter and protection to the minority against the attempts of power.

So far—

Says Mr. Jefferson—

> So far the maxim is certainly true, and is founded in good sense; that as it is always in the power of the majority, by their numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power are the forms and rules of proceeding which have been adopted as they were found necessary, from time to time, and are become the law of the House, by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can only be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check and which the wantonness of power—> is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.

> And whether these forms be in all cases the most rational or not is really not of so great importance. It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by, than what that rule is; that there may be a uniformity of proceeding in business not subject to the caprice of the Speaker or captiousness of the Members. It is very material that order, decency, and regularity be preserved in a dignified public body.

Mr. President, it is not because the party to which I belong is in the minority; it is because I know that the swing of the pendulum to and fro will some time or other, sooner or later, bring that party again into a majority. I hope when that time comes it may be preserved from the temptation to the arbitrary and unjust use of power.

The protection of the minority to-day is the protection of the other side to-morrow. The rules which saved my friends upon the other side of the aisle from the enactment of the force bill are invoked to-day for the protection of the minority upon the other side of the aisle. Above the minority and above the majority is the orderly restrained exercise of the power of Government in such a way as to protect all rights and to save men who have the power for the moment from the temptations that accompany power.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, to say the least, the rule is not clear. It may be that it contemplates a suspension by a majority; it may be that it contemplates a suspension by a two-thirds vote. It is undoubtedly true that the practice in deliberative bodies throughout the United States is to require a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules.

I feel that at least I am at liberty in helping to determine this question to exercise my judgment as to what I think the rule of suspension should be. To permit a bare majority on 24 hours' notice to suspend the rules of the Senate is practically to wipe out the restraint of the rules against the changing wishes of a majority. I believe that many of the rules of the Senate are essential, not alone to the protection of the minority, but to the protection of the majority against sudden impulse; and certainly, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] suggests to me, to the protection of the Treasury from the sudden impulse of the majority. The rule with regard to the limitation of amendments on appropriation bills is essential to the protection of the Treasury.

I expect to vote with the Senator from Texas when the time comes, if I have an opportunity, for prohibition in the District of Columbia, and I shall be glad to vote with him, but, Mr. President, it will not do to permit our intense desire to accomplish a particular piece of legislation to lead us into establishing rules of procedure which, helping a particular piece of legislation that we wish, may bring upon the country much legislation which we oppose.

On yesterday, thinking this subject over, I prepared a notice of an amendment to the rules requiring a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules, but on reflecting I concluded that as the rule stood when the question arose we should determine that a two-thirds vote is necessary to suspend the rules. Therefore I did not give notice of the motion.

I shall vote, Mr. President, to sustain the view that it requires a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules, and I earnestly hope that the Senate will so vote and fix that as the mode of procedure of the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I shall vote as I think every other Senator will vote—to abide by the laws or the rules of the Senate as they are written. To my mind there is no question but that a majority vote of this body is all that is required for the adoption of the report. If the Senate votes that it requires two-thirds to suspend this rule, in my judgment it will by that vote write a new rule rather than interpret the rule now in existence. To avoid the issue presented, a most extraordinary, revolutionary proceeding is proposed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from New York that he did not complete his quotation from Jefferson's Manual. If he will observe on page 134——

Mr. ROOT. I read the entire section.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will observe on page 134 of Jefferson's Manual, he will find the following words:

> The voice of the majority decides; for the lex majoris partis is the law of all councils, elections, etc., where not otherwise expressly provided.

The Senator from New York says that the question is not what the rule shall be, but shall we observe it as it is. My answer is that we shall observe the rule as it is, and that is the rule of the majority. I insist on the obvious truth being recognized that the rule is that the majority shall have the right to determine the action of this body under our usual practice and under the general parliamentary rule in Jefferson's Manual; that is, the majority shall rule. Under Rule XL an express method is provided, in an orderly, peaceful, quiet fashion, for an amendment or modification or a suspension of the existing rules. In this case we are peculiarly driven to relying upon the appropriation bill, for the reason that, on account of the many things which pass through the Senate and the House of Representatives, there is very great difficulty of obtaining general legislation. Since Congress acts as the legislature of the District of Columbia, it is not unreasonable to ask that this item of legislation may be placed upon the appropriation bill dealing with this District.

Nor is this question a new and sudden question, moving the Senate by a burst of passion or excitement. The question of prohibition has been debated in this Republic for 100 years. If the Members of this body are ever capable of arriving at a decision on this question, they are able to do so now. They need no further debate as to what attitude they may take with regard to the question.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma observed that I did not finish my quotation from Jefferson's Manual. I read the entire first section of the Manual under the heading "Importance of adhering to rules."

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. ROOT. Excuse me until I finish my sentence. I did not read the whole Manual. The Senator from Oklahoma would have thought that I was endeavoring to delay the rural-credits bill if I had done so. He would have charged me with that crime. I did not read the whole Manual, and therefore I did not read the sentence 64 pages further on in the Manual which he has excerpted from its context, and which lays down the new and startling proposition that the voice of the majority decides in an ordinary vote.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from New York in reading the first section read into the RECORD what he intended as an argument against the majority rule and failed to cite four lines which expressly negative his argument against the majority rule. Jefferson favored the majority rule and not the minority rule, and the excerpt which the Senator from New York read does not commit Jefferson to hostility to majority rule. It was merely a comment on the wisdom of observing existing rules, as urged by Hatsell in his Precedents on Practice of the British Parliament under King George, in 1785.

Against this ancient suggestion I call attention to the Senate's practice in recent years, which conforms to the common sense of the American people who believe in the majority rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has called for the yeas and nays. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHIVELY. What I am about to read has been referred to this afternoon and partially quoted to the Senate. Before this vote is taken I invite particular attention to it. The Senate rules do not prescribe the vote that shall be necessary to suspend a rule of the Senate. The rules of the Senate being silent in this respect, recourse is had to general parliamentary law as the only means of determining the question. I now read from Robert's Rules of Order, at page 188, under the subhead "Suspension of the rules," as follows:

It is necessary for every assembly, if discussion is allowed, to have rules to prevent its time being wasted, and to enable it to accomplish the object for which the assembly was organized; and yet at times their best interests are subserved by suspending their rules temporarily. In order to do this some one makes a motion "to suspend the rules that interfere with," etc., stating the object of the suspension. If this motion is carried by a two-thirds vote, then the particular thing for which the rules were suspended can be done. By "general consent"—that is, if no one objects—the rules relating to the transaction of business can at any time be ignored without the formality of a motion.

It is not my purpose to argue the question. This quotation is from that portion of Robert's Rules of Order devoted exclusively to the rules of general parliamentary procedure. According to this authority it is manifest that, in the absence of an express provision in the Senate rules prescribing otherwise, there are only two ways in which a rule of the Senate can be suspended. One is by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. The other is by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, for the further enlightenment of the Senate I want to call attention to what is said on this subject by Cushing in his compendious work on the Law of Legislative Assemblies. I read from section 794:

But though it is essential to regularity of proceeding that a legislative assembly should possess rules and orders for its government, and that every member should have the right to insist upon their observance, yet a member may waive his right, and the assembly itself, on a proper occasion, may dispense with its own rules. Hence it is an established practice in all our legislative assemblies to do any matter or to take any course of proceeding which is contrary to the rules, provided it is done by general consent; that is, no member interposing an objection. Hence, also, it is an established practice, whether an individual objection is properly interposed or not, for the assembly itself, on a motion and vote to that effect, to dispense with any one or all of its rules on some particular occasion. The assembly may in this way dispense with its unwritten as well as its written rules, and unless otherwise required in the rules themselves the dispensing may take place by the ordinary major vote.

Likewise, I read section 1490 and a part of section 1491:

1490. When a given subject is allowed to be introduced under a suspension of the rules for the purpose, and it is introduced accordingly, such suspension is an authority to do, in the accustomed methods of proceeding, whatever may properly relate to that subject. Thus, if authority is given under a suspension of the rules to introduce a resolution on a particular subject, which is introduced and received accordingly, it may not only be introduced but considered and finished.

1491. This motion, unless it is otherwise provided in the rules themselves, is decided by the ordinary major vote.

I call the attention of the Senate to these provisions because it seems to be acknowledged upon all hands that where the matter is not provided for specifically by the rules, the rule is to be construed in the light of the established parliamentary law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been called for and the demand seconded. The question is, Is the point of order well taken that a two-thirds vote is necessary in order to suspend the rules? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], but I feel at liberty to vote on this question. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair as before, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. MCCUMBER'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and withhold my vote on that account.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I am paired. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair as before and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer it to that Senator because, evidently from the vote, this is not a political question. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. In his absence and being unable to secure a transfer, I must withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 34, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Dr. Martin A. Meyer, rabbi Temple Emanu-El, San Francisco, Cal., offered the following prayer:

God of the nations, may the spirit of knowledge and of good will, of peace and understanding, rest upon the assembled deputies of our Nation, so that justice may abound in our land, that wisdom and harmony may direct their councils in the spirit of righteousness. Lead these, Thy servants, in the paths of peace. May Thy divine guidance be our portion, so that this people, dedicated to liberty and fraternity, may ever be the stay and guidance of man and humanity, leading to the mountains of love and light. O God, grant strength to the leaders of the people. O Lord, bless our Nation with peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.

QUESTION OF PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. When the President of the United States appears before Congress to deliver a message is it a proper form of procedure for a Member or Senator to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair investigated that once, and there has been nothing of the sort that has happened in Congress since Thomas Jefferson was sworn in as President the first time, because no President since that time ever read a speech before Congress except President Wilson. But before that it does seem that they interrogated the President—not very frequently, but it was done. The opinion of the present incumbent of the Chair is that the President would have the right to refuse to be interrogated, if he wanted to.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I have a further question to ask. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know the proper course to pursue, whether or not a Member or a Senator should address the Speaker first, and ask leave to address the President.

The SPEAKER. No. In the opinion of the Chair, the Speaker has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The Speaker is of opinion that a Member or Senator should address the President direct?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. If, under the circumstances described by the gentleman from Michigan, a Member should rise in his place while the President is addressing the House and should say, "Mr. Speaker," would that be in order?

The SPEAKER. Well, it might be in order, but it would be exercising wretched taste. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Exactly; but the Speaker would exercise his right of recognition in his own way.

The SPEAKER. I have not studied that phase of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to hear it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think if either of the gentlemen ever attempted it, the same man would never attempt it the second time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. That may be; but apparently the President does lay himself open to interrogation.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have a change of reference made of the bill (H. R. 11994) granting an increase of pension to C. W. Kerlee from the Committee on Invalid Pensoins to the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is it a pension bill?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And it has gotten to the wrong committee?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. That is done through the basket without any further formality.

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is done through the basket.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is, I should reintroduce it?

The SPEAKER. No; it simply requires a change of reference.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GORDON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for three days, on account of public business.

STANDARD BARREL FOR FRUITS, ETC.

Mr. SAUNDERS and Mr. ASHBROOK rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I want to know if we have reached the consideration of the apple-barrel bill. If so, I want to get recognition on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not laid it before the House. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will report that bill as unfinished business. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4899) to fix the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities.

Mr. ASHBROOK rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, one week ago to-day, before the House adjourned, I moved the previous question on the bill H. R. 4899. I wish to renew the motion for the previous question on that bill.

Mr. WINGO. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Had we completed the reading of the bill for amendment?

Mr. MANN. The bill had not been read for amendment. It is a House bill. Would it not be wiser to agree upon a time for closing debate instead of trying to push it through?

Mr. SAUNDERS. If I am recognized, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio can not get recognition to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understood the Chair recognized me.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair asked the gentleman for what purpose he rose.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, something over three hours' time was used in debate on this bill, and it occurs to me we have had sufficient time in which to debate the bill, and I see no reason why I should not insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question is not debatable. If the gentleman makes the motion, the Chair will put it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire, reserving my rights, what suggestion gentlemen have to make as to further debate on this bill. There is another bill that we want to bring up, and I do not want to waste unnecessary time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The debate the other day was controlled largely by the members of the committee. It is a well-known fact that several amendments that were perfectly pertinent and proper, going to the root of the question, have been prepared and are ready to be offered, and I see no reason why we should attempt to rush through a matter of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question is not debatable, and if Members do not wish the previous question ordered their remedy is to vote down the motion for the previous question.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that at the end of two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered, the time to be arranged.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that three and a half hours of debate ought to be sufficient on this bill. If gentlemen do not want to vote for it, let them vote against it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that at the end of two hours——

Mr. MANN. Would a shorter time be agreeable to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will consent to one hour, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned.

Mr. SAUNDERS. How is that time to be controlled, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Unless there is an agreement, the Chair will control the time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] wants some time.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to have a little time.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, we have one member of the committee who is opposed to the bill, and I would suggest, therefore, that one half the time be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], a member of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know——

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that I will yield to him five minutes of my half hour, if that will satisfy him.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should be glad to use as much of five minutes' time as I may need.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. ADAMSON. That is the price of unanimous consent, though.

Mr. CRAMTON. Any of these gentlemen who are opposed to the bill could have secured time the other day if they had desired it by making their wishes known to me.

The SPEAKER. That is neither here nor there. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] ask unanimous consent that this debate run not longer than an hour, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The previous question on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. ADAMSON. Reserving the right to object, do I get five minutes?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio give the gentleman from Georgia five minutes?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Cheerfully.

Mr. DILLON. Reserving the right to object, as I am a member of the committee I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will yield to two or three gentlemen to whom I have promised time?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have agreed to parcel out 10 minutes of my half hour, and I will do the best I can to take care of my colleague on the committee [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. I have promised the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] five minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have taken care of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. DILLON. And the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. If the gentleman will take care of them——

Mr. ASHBROOK. I think I can do that.

Mr. MANN. Make it 45 minutes on a side.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman had better do that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then, I will modify the request for unanimous consent that the debate on this bill be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the other half by myself, and that at the expiration of the 1 hour and 30 minutes the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MANN. The amendments will be disposed of as they are offered, I take it, and the time for voting on the amendments will not come out of the hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] asks unanimous consent that debate on this bill be limited to one hour and a half, one half that time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Do I understand that the one hour and a half is all the debate that there will be on the bill and amendments?

Mr. MANN. If the previous question is ordered at the end of that time.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Do I understand that there will be one hour and a half on the bill and all amendments, and that at the expiration of the hour and a half the previous question shall be considered as ordered?

The SPEAKER. Of course you can not debate a thing after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Very well.

Mr. MANN. But the amendments will be disposed of as they are offered?

The SPEAKER. At the end of the hour and a half the Chair will have the amendments voted on in the order in which they were offered, and the voting on the amendments will not be taken out of the hour and a half.

Mr. ASHBROOK. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there were a good many amendments to the bill that ought to be considered. A good many of us are interested in them, and it will be like it was the other day. I spent the whole afternoon on the floor trying to get an opportunity to offer an amendment and was shut out, very properly, by members of the committee having preference, and that is the situation in which we find ourselves this morning under the proposed agreement. The members of the committee, who have already taken a great deal of time, will control the remainder of the time, and it is to be parceled out among those who have already offered amendments and discussed them. I shall object unless there is a bona fide opportunity to consider those amendments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that I have not in mind at present any intention to occupy any part of the time myself, and I shall do everything I can to take care of gentlemen who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN. How much time will you give the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair put the question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why does not the gentleman let all the amendments be reported now, at first, and then let there be an hour and a half of debate?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I understand that some gentlemen have not their amendments prepared yet.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If they are not ready, that would not be a feasible proposition.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman from Arkansas objects?

Mr. MANN. No; he has not objected.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WINGO. I certainly have not objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right to object, and I want to do it to say one thing about the debate which I think ought to be said. If we are to have the practice of distributing time in debate in driblets so that no human being, no matter what his capacity is, can give any information to the House about the subject he discusses, I am very much opposed to the agreement. Yesterday we spent six hours distributing time in a way which made it impossible for anybody to discuss the question with thoroughness or fullness for the information of the House. It makes debate in no way creditable to the House; it is lowering the character of discussion and is a waste of public time. If there can be an arrangement by which the pro and con of a proposition can be discussed adequately instead of parceling time out in two or three minute periods so that a man can break into the RECORD without any possibility or chance of giving information to the House, all right; otherwise I think a protest ought to be made against the distribution of time to everybody when nobody actually can debate.

Mr. BARNHART. According to the gentleman's theory, Members who are rapid talkers would monopolize all the time.

Mr. SHERLEY. By no means; but it is impossible to deal with a question of any magnitude in a speech of two or three minutes. The debate is not for the purpose of exploiting Members or sending speeches to their constituents, but to inform the House upon matters of legislation. We had an instance of it yesterday. It was absurd for any man to discuss a great question like that in five minutes' time. What was the result? We had six hours of debate and nobody paid any attention to most of it. It did not cover either side of the question, and that is what happens in the House right along. I do not take up much of the time of the House, and have no desire to, but I do desire to see the time that is taken used intelligently in considering questions.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman think that it is rather a lack of management on the part of gentlemen who control the time?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably; and it was in order to call the attention of the House to the matter that I made this statement.

Mr. MANN. I was glad to get five minutes yesterday, and I was satisfied with it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the gentleman from Illinois is unusual; he can say more in five minutes than most Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Who is to control the time?

Mr. ASHBROOK. The acting chairman is to control one half and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] the other half. We had three hours and a half debate on this bill last week.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no particular desire in this instance to object, but I felt what I have said ought to be said touching debate in this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from N. & H. O'Donnell Cooperage Co., of Philadelphia, and a telegram from the North American Fruit Exchange, from Cleveland, Ohio, which I ask the Clerk to read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, January 12, 1915.

Congressman WILLIAM GORDON,
Congress Hall, Washington, D. C.:

House bill 4899—uniform standard mandatory barrel for all kinds of fruits and produce—is scheduled for vote in House Wednesday, 13th, and is of vital importance to relieve this industry from the chaotic condition caused by having various sizes and forms of barrels and by conflicting State laws hampering interstate traffic. We urge you to work hard to get this bill passed Wednesday.

NORTH AMERICAN FRUIT EXCHANGE.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 11, 1915.

Hon. WM. A. ASHBROOK,
Committee Coinage, Weights, and Measures, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wired you to-day, as follows: "The impression in committee seems to be that mandatory feature of standard barrel bill, No. 4899, is against interest of barrel manufacturers. We, as barrel manufacturers, want mandatory feature; better for us, knowing sizes of stock to secure; also better for customers."

We understand that your committee will take this matter up within a day or two, and we would like you to express our views, as barrel manufacturers. With fixed sizes, manufacturers are safe in securing stock, and customers understand exactly what they are to get, hence we feel that it is best for all concerned that the mandatory feature remain.

Thanking you in advance, we remain,
Yours, very truly,

N. & H. O'DONNELL COOPERAGE CO.,
A. J. TOLAND.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did I understand the Chair to rule that the amendments would be voted on as presented?

The SPEAKER. No; the understanding is that the amendments are to be voted on after we get through with the debate. Ordinarily in the House amendments are voted upon when offered.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reason I ask is that there are three amendments now pending.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The understanding was that the amendments should be voted upon at the conclusion of the debate in the order that they were presented.

The SPEAKER. That is the way the Chair understood it. Ordinarily in the House amendments are voted upon when offered, but this arrangement was made in order to get out of the hole that we seemed to be in. So the Chair will submit the amendments after the close of the one hour and a half debate.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Under the provisions of this bill as presented, does it include oranges?

Mr. ASHBROOK. No; it has nothing to do with crated fruit; it has only to do with the dimensions of the barrel.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I notice in the last paragraph a proviso that—

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing or shipping commodities sold exclusively by weight or numerical count.

Now, inasmuch as you exclude that class of shipments by weight and numerical count, I did not know but that it might be held to include oranges.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It does not.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman has anyone to yield to, will he yield some of his time now?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill, and I believe it is in the interest of a fair deal both for the producer and the consumer. To-day in the United States we have almost as many standards for the bushel and the barrel as there are States in the Union. The different States are legislating upon this subject, and the result is that unless the United States Government exercises its constitutional right and has the standard barrel fixed, we are going to have at least a dozen or more standards in the United States.

My friends from Michigan object to the standard barrel prescribed in this bill. In Michigan the standard bushel for apples is 48 pounds; in Wisconsin it is 50 pounds. The standard in Michigan for a bushel of onions is 54 pounds; in Wisconsin it is 57 pounds. In Michigan they give 22 pounds of dried apples for a bushel, while in Wisconsin it is 25. In Michigan cranberries are 40 pounds to the bushel, while in Wisconsin 35. Buckwheat in Michigan takes 48 pounds to the bushel, while in Wisconsin 50 pounds to the bushel. In Michigan the standard barrel is a little short of the standard barrel provided for in this bill.

Now the consumer is cheated in buying, for he pays for the smallest amount of pounds to the bushel, while as a rule the producer only gets pay for the bushel containing the largest number of pounds. So that the consumer and the producer both lose by not having a standard, and the only man who is benefited is the middleman or the commission merchant. Some question has been brought up here in regard to the standard cranberry barrel. Some have suggested that the standard cranberry barrel should be the same as the standard apple barrel. Practically only three States in the Union produce cranberries—Massachusetts, New Jersey, and Wisconsin. They produce 98 per cent of the cranberries. They have fixed a standard, and that standard is the standard prescribed by this bill. A standard cranberry barrel should hold 100 pounds—the amount provided in this bill. That has been demonstrated both by the cranberry producers and the dealers in cranberries all over the country to be a correct standard. A larger barrel is not a good thing, for the reason that the fruit is injured in shipping it in larger quantities in a barrel, and the tendency is to reduce the size of the barrel. Wisconsin has had to guard against that. When you buy cranberries in a standard Massachusetts, Wisconsin, or New Jersey cranberry barrel you know that you are getting 100 pounds, while if you buy cranberries for sale in the other States you do not know whether you are getting short weight or not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I understand, then, the gentleman is making an appeal here for an industry which he is especially discussing, to have it in effect exempted from the operation of the uniform standard which he is advocating for other industries.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am not doing that at all. In reply to the gentleman I will state that cranberries are a berry, and the largest package in which any berry is sold is a 100-pound cranberry barrel. You can not put them in a larger barrel and ship them profitably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I will ask to have a couple of more minutes, because my time has been taken up with answering questions.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it has been demonstrated by the cranberry producers and the dealers in cranberries that you can not ship or handle cranberries in a package larger than 100 pounds. If you use a larger barrel you injure the fruit. It can not be done, and never has been done, successfully. In the States that produce 98 per cent of the cranberries, cranberries have been shipped and offered for sale in barrels that contain precisely 100 pounds of berries, and that is the largest package that any kind of berries have ever been put up in.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the gentleman think, conceding the right of the cranberry trade to have a package suitable to its particular traffic, that they should at least be forced to abandon the use of the word "barrel"? Let them call it a 100-pound package or anything they please, but we certainly ought not to have a different meaning under different conditions for the same word. Does not the gentleman agree with that suggestion?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, these berries are put up in a barrel. Other products such as vegetables and fruits have half barrels and quarter barrels and three-quarter barrels. This is a barrel. The dimensions are good and the amount easy to ascertain in determining the price per pound, and it is not a particularly small barrel. It is a barrel that holds 100 pounds of cranberries, or about 20 per cent less than the standard apple barrel.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But we are trying to give a legal significance to the word "barrel" as we do to the word "pound."

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The term "barrel" is used by the cranberry trade here and the trade abroad. Quite a large number of cranberries are shipped abroad, and they are used to the term "barrel." They have been using it for 30 years, and I do not see any good reason for abandoning the use of it at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, did I understand the gentleman to say that for some time past 98 per cent of the cranberries have been handled in barrels uniformly containing 100 pounds?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, does not the gentleman think that the industry has been getting on a pretty uniform basis without any drastic, mandatory legislation?

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. It has; but there is danger. To-day the States are beginning to legislate upon this subject. Wisconsin started in to legislate upon it, and other States are; and where they do not raise cranberries they do not see why the standard cranberry barrel should differ from the standard apple or sugar barrel, just the same as the committee to-day is considering this bill; they see no reason why you could not put cranberries in a sugar barrel, but the trade has demonstrated that it can not be successfully done; that it would be injurious to the berry; that it would spoil in shipment. This barrel has been used as a standard for 30 years by the cranberry-producing States, and why not have it remain a uniform standard, one that practically all of the producers of cranberries, as well as those engaged in the trade, want?

In regard to the bushel, as I have said, in Michigan a bushel of cranberries contains 40 pounds, while in Wisconsin and other cranberry States it contains 35 pounds. It is the same with the apple barrel. The States that produce an article always want as small a standard as is possible. Michigan is a great apple State. It desires 48 pounds to the bushel, while Wisconsin and other States that do not produce as many apples, but consume many, want 50 pounds to the bushel. The result is that we have this conflict; and if the United States had exercised the jurisdiction which it ought to have exercised in the beginning we would have had one standard of weights and measures, and it would apply to the sale of all kinds of vegetables, berries, and fruits the same as the yardstick applies to measurements of different kinds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman yields to the gentleman from Georgia, would it be agreeable to him to have me ask him a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I notice in the bill that the barrels for everything else except cranberries have a fixed dimension provided for. There is a provision that any barrel of whatever form having a capacity of 7,056 cubic inches shall be a standard barrel, but when it comes to fixing the measurement for cranberry barrels there is no provision as to the cubic inches. It fixes an arbitrary standard; it has to be that and nothing else. There is some latitude left in the case of the other barrel. Why that distinction?

Mr. CRAMTON. I feel that is a question that had better be answered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE], the author of the bill.

Mr. TUTTLE. I will say to the gentleman that provision of the cranberry barrel is written as it is because it is for cranberries only. They are the only small fruit shipped in barrels, and it was demonstrated to the committee that this size barrel is required. Cranberries can not be shipped without injury or damage in barrels larger than this, and this standard is legalized in the three States which raise the cranberries of the country. These dimensions have been established by the usage and custom of some 30 years.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If you fix arbitrarily the number of cubic inches which shall be in the barrel, what difference would it make as to the shape of the barrel?

Mr. TUTTLE. I will say to the gentleman it is a very difficult matter to fix arbitrarily the cubic inches in a barrel. It is difficult to determine the cubical contents of a barrel, and that is modified by the provision that variations shall be made and tolerations established by rules and regulations of the Director of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to section 3 now?

Mr. TUTTLE. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it is not my custom to interfere with bills from other committees in this House, but with a strict regard for discipline to support them, although sometimes I think they are defective in merit, yielding my own judgment to the judgment of others; but when there is a constitutional question arising I am compelled under my oath to respect that. The only gentleman who mentioned the real question in the bill was the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], and he was dismissed in a rather cavalier manner with the information that he did not know what he was talking about. The truth is the gentleman understood the Constitution. If there was any defect in his position, it was his failure to classify correctly. Now, I may be making the mistake that he made; if so, I stand to be corrected, of course. Is this a container to transport goods in interstate commerce, and therefore a regulation of commerce, or is it a unit of weight or measure?

If it is a unit of weight or measure the learned arguments made by my distinguished friend from South Dakota and others were entirely unnecessary, for we all knew, and nobody disputes it, that Congress has the unrestricted power to establish units of coinage, weights, and measures, and they are good in any State, county, town, militia district, or anywhere else, without regard to interstate commerce; but if it is a regulation of commerce, then beyond all question it can not be made constitutional by calling it a unit of measurement. Nobody pretends it is a unit of measurement. It is not a unit of weight; nobody pretends it is. It is not a multiple of any unit of weight or measure. It is a vehicle of commerce which is measured by these standard units that are established. If this is true, the gentlemen ought to make their bill constitutional by inserting the qualification that it shall apply to interstate commerce only. If they do not, I will be compelled reluctantly to vote against the bill, because I can not vote for what I am convinced is unconstitutional. I do not believe they can make the Supreme Court or the people believe that this is a unit of measurement or weight. I believe the author of the bill and everybody else recognize that it is a container for commerce and is a regulation for the commerce of the country. The language of the bill shows such to be its character. If that is so, the bill is unconstitutional if it attempts to operate within the boundaries of a State, and therefore if the supporters of the bill want it to be good they had better insert the qualification and limit it to interstate commerce. I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to persuade myself that I ought to support this bill, and I want to do it if I consistently can; but I represent a very large apple-growing district, one that has taken the premium for apples in two of the largest expositions ever held in the United States. I am a little fearful of the penalty section of this bill, for fear it might get into trouble some innocent farmer who may not be advised of what the law is. Of course, we all understand that every man is presumed to know the law, and yet a great many do not know it, and especially farmers may not be acquainted with it. I understand that a man who is a producer of large quantities of apples and who ships them by the carload would probably know of this provision; but possibly the small farmer, who produces only a small quantity of apples, might violate this law by carrying his apples to town in a barrel that did not comply with the provisions of this proposed law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Can I get another minute?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have proposed an amendment to this bill by inserting the word "willful" before the word "violation," in line 19, page 2. This would be a protection to the farmer who might violate the law innocently by shipping apples in a barrel that does not comply with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will.

Mr. COOPER. As I understand, the bill is not going into effect for six months or a year. Does not the gentleman think that his small country farmer could become acquainted with the provisions of this bill within that time?

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, I have known very many intelligent men who did not know what the law was after it has been passed for several years, and I assume that the small country farmer might violate this law innocently without knowing of its provisions. It seems to me it would not hurt the bill to insert the word "willful" in the place mentioned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Will the gentleman from Missouri send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield three minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would ask the Clerk to report the amendment which I have proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has not the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I sent it to the desk sometime ago. I simply ask to insert the word "willful" before the word "violation," in line 19, page 2. It seems to me this would be some protection to innocent farmers who ship small quantities of apples into town and who might violate the strict provisions of this law. I do not believe it would hurt the purposes of the bill to have this amendment inserted. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss the amendment longer, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back the balance of his time.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question for information?

Mr. ASHBROOK. In just a moment. I would like to say just a word in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL]. The life of a barrel is very brief at best. This bill would not go into effect until July 1, 1916, if the amendment prevails which I have offered, and I have no doubt that it will. In the opinion of the committee, and I think the gentlemen here will share that opinion, if this bill becomes a law, no other barrel will be made except the standard barrel, and without doubt by the time this bill would go into effect there would be very few barrels in existence except the standard barrel. I have full sympathy with the small farmer, because I am one myself, and I do not want to impose any hardships upon him. I think the ground of the gentleman from Missouri is not well taken for that reason.

Mr. GOULDEN. May I ask the chairman of the committee if they have made any provision in the bill to have the word "Standard" printed or stamped on the barrel?

Mr. ASHBROOK. There is no provision for the word "Standard" being printed or stamped on the barrel. But a barrel will be a barrel. It will be just what this bill provides. It is not necessary to stamp it.

Mr. GOULDEN. If it were stamped "Standard," a farmer of the class that you and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] and I belong to would know it was a legal barrel. I have apples to ship, and I want to tell you frankly that I would not have time to go to the country and measure the barrels in order to see whether or not they were standard; therefore I want them marked "Standard" for the protection of my tenants and others.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the object of this bill is to protect him, so that if he orders a barrel of apples from Ohio or Missouri or wherever he may he will know what he is getting.

Mr. GOULDEN. But I am a seller as well as a buyer of apples.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If you sell a barrel of apples to me, then I will know what I am getting.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to have it stamped, so that all would know that they were not violating the law and that the consumers were getting a full measure of value for their money.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I would like to ask the gentleman upon what precise scientific basis the dimensions of the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities are established in this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that the cubical contents and the dimensions of the barrel as fixed in this bill were prepared by the Bureau of Standards, and it is the same size barrel as our flour barrel.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. For what reason, particularly—on what scientific basis—did they fix these dimensions?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is necessary to have some arbitrary lines drawn as to the size and the contents of the barrel.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Exactly. What relations do these dimensions bear to the lesser units of measure, if any?

Mr. ASHBROOK. And I will say, further, to the gentleman that it follows the recognized shape of a barrel.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And fixes the size.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The size, I say, is the size of a flour barrel.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is this size the size of a flour barrel?

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is the size of a flour barrel, which is the most generally used barrel.

Mr. MANN. How about the sugar barrel?

Mr. TUTTLE. The sugar barrel is 2 inches longer.

Mr. MANN. This would affect the sugar barrel?

Mr. TUTTLE. I think not. This one affects barrels of smaller size, and it does not affect any barrels the contents of which are sold by weight or measure, and sugar is sold by weight.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. This barrel bears no scientific relation to any other measure of contents?

Mr. TUTTLE. I think the nearest approach to any other measure is the 3-bushel measure. This, I will say to the gentleman, is the development of the trade through long years of usage and custom, and this barrel is now accepted by all branches of business where barrels are used. The coopers have testified before our committee that this is the size of over 95 per cent of the barrels which they make. It is the universal flour barrel. It is the barrel which is universally used in the shipment of apples, a business of over $125,000,000 a year. This bill is of great importance to those interests that use barrels in the packing of their fruits and vegetables and various other agricultural products.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The thing that struck me was that the barrel ought to have some relation to the lesser measures.

Mr. TUTTLE. It seems to have developed as all other measures have. The bushel has ceased, to a large extent, to be a measure of volume. The bushel is to-day defined in weight. The heaped bushel has led to a great deal of confusion, and no one can satisfactorily define it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It seems to me it would be an excellent thing if we could have a standard barrel and a standard bushel the whole country over, so that everybody doing business and making contracts could know exactly about what he was contracting.

Mr. TUTTLE. That is the object of this bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It strikes me it is just a little inconsistent, after all. We fix a standard barrel for certain commodities, and then we make another standard barrel for another separate commodity; and while I can see that there are reasons why you might have a different sort of barrel for cranberries, still, inasmuch as you are calling it a standard barrel, it seems to me that I would call the cranberry receptacle something else, because you can hardly have two standard barrels of different dimensions.

Mr. TUTTLE. I will say to the gentleman that the members of the committee felt as he did when they first approached the question. But they found it necessary to fix a cranberry barrel distinct from the other barrel provided in this bill, because of its difference in shape as well as capacity.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. You would have a sugar barrel, a flour barrel, and a cranberry barrel. You would have no standard barrel.

Mr. TUTTLE. This fixes a standard barrel. The sugar barrel is not used as a unit of measure. I want to say in this connection, in answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], that the object of this bill is to fix the unit of measure, and the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Commerce agree as to its contents and think it is a constitutional bill and applies to intrastate as well as to interstate trade. It does fix the standard of measure.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It seems to be one of standard measure.

Mr. TUTTLE. It fixes a standard measure.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I find myself quite a little in sympathy with the observations made by my friend from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON]. The good in this bill lies in the fact that it undertakes to fix a standard. The wickedness is that it is not a part of a general, thoroughly matured, well-thought-out, complete scheme of standard weights and measures, such as I think was in contemplation by the fathers when they wrote the Constitution, and such as we ought to establish. Our system of weights and measures is archaic. It is absurd. It is not comprehensible to many intelligent people.

Now, we ought to have the most scientific, the most exact, and the most perfect system of weights and measures that has been devised. Whether we can ever get it I do not know. I refer to the metric system, a mathematically scientific, exact system. I will say in passing that in my observation the metric system was put into operation in a country which we flatter ourselves is nothing like so advanced in general and scientific knowledge as we are It succeeded there a system of measures even more archaic than ours, a system which extended not merely to measures of volume, for liquids and solids, and lineal measurements, but which also went into the coinage of the country. I refer to Mexico. I do not remember the precise time fixed in the statute for the beginning of the full compulsory legal operation of the system, but I do know that those Indians, untrained, uneducated as they are, children of nature, so to speak, adopted a system without much difficulty at the end of the period fixed in the statute, and that to-day the metric system is in universal use in the Republic of Mexico and is a vastly more satisfactory scheme than that which had been in operation.

I shall support this bill, not because I am enamored of it, but because it does undertake to fix a standard. I hope that the committee, under the direction of our distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], will prepare and bring out a thorough and scientific system of measures. It is preposterous to have, as was just suggested by some one on that side of the House, different sorts of barrels. It is almost as absurd as having different sorts of pounds and ounces. It puts out different standards of measure, and the word "barrel" may mean in some instances a barrel of sugar, in others a barrel of apples, and in others a barrel of cranberries, in varying quantities. It is not right that the country should be afflicted with this ancient, illogical system, and we ought to have—and I conceive it to be the duty of this committee to provide for it—a scientific and exact system. And therefore when I support this bill to-day I do so with some little misgiving, not because it is wrong in itself but because it does not go far enough. [Applause.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. I live in a section of eastern North Carolina which is a large producer of different varieties of vegetables. We grow very largely Irish potatoes and sweet potatoes, which are shipped by the barrel. That applies also to a number of other kinds of vegetables; and the differences in standard sizes of barrels in the different States are causes of inconvenience. Under this condition growers adopt the maximum size of barrel prevailing in the several States to which shipments are made, the result being that where shipments are made to States having a standard barrel of less size the shipper suffers that loss, which to a large trucker amounts in the course of a season to quite a large sum. This bill is in the interest of growers and in the interest of buyers, because it establishes uniformity and prevents loss, and permits equity in behalf of both classes.

There is only one clause in the bill to which I invite the attention of the committee and to which there may be no valid objection, and that is the clause prescribing that the thickness of the staves shall not be greater than four-tenths of an inch. If that is the maximum which is necessary for all classes of woods, then there could be no objection to it; and if the committee has examined into that question so as to be assured that the maximum is sufficient to meet all classes and different varieties of woods, then it is a wise provision. Otherwise it might produce inconvenience.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But it does not affect the interior.

Mr. SMALL. No. The thickness of the stave does not affect the cubical contents. But there are some woods that can not be worked so well and would therefore require a greater thickness of staves than other woods. I simply call the attention of the committee to that clause.

Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no criticism, in my opinion, to be based upon the constitutionality of the bill. Congress, under the provision of the Constitution for regulating coinage, weights, and measures, has the right to fix a standard barrel in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 16 minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. SMALL. And therefore this bill, on its face, is applicable to intrastate commerce and is entirely within the power of Congress.

There is just one more suggestion which I would like to make. I understand that the standard size of barrels fixed in this bill conforms exactly to the present standard in use in flour barrels, so that the farmers may use the empty flour barrel or compare that as standard of measure; and that fact in itself would allay any feeling of uneasiness that might be prompted by the adoption of the standard provided in this bill. I think it is altogether meritorious and in the interest of both the producer and the consumer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, public services are never so much appreciated as are the accomplishments of men and the things we do for each other in private life. And not infrequently we encounter those who in their never-ending zeal for the general welfare have little time to devote to exploiting themselves to their contemporaries, as a consequence of which much of their accomplishments are often overlooked.

Aside from the few gentlemen whose special committee assignments in the Congress impose upon them the duty of making a detailed study of the affairs of the Capital, few of us realize the peculiarly difficult task the administrative officers of the District of Columbia encounter in the performance of their public duties.

Subject to the scrutiny and the control of a council composed of strangers in many instances and in all cases of gentlemen from distant parts of the Nation, their start is not auspicious. With a constituency without a vote, and they without means of appeal themselves, their position is not one to inspire envy.

I have heard so many harsh and thoughtless criticisms of the District, its people, and its officials, that I have felt tempted many times to break my rule to refrain from speech making in Congress and relate a few of the facts within my personal knowledge in order to promote the spirit of fair play and mete out a small measure of justice to those whose public service has endeared them to all who appreciate efficiency and courage in public officers.

Recent discussions have tended to do much injustice to the District and its people; and as they, because of the nature of our Government, are virtually deprived of a voice in the forum for defense or a more effective weapon with which to protect themselves in the war that is so often waged on them by those armed with the powers of a great Government and the privilege of congressional debate, I feel it a duty and a pleasure to-day to say a few words regarding the administration of the District's affairs during that portion of the last five years in which I believe the most splendid strides in District government improvement during the last quarter of a century were made.

I refer to the administration under Commissioners Cuno H. Rudolph, Gen. John A. Johnston, and Col. W. V. Judson, all capable and distinguished public servants.

As the systematic division of their duties brought the departments of Gen. Johnston and Col. Judson more particularly under my observation, and as the administration of their departments covering public works and public safety is more than ordinarily interesting to the people in general, I shall confine myself to a review of their service.

I have personal knowledge of the fact that Gen. Johnston was virtually drafted into the position of Commissioner of the District of Columbia by the President of the United States through appeals to his good citizenship, while Col. Judson, as an Army officer, was ordered by the President to perform the duties of commissioner. Neither of these men sought the office. It was indeed a matter of personal regret to both of them that duty called them into their respective positions as Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

It was a difficult time for anyone to serve the District. Many Members of Congress were hostile to the District, thinking that its lawful financial relations with the United States were unfair to the latter. This brought the citizens of the District into conflict with Congress in many directions, and the commissioners, who were, among other things, intermediaries between Congress and the people of the District, stood in the line of fire.

Notwithstanding that the times did not seem propitious, they sought to accomplish many things and they put their whole hearts and souls into their work. Both Gen. Johnston and Col. Judson were graduates of West Point, where they had been taught the duty of service and of sacrifice. They did not flinch when they found themselves like many other honorable and efficient public officials the object of unjust attack. But in their code they found this no excuse for sulking, and they went on doing their duty. They did an extraordinary number of good things. The people of the District of Columbia are greatly their debtors, which most good citizens cheerfully acknowledge.

Congress, charged with the duty of exclusive legislation within the District, is also their debtor, inasmuch as they advised Congress wisely, though sometimes futilely, in District matters, and always faithfully and efficiently executed the will of Congress as set forth in its laws. In fact, the cause of municipal government all over the country is their debtor for what they did to make Washington a model city, whose methods and practices could be followed and have been followed to advantage by other cities.

Congress, because of its absorption in other matters, is usually slow to give the District its fair measure of general legislation along the lines that are being followed by the States.

We have no civil-service law for the District of Columbia. This makes trouble for the commissioners, who try to confine themselves to civil-service practices, for many influential gentlemen have friends or constituents here whom they frequently like to put in District offices.

We have no proper control over certain lines of big business carried on within the District as headquarters, such as the insurance business. This tends to make the District a haven of rest and a base of operations for promoters who impose upon your constituents and mine.

These commissioners of whom I am speaking, showing great courage and high moral sense, struck heavy and effective blows at such practices, and so have saved millions of dollars to investors and prospective investors all over the country. As a consequence of their own fidelity to duty in protecting the public interests, they had to pay out of their own pockets to defend themselves from suits, the very filing of which was but an additional false pretense to assist in wrongful stock-selling campaigns.

They procured the enactment for the District of a public utilities law, by the operation of which, in due time, the gas company, the electric lighting company, and the traction companies will bear fair relation to District consumers, both as to cost and character of service.

When they found that before they assumed office there had been an extension of street lighting into unoccupied territory, performing only the functions of advancing the value of lands to real estate speculators and increasing the profits of the lighting companies, they turned off lights that had uselessly cost the District and the United States many thousands of dollars annually. They compelled a refund of many thousands of dollars from one of the lighting companies because the lights it had been furnishing were of less than the legal standard of illumination. And they procured the enactment of a law by virtue of which about $50,000 per annum was saved to the District and the United States through a fair reduction in the cost of street lighting. With a part of the saving thus effected they vastly improved the street lighting of the city and made Washington more safe and more beautiful at night.

They reformed the street-cleaning department. They found it under inexpert supervision, doing its work with lack of efficiency. They left it under most competent supervision, doing the work with District plant and labor, with vastly increased thoroughness and efficiency, over a greatly extended area of streets, at a considerably reduced unit cost.

They improved the discipline and efficiency of the police department, and inaugurated therein motor patrol transportation with economy and increased police efficiency and emergency service.

They found dark, illy ventilated, antequated, and insanitary cells amounting to dungeons in police precincts, jails, and inaugurated and, but for lack of appropriations always strongly urged, would have completed, the installation of modern, sanitary cage cells with light, ventilation, and cleanliness.

Their revision of traffic regulations and inauguration of rules for vehicular lighting, based upon a study of the best to be found throughout the world, was constructive work of great importance in the interest of public safety.

They inaugurated the motorizing of the fire department, with resultant increased efficiency of service, and insured large annual savings by the establishment of an enlarged and equipped departmental repair shop.

They constantly urged the increasing importance of the department of weights, measures, and markets, and greatly increased its efficient helpfulness to the consumer. They prosecuted a successful campaign for the display of the actual quantity or weight of goods on all sorts of containers, and vigorously prosecuted dishonest dealers. They secured appropriations for the complete repair and modern equipment for the public markets, for the present more than self-sustaining shelters for the farmers' produce market.

They took over the management of the municipal fish wharf upon the expiration of the lease thereof to private parties, according to the custom of many years, at an annual rental in later years of about fourteen hundred dollars, cleaned and cleared the site with the coordinate efforts of the departments of street cleaning, fire, police, and public health, on an estimated yearly earning to the District of $10,000, which has proved conservative. They planned and estimated for a wholesale market on this site for sea food and farm produce that should develop a wide territory of supplies for the District, with cheap water transportation and probable diminished cost of products to the consumer, especially to the thickly settled South Washington population, of moderate means.

They never ceased to urge the importance of the conservation of the public health, and in this respect, as in every other practical respect, coordinated the efforts of all departments of the District government.

They entered the public service finding lack of harmonious departmental coordination, and having first harmonized themselves as to matters of coordinate policy in the public interest brought about a departmental spirit of mutual, coordinate helpfulness that is exemplary in the highest degree.

They found a pressing need for metering the water consumption, which latter was far greater per capita than in other cities, in order to make more remote the day when many millions would be required for an additional water supply. They did not ask Congress for large appropriations to purchase meters, but raised the water rate and cheerfully bore the resulting storm, which was not tempered by the fact that the rate when raised remained lower than elsewhere and covered less than cost. These commissioners were the first to make a move to increase local taxation, for such, in effect, was the raise of the water rate.

They urged Congress to acquire the lands needed for the great Burnham park plan while these lands were still cheap and unoccupied, and at their suggestion Congress provided a general law for a proper assessment of benefits when lands for parks are taken; and they succeeded in getting started one of the three major local park projects and authorizations for Rock Creek Park and Potomac Park. They procured the plan and authorization for the Anacostia Flats improvement and insured the elimination of the insanitary Anacostia Flats, and the creation in place of them of a beautiful park of land and water embracing many hundreds of acres.

Among the greatest District needs is suitable provision for its defectives—mental, moral, and physical.

These commissioners, in season and out of season, urged a start upon a proper municipal hospital building for the housing of the indigent sick, many of whom are now not cared for but neglected, being put off in unsuitable shacks, and the basements thereof upon the banks of the still insanitary Anacostia marshes. This outrage upon humanity they did not succeed in abating while they were in office, but their efforts will bear fruit in the future.

With reference to another class of defectives, the efforts of these commissioners bore fruit more promptly. Upon a spacious site at Occoquan they established a model institution for the District workhouse prisoners who had formerly been herded up without occupation in dark cells beside the shacks which housed the indigent sick upon the insanitary Anacostia marshes. These prisoners are now raising upon the land of the institution a great portion of the wholesome food they eat, and manufacturing various articles, including brick, for use in the public works and other institutions of the District of Columbia. The institution is approaching, as intended, a self-supporting basis, and instead of turning men out soft and of lessened physical and moral stamina as did the old institution, the present one is releasing men who have been improved by incarceration. One can not measure moral changes, but careful records show gains in physical condition. The average weight of inmates, for example, is increased by several pounds, and such a result is without precedent at similar institutions. The institution at Occoquan is a model now being followed by other communities. And it cost less than any similar institution in the country.

During the administration of these gentlemen the condition of the asphalt street paving was vastly improved.

Higher standards were adopted for school buildings, and the fire risk in old buildings was materially reduced by partial reconstruction. A new Central High School was authorized on their recommendation and they had the plans prepared by Mr. Ittner, of St. Louis, the greatest schoolhouse architect in this country, and purchased for far less than the appropriation.

Improved building regulations were adopted, and a new law was recommended and enacted to govern building operations. This law and these regulations materially reduced fire risk and increased the safety of citizens.

While others were merely talking of the evil condition of Washington alleys, they continued by the enforcement of laws already on the statute books to effect a constant reduction in the number of alley dwellings and improvement in those that remained. At one blow, in condemning Willow Tree Alley, the worst of the slums in Washington, they eliminated 12 per cent of all the alley dwellings and a far larger percentage of all the alley evils.

No branch of the municipal service failed to receive their careful and intelligent attention, nor was there failure anywhere to raise standards of economy and efficiency. When they left office they had indeed created a model municipal government, in so far as they had the power, and they had pointed out and strenuously advocated what was necessary to complete the task.

They presented to Congress the desirability of developing the great water power wasted at Great Falls, to the end that the city lighting and power might be most economically produced, and as a result of their efforts plans for such a development are now before us.

They studied the disposal of city wastes and advocated proper plant and methods, the adoption of which will reduce cost and increase efficiency.

They proved that a municipal asphalt plant would be economical and lead to increase of efficiency.

They studied and made a most complete and admirable report to the Senate District Committee upon the local traction situation.

Their studies and their recommendations will continue to bear fruit in the future, as they have already borne fruit in the past.

And all of this time they had their eyes on the debt of the District of Columbia, showing a firm determination that that debt should be extinguished. This debt may properly be computed by adding together the floating debt owed by the District to the United States and one-half of the bonded debt which latter is owed half by the District and half by the United States. On June 30, 1910, this debt was $8,020,328.98. The debt thus computed is now reduced to but little more than $3,000,000. No little credit for this debt reduction is due these commissioners of whose splendid service to the people of Washington and to the Nation in the care and improvement of its Capital it has been a pleasure to speak to-day.

But when one studies the antecedents and the accomplishments of these men before they answered the President's call, there is little surprise that they stamped their individuality upon their work and left behind them a record of which all can well be proud.

Col. Judson has so frequently been the center of controversy and the subject of deserved compliment that I shall not dwell in detail upon him now.

As for Gen. Johnston, the countless thousands who have known him in civil, in military, in private, and in public life epitomize their one opinion in the expression—a true soldier, a painstaking, industrious, and capable public officer, a stanch friend, and the uncompromising foe of hypocrisy and dishonesty.

But what else could he be, when we recall the atmosphere in which he has spent his years of manhood?

Gen. Johnston graduated at West Point in the class of 1879, and was assigned to the Cavalry arm, in which he served in the West from Texas to the Dakotas, attaining the grade of captain of Cavalry in 1895, major and assistant adjutant general in 1898, lieutenant colonel in 1901, and brigadier general in 1903. His promotions were unsolicited.

He is the first honor graduate of the postgraduate schools at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and thereafter served in the departments of engineering, art of war, and tactics of the different arms, 1883 to 1885.

He was instructor in the departments of law and history and of tactics at West Point, 1887 to 1891.

He had charge of the organization and supervision of mounted instruction at the general mounted recruiting depot at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., 1893–94.

He was detached to organize the inaugural parades of Presidents Cleveland, 1893; McKinley, 1897 and 1901; Roosevelt, 1905; and Taft, in 1909; and that attending the dedication of Gen. Grant's tomb in New York in 1897, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis in 1903, and others.

He had charge of the organization and muster in and out of all Volunteer forces in the War with Spain, 1898, and for Philippine service, 1898 to 1901, and reorganized and supervised the general recruiting service of the Army, as at present, incident to the Army increase from 25,000 to 100,000 men.

He attended and made the report upon the Kaiser maneuvers of the German Army on the Polish frontier in 1902.

He resigned from the Army as a general officer after nearly 28 years' continuous service.

The following statement appears on his efficiency record:

Gen. Johnston, as Assistant Adjutant General, was in charge of the enlisted division from the beginning of the Spanish-American War to the date of the acceptance of his resignation, and was more than any other officer of the War Department identified with the recruitment of both the Regular Army and of the Volunteers, State and United States. It was on his recommendation that the rules and regulations for muster in and muster out of troops were made, all in all the most intelligent and comprehensive ever devised. It was on his special recommendation that Secretary Root urged upon Congress a national reserve force, and which, in my judgment, should be urged upon the Congress until it is enacted into law.

Gen. Johnston is a master of the details of organization, and in the event of war within the limit of his days for active service I recommend that he be called back with the high rank that his valuable services during the Spanish-American War and his great ability so justly warrant.

H. C. CORBIN,
Major General, Adjutant General, United States Army.

May this beautiful Capital City of my beloved country enjoy the fortune in future years to be guided by men whose vision and whose zeal will reflect as much credit upon our public life as those of whom I have spoken.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am in perfect sympathy with the object of this legislation—to fix a standard unit of measure. I am not in sympathy with the proposition to fix a standard container for commerce. But if you do undertake to fix a standard container for commerce, which I do not think you can do except for interstate commerce, you ought to limit it to interstate commerce.

There is a distinction between exercising the constitutional authority and power to fix a unit of measure and fixing the size and the material of a container for commerce. If Congress has the power to say what shall be the thickness of the stave in a barrel—if that be granted to Congress under the authority to fix a unit of measure—then it will be just as reasonable to contend that we could say what should be the character of the wood out of which the staves are to be made. If we have the constitutional authority to fix the thickness of the stave, we have the constitutional authority to fix the width of the stave, and to require only an extra-wide stave, which could not be manufactured out of the small timber in certain parts of the country.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is true.

Mr. WINGO. If we have the constitutional authority to fix the thickness of the stave and the width of the stave and the kind of wood from which it may be manufactured, we have the constitutional authority to fix the size of the bunghole.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And the hoops.

Mr. WINGO. Will any man contend Congress has the authority to fix the size of the bunghole of a barrel? The bunghole is just as important in some cases as the thickness and quality of the stave.

By pursuing such a line of illustrations you can see the distinction that there is between fixing a standard of measure and prescribing a standard container for commerce. I am perfectly willing to fix a unit of measure. I think that is very proper.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman cites the possibility of Congress fixing the size of the bunghole, or doing some other foolish thing, as a reason why this power does not exist. Congress has the power to-day to declare war against every nation in the world. It would be a foolish thing to do, but the fact that it might be exercised in a foolish way is not proof that the power does not exist.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman did not catch the force of my argument. I was making the contention that if the constitutional authority to fix a unit of measure authorizes Congress to fix the thickness of the stave it could fix the quality of the wood, and even go so far as to fix the size of the bunghole. I used that as an illustration to try to make clear the distinction between a unit of measure and a standard container. There is a distinction, and that distinction is very readily shown in the difference between a barrel as a unit of measure and a barrel as a container. For instance, corn is sometimes sold by the barrel. That does not mean that it goes into an actual container, but the barrel is considered as a standard of measure. There is a clear distinction.

Mr. MANN. This bill endeavors to fix the size of a barrel. How else could you fix the size of a barrel so that the eye could take it in, without fixing the circumference and the thickness of the staves?

Mr. WINGO. I think you could fix it just as you actually now fix the barrel as a unit of measure. I think the only proper way to fix a unit of measure, if it is dry measure, is to say that it shall contain so many cubic inches.

Mr. MANN. You might do it in that way, but you have got to fix something that the eye can take in. Now, the eye can not measure the inside of a barrel that is filled; so that practically, if you want to fix the size of a barrel, you must fix it by the outside. But if you let the staves vary from four-tenths of an inch to 4 inches in thickness, that would not fix the size of the barrel, as far as being a container was concerned.

Mr. WINGO. I think it would. I think it would be fixing the size of the container.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WINGO. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's argument. He has given this matter a good deal of thought, and I want to ask him whether in his judgment it might not be possible to define what should be a standard barrel by cubic contents, and, in addition, to say, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested, that the barrel shall have staves of a certain length and a head of a certain diameter, and so forth.

Mr. WINGO. The committee itself, in reporting an exception, has shown the difficulty. The only safe thing you can do without having an exception is to fix the unit of measure at so many cubic inches of contents, not describing and fixing a unit container, but measuring the container by a unit of measure. That is the constitutional authority that we have. You meet with a difficulty when you come to cranberries. Now, have you provided for grape barrels? Everybody knows that grapes of a certain kind, from certain districts and for certain markets, are shipped in barrels.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Here comes along a dealer who can not compute the cubic contents, but he knows that a barrel of a certain size is a standard barrel. He can measure the length of the staves and the diameter of the head, and so on, and in that way he can know whether the barrel is a standard barrel.

Mr. WINGO. The man who has the mathematical knowledge to measure the length of the staves and the bulge of the barrel has the mathematical knowledge necessary to figure out the cubic contents, has he not?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I doubt it.

Mr. WINGO. There might be such a man; but take the average man, if he has mathematical knowledge enough to measure accurately the length of the staves and the thickness of the staves when they are in the barrel, with the edges beveled, and can measure the bulge of the barrel, he certainly has enough mathematical knowledge to figure the cubical contents. But before I have used all my time I want the amendments reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out sections 2 and 3, and strike out all of the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That a standard barrel, dry measure, for the purpose of interstate commerce, shall be deemed to be a container with the capacity of 7,056 cubic inches."

Strike out the words "any other commodities" wherever such words occur in the bill.

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "sell, offer, or expose for sale in any State, Territory, or District of Columbia, or to."

Mr. TUTTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. TUTTLE. I was going to remind the gentleman that it is contemplated that other thicknesses of staves may be used in the barrel. When the Sulzer bill was considered fixing the standard barrel for apples it developed that there were different styles of barrels.

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield further. Before I forget it, I want to explain the different amendments. The principal one is to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute these words, "standard barrel, dry measure, for the purpose of interstate commerce, shall be deemed to be a container of 7,056 cubic inches."

This amendment does not fix the size, shape, bulge of the container, but the cubical contents. The other amendment which I think ought to go in——

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. How would the average farmer know that a barrel of peculiar shape did not contain a certain number of inches?

Mr. WINGO. He would not; and my purpose is to strike out all of the bill and just fix the standard unit of measure for a barrel that could be used. If the argument made a moment ago is true—that 95 per cent of the barrels manufactured are of the thickness of staves provided for in this bill—I can not understand the letter of the stave factory which was read this morning. If it is already a standard barrel to practically the extent of 95 per cent of the trade, why are the stave factories in a certain part of the country that manufacture staves of a certain type out of native wood asking for the bill?

Mr. TUTTLE. Because there are States that provide for barrels of less capacity.

Mr. WINGO. The capacity has nothing to do with the thickness of the stave.

Mr. TUTTLE. It has to do with the length.

Mr. WINGO. You can always govern that by the cubic contents, and then you could use a square box or any shaped container the producer desires. There are not a dozen men on the floor that can accurately compute the thickness of the barrel stave with a bevel edge end. If they think so, let them try it.

Now, the other amendment is to strike out that part in section 2, lines 11 and 12, which would make it unlawful to expose for sale goods in a barrel of a different kind. The bill makes it unlawful to ship from one State to another barrels other than the standard barrel. In other words, it is to limit it to interstate commerce.

I was interested in the speech made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], who called attention to the different standards by weight of the different States. There is a reason for that. There is a reason for the difference between a barrel of cabbage and a barrel of potatoes. There is a difference between a barrel of potatoes and a barrel of radishes. Radishes are shipped by the barrel in some markets exclusively, and in others they are shipped by crate, and in other markets they are shipped partly by crate and partly by barrel.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I made such a statement as the gentleman refers to. I referred to the different standards of the same commodities in different States.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman misunderstood me. I said there was a reason for the differences to which he called attention.

Mr. DILLON. Why should onions be sold at the rate of 47 pounds per bushel in Indiana and 57 pounds in Illinois?

Mr. WINGO. If they are practically the same kind of onions, they ought not to be. But there is a difference in weight of a bushel of potatoes grown on the mountain and a bushel grown in the valley.

Mr. DILLON. My remarks were entirely on the same commodities in the different States.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman referred to the fact that radishes and cabbage were shipped by freight in barrels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Can I have three minutes more?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WINGO. The danger is in this, that you have different grades, different customs, different markets. You have different weights in some commodities than in others. Potatoes grown in one soil and under one climate are different in weight from those grown in another soil and in another climate. That is the reason why these customs have grown up. The committee has found the danger in fixing an arbitrary container when it makes the exception in favor of the cranberry. Did you make any exception in favor of the grape barrel? You can not ship grapes in the barrel provided here, or at least there is one grape that must be shipped in a small barrel.

Mr. TUTTLE. Grapes are sold by weight—sometimes in barrels and sometimes in crates.

Mr. WINGO. We have a difference of shipment in radishes. It differs in different towns in the same counties and in the same States.

It is interesting to go into the markets of Kansas City and see the different shipments coming in from the same State over different railroads. For instance, here comes a man from Michigan who is a grower of fruit or a grower of vegetables. He opens up a truck farm in the Southwest and he adopts one plan, but here comes another man from New Jersey and he settles in the county, but in another community, and he is the leading grower, and there his ideas of shipment control, and that is the reason we have mixed shipments. It seems to me that you ought to fix a unit of measure and not a unit of container.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the proviso on page 3, line 16, meets his contention:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing or shipping commodies sold exclusively by weight or numerical count.

Mr. WINGO. That does not meet it. When you ship radishes by the barrel and grapes by the barrel, it does not meet it.

Mr. COOPER. It does if you sell them by the weight.

Mr. WINGO. That is true; it does when you sell them by weight, but not by barrel. But you have your exceptions and you have your exceptions named in the bill—one for cranberries, one for weight, and one for numerical count. You will find that there should be other exceptions, and there is the error in standardizing the container instead of fixing a standard unit of measure. Of course, I do not blame the stave men in a certain territory for wanting their staves given preference by making them the standard stave, but you ought not to let the unit of measure be controlled by the convenience of the stave makers; you ought not to punish the farmer who wants to bring his product to town in a barrel not made of the prescribed thickness of stave, to a market that is not yet fully developed, by men who do not appreciate the particulars of standardization of their products, and you ought not to penalize them. You ought to fix a general unit of measure to start with, and then later on, if you want to fix a standard for potatoes, do so, or if you want to fix a standard for apples, do so, or a standard for cranberries, but do not with one sweeping drastic provision cover every commodity—fruits, vegetables, or any other dry commodity—as you do by this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SLAYDEN). The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I hope gentlemen will not be misled by statements regarding containers. We are not dealing with containers in interstate commerce. This bill does not purport to do anything regulating interstate commerce. The basis of this bill does not rest to any extent upon the right to regulate commerce. It rests upon this expressed declaration of the Constitution of the United States that Congress shall have the power to fix standards of weights and measures.

Mr. Speaker, what is a barrel? A barrel is defined by the dictionary as a measure of quantity, and the Constitution gives Congress the power to fix a measure, to fix all measures, if it so desires. So all of this talk about the length of staves and the thickness of staves and, as the last gentleman suggested, the size of the bunghole is absolutely immaterial and irrelevant to this discussion. We know that that is but an effort to approximate as nearly as possible that which we recognize in form as a barrel, and that we must do. If we desire to regulate a standard, we must do it; and I call the attention of the gentlemen to the fact that this bill very wisely does not say that a man shall be penalized and fined because the length of staves is not that prescribed, or the width or thickness is not that prescribed. He is only penalized when he sells a barrel having less cubic contents than that prescribed herein. So that variations in these will not make any difference. But everybody desiring to sell by barrel will conform to the barrel, and this in the interest of common honesty between man and man in the United States, between dealers all over the United States. When we buy a barrel of anything, when this bill is passed, men will know what a barrel means. There may be 48 different varieties and sizes of barrels under existing conditions. But if I order from South Carolina a barrel of sweet potatoes, I will know what will be the size of that barrel, and if I order a barrel of apples from Michigan, I will know what will be the size of that barrel. It is only common honesty and justice that is asked by the passage of this bill. Our forefathers, when they were discussing this proposition and giving this power to Congress, recognized the difficulties that had existed in the Colonies because of the great variation; recognized, as was then stated on the floor of the Constitutional Convention, the fact that some of these Colonies had tried to defraud the people by making less and less, as time went by, the measures and weights of the commodities that they sold. So they thought it wise to give this power to Congress, so that it might prevent frauds, and so that it would not be an encouragement to men to deal dishonestly. And that is what this bill now means—only to make it so that when a purchase is made anywhere of a barrel of these kinds of commodities, men will know what they are getting, and it will not be possible for anyone who desires to do so to defraud a purchaser.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three objections that have been urged to this measure, that I wish to take up in their order. Of course we ought not to pass any measure, even in the exercise of our constitutional functions, that would operate as a hardship upon any established industry, if those hardships may be reasonably excluded in the preparation of the bill. So far as this measure is concerned, I do not think that even in its present form, the hardships that have been suggested exist. This I shall endeavor to demonstrate in the course of what I shall have to say. I happen to have in my district a large stave-making industry, as well as a number of large commercial apple orchards. Hence I would be peculiarly affected by anything in the way of hardship, or handicap, that would affect those industries. First in respect to the stave-making industry. The figures in the bill relating to the size of the barrel—and I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that these figures are merely suggestive—to the thickness of the stave, to the circumference and the height, may, or may not be adopted by the stave makers. The size and dimensions of the barrel are not imperatively fixed by these figures. The only thing that is absolutely provided is that any barrel squat, or high, large, or small, that contains the prescribed number of cubic inches shall be a standard barrel. All that is contained in the bill relative to the thickness of the stave, the height, and circumference of the barrel is, as I have said, merely suggestive, but the suggestion is a very wholesome one, and should be followed. With respect to the suggested inconvenience to the stave-making industry, I wish to say that the machinery which it uses will enable them with but the slightest adjustment, and without inconvenience, to make staves that will conform to the provisions of this bill. The suggestion with respect to the size of the barrel is a wise one. Barrels of a uniform size will be much more readily handled and packed for shipment, whether by the orchardist on his wagon frames, or the common carrier, than barrels of varying sizes. Hence having reference to transportation on its practical side of facility and economy to all parties concerned, there is every reason why a standard barrel should be established, and why we should get away from the inconveniences that attach to the use of barrels and boxes of varying sizes. Standardization in this respect will be a distinct advantage to everyone connected with the movement of products that are sold by the barrel. There are one or two other things to which I wish to call attention.

The suggestion has been made that a retailer in a city who kept his apples in an apple barrel that was not of the standard size, and sold therefrom to his customers, one, two, or a dozen apples as the case might be, would come in conflict with this law. That suggestion is not well taken. A man selling under circumstances of that sort, would not in anywise be affected by the provisions of this legislation, which relate to a sale by the barrel, and not to a sale of apples from the barrel. Again it was suggested by another gentleman, I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], that this bill is unconstitutional because it undertakes to affect intrastate commerce. That suggestion has been discussed so fully on the floor, that I will not do more than to suggest that we are not proceeding under the commerce clause of the Constitution, but under an entirely different clause. The attention of the gentleman from Georgia is called to the fact that we are proceeding under the clause relating to standards. Legislation under that head, is not a regulation of commerce though it has a necessary relation to commerce, and it may, and properly does, operate as to dealings within the States. Still it does not impinge upon any of the rights of the States for in this respect the States have conceded the paramount authority to the Federal Government. However in the exercise of our constitutional power in relation to this particular subject matter, we do not propose to do anything in the way of inconvenience to industries operating within the States. As I have said, I have a number of apple growers in my county, and I know that it will be to their interest, to have this measure enacted. There are also many stave makers in my district. I can not say that the passage of this bill will advance their interests, but I know that it will not be to their prejudice. This measure will serve a useful purpose and ought to receive the full support of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Michigan to use the balance of his time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, not alone because it is of advantage to the stave maker and the cooper, or even to the retail dealer, but more because of the great protection it will give to the housewife and consumers in general do I favor this bill. There are one or two provisions which, I think, need some consideration, and that is the reason why I take the floor. I gleaned from the explanation of this bill of a week ago that any barrel of the same form having a thicker stave, though it had a cubical content of 7,056 inches, would be permitted under this bill, and yet I find here in line 1, page 2, a provision authorizing one when of a different form. So, if it had the similarity of form, this provision would not permit of a different thickness of stave, so I would suggest to the author of the bill a substitution of the word "measurements" for "form," so as to permit of a barrel of the same outward form as a standard barrel with a thicker stave, though it may have the same content. Next, I want to direct attention to a matter that has not been considered as much as it should be, and that is the last proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing and shipping commodities sold exclusively by weight or numerical count.

Why should you limit it in the case of commodities sold exclusively? Why should not you make the provisions of this act apply when the commodities are shipped or sold by weight and numerical count. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 1, to strike out the first "a" and the word "form" and insert "measurement"; and also an amendment, on page 3, in the last proviso to section 3, to strike out the word "exclusively" and after the word "commodities" insert "when," so that with the first amendment it will read: "Provided, That any barrel of different measurements having a capacity of 7,056 cubic inches to be a standard barrel"; and with the second amendment the last proviso will read: "Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall apply to barrels used in packing or shipping commodities when sold by weight or numerical count." That will remove some of the objections that have been raised against this bill. I ask to have the amendments reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "a," after the word "of," and insert "any." And strike out the word "form" and insert the word "measurement."

Page 3, line 18, after the word "commodities," insert the word "when," and after the word "sold," in the same line, strike out the word "exclusively."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the Clerk made a little mistake in the first amendment. I did not substitute "any" for "a." I understood him to report "any different measurement." The words I wish to have are "barrel of different measurement."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS). Fifteen minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The bill pending, if it were to be in constitutional form, would necessarily have to be confined either to interstate commerce or be in such form as to be only the exercise of our power to fix a standard of measure. This bill meets neither of these requirements. It is so framed as to apply to intrastate commerce as well as to interstate commerce, and it not only attempts to fix certain standards of measurement, but goes further and attempts to regulate commerce otherwise than would be involved in simply a matter of defining a standard. That the purpose of the bill is not primarily to fix a standard, but that it is to regulate commerce, appears from a consideration of its provisions. It is said that what we primarily want to do is to so define a barrel that when a man makes a contract and says "barrel" it will be understood just what he means, no matter what State he may be in. And still there is no provision in the bill for the branding of that barrel in order to indicate that it is a standard barrel, and the amendment that I have pending, providing for the branding of the standard barrel and providing that when a contract is drawn specifying "barrel" it shall be held to be the standard barrel, the committee declines to accept. The purpose of it is not only to fix the standard of measurement, to find out how large the barrel shall be, but it is, rather, to define what shape of barrel shall go through commerce, both interstate and intrastate, and the kind of shape it shall be for the convenience of shippers and jobbers. Now, however desirable that may be, it is an absolute certainty that we can not here regulate those things as to intrastate commerce.

Now, I have been interested in hearing the arguments on this proposition from its advocates. A good deal of attention has been given to it by the gentlemen representing the cranberry districts, and they come here, in the first place, and tell us that the cranberry interests already have a standardized barrel used by 98 per cent of the industry, and still they absolutely must have a mandatory Federal law in order to secure the standard which they already have to the extent of 98 per cent. And then these same gentlemen who are urging that we must have a standard cranberry barrel of one special size refuse to come under the standard proposed for all other commodities—refuse to accept the general standard—are most vociferous in demanding that the standard which they can not use and will not have shall be forced on every other industry. It seems to me it is somewhat of a presumption for one industry to refuse to accept a standard to which it insists that everybody else must conform.

Now, if the purpose of it is to specify what a standard is, specify the standard, then the logical thing to do is to stipulate what that standard is, provide for its marking, and then punish any false statements in such branding, but not to go to the extent of prohibiting the use of a small barrel or making inconvenient the use of a larger barrel by those trades which find it necessary to use a different sized container.

A good deal of difficulty comes from the fact that the word "barrel" has two meanings—one as a standard of measure and the other merely as a container. It has been brought out that the sugar barrel is a larger measure, and therefore, we are told, will not be interfered with. Can not the gentleman understand the confusion which may come if I contract for 100 barrels of sugar and it comes to me in a barrel larger than the standard measure, and the question may arise as to whether the 100 barrels of sugar meant 100 packages put up in the ordinary sugar barrel or 100 times the standard fixed in this bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly.

Mr. ASHBROOK. How would the gentleman buy the sugar—by the barrel or by the pound?

Mr. CRAMTON. I may buy it by the barrel; and if I do, it is not "exclusively" sold by weight or count.

Mr. ASHBROOK. But if you buy it by the barrel it would be sold by weight.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the question—whether the word "barrel" meant the standard measure or the container.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Briefly.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is unnecessary to remind the gentleman that under the regulation of commerce he may buy that type of barrel. But I want to ask him if it is not a little remarkable that he fails to comprehend the position of the gentlemen here who contend that if you just call this a bill to establish a standard of measurement you can get by with it, although by its terms it is plainly a regulation of commerce?

Mr. CRAMTON. Some of these gentlemen seem to think the courts will construe it according to what we say it is rather than what it really is.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly.

Mr. MADDEN. You are arranging for the standard barrel. Would that prohibit anybody from selling by weight?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; but it does this: It prohibits me from selling in a barrel, even if I sell by weight.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the plain language.

Mr. ASHBROOK. In a barrel as a barrel.

Mr. CRAMTON. The bill proposes that it shall be unlawful "to expose for sale a barrel containing fruit or vegetables of less capacity than a standard barrel," even if I expose them for sale by weight.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Go on and read it. It says: "A barrel containing."

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly; a barrel under standard, although I mark on it that it is under standard and it contains fruit which I propose to sell you by the bushel.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose I had a lot of oats and corn to sell, and I offered to sell to you oats at 32 pounds to the bushel and corn at 72 pounds to the bushel, and you bought them and I put them in a barrel, after I weighed them, and they do not fill the barrel. Would that make it illegal?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I do not know that that question is very material.

Mr. MADDEN. It ought to be. I think it is a very important question.

Mr. ASHBROOK. You sell that corn and oats by the pound and not by the barrel, do you not?

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret I can not yield. My time is limited. I conceive the purpose of the Constitution was to authorize us to define the standard. Now, if this bill will define what the standard barrel is then we have fixed a standard which any man entering into a contract can use and depend upon; and if gentlemen in the potato industry or in the apple industry are so desirous of having this standard fixed, as we are told, there will be nothing to prevent their using, after we have defined it, the barrel which they are demanding shall be defined, even if we do not penalize them for not using the kind of barrel they say they must have and we have defined.

Hence the amendments which I have offered, and which are pending, propose simply in the first section to provide that when a barrel does conform to the standard fixed in this first section the man using that barrel shall be authorized to obtain the benefit of that fact by branding the barrel in a certain way, as "U. S. standard barrel," or as "U. S. standard cranberry barrel." And further, that the contract containing the ordinary barrel, as to any of these commodities, shall be construed to mean this standard barrel.

I have moved to amend section 2, so that we shall not try to punish the use of any particular kind of barrel container, but we will punish the fraud involved in any misbranding of a barrel. And in this connection let me call your attention to the fact that there is a good deal of uncertainty as to what will be the construction under section 2, because in the first section we provide two standard barrels, and in the second section we provide that if anyone sells, and so forth, a barrel containing certain commodities of less capacity than these standard barrels he shall be guilty of violation of this law. That is to say, if I put up a barrel of apples in a barrel smaller than the standard barrel, but not as small as the standard cranberry barrel, or perhaps put the apples in a standard cranberry barrel, there is a question under section 2, as now drawn, whether or not I have violated the law, because my barrel is not smaller than either of the barrels provided in section 1.

My third amendment would be simply to make a little more certain the method of enforcement. If my amendment, especially to section 2, providing only for a penalty for misbranding, carries, we will have a law which will provide a standard which anybody can use and which will govern all contracts, but will not penalize those who ignorantly or through reasons of convenience attempt to use a barrel not in strict conformity with the requirements of the standard. The demands of the trade will in the bulk of cases force the use of the standard barrel, and, just as has been the case of the Sulzer bill, everything will be accomplished that it is desired to accomplish.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe that in view of the fact that the various States are making a standard barrel, and making that mandatory, the Government law, going in and simply making it optional, would have very little effect? And let me ask the gentleman just one other question——

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield further, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I have not finished my question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield if the gentleman will be very brief.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. I will be brief.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very well.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. The Michigan statute fixes a smaller standard and makes it mandatory.

Mr. CRAMTON. The power of this Congress is to specify what is the standard barrel, and if I in Michigan contract with the gentleman in Wisconsin for 100 barrels of apples, and there is a Federal standard fixed, there can be no question as to what standard will govern the contract.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman from Michigan offer amendments that are pending?

Mr. CRAMTON. At our last session on this bill I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that he did.

Mr. MANN. I know he has just given notice of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I actually offered them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to be sure to have enough time to have the amendments reported.

Mr. MANN. They are pending now if they have been reported once.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand, then, that the Chair holds that the amendments which I presented a week ago have been offered and are before us?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer as a substitute for section 2 an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The purpose of this amendment is not to change the substance of the bill at all, but to relieve any person of any anxiety in regard to the language of section 2, which some people interpret, as I think, without justification, as meaning if we sell from a barrel or in a barrel it must be a standard barrel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Page 2, line 11, strike out section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That it shall be unlawful in any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to sell as a barrel or to offer or contract for sale by the barrel any fruit or vegetables in any container so designated as a barrel if said barrel is of a less capacity than the standard barrel as defined in section 1 of this act, and any person guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to a fine not to exceed $500, or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not make any provision for the fractions of a barrel—one-third, one-half, and three-quarters, as provided in the original bill. He only makes provision for the standard barrel.

Mr. TOWNER. That is entirely unnecessary, because if the standard barrel is fixed, then a half barrel must contain one-half that, of course.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THACHER].

Mr. THACHER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to give my hearty and emphatic indorsement to this meritorious bill drawn in the interests of the farmers and fruit growers and consumers alike.

The sixteenth congressional district of Massachusetts, which I have the honor to represent in the Congress, produces one-half of the entire crop of cranberries raised in the United States, and as evidence that the 2,000 cranberry growers of this congressional district strongly favor the passage of the Tuttle standard barrel bill, H. R. 4899, I present the following telegram from Mr. John C. Makepeace, president of the Cape Cod Cranberry Growers' Association:

WAREHAM DEPOT, MASS., January 11, 1915.

THOMAS C. THACHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

As the direct representative of 2,000 Cape Cod cranberry growers I urge you to put forth every effort to promote passage of House bill 4899, which provides mandatory national standard cranberry barrel. Rejection of this measure would result in much confusion and greatly hamper distribution of our product.

J. C. MAKEPEACE,
President Cape Cod Cranberry Growers' Association.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] says that this proposition to fix a standard measure is an attempt to regulate commerce, and he declares it unconstitutional because, as he alleges, it seeks to regulate intrastate commerce. But it is no more an attempt to regulate intrastate commerce than the fixing of a standard dollar is an attempt to regulate such commerce. The Constitution gives to Congress the power—

To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

In each case——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I can not now; I have not the time. In each case the power of Congress is without restriction or qualification. Under that clause of the Constitution Congress has the power to provide that a certain standard dollar shall be the standard of value and be the only dollar used in any State; but that clause also gives to Congress identically the same authority to fix a standard of measure. If under that clause Congress can establish a standard dollar, then under the same clause it can establish a standard measure.

If Congress can establish a standard dollar and compel—as it does compel—the use of that dollar in both interstate and intrastate commerce, then Congress can also establish a standard measure and compel the use of that measure in both interstate and intrastate commerce.

Gentlemen object to the law being made mandatory, and they object to the penalty for its violation. But we could not establish a standard dollar unless we could compel its use. Nor can we fix a standard measure unless we compel its use. Neither a dollar nor a measure is "fixed" if its use in commerce is left optional. The law now punishes the using in commerce of anything except the standard dollar as a dollar. How can we effectively fix a standard barrel unless we provide a penalty for using anything except the standard barrel as a barrel? The power to provide such penalty is necessarily implied from the very nature of the case.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I have not the time. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. The Constitution in a subsequent clause provides—that Congress shall have the power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers.

This clause was construed in the case of McCollough against Maryland by the Supreme Court of the United States, Chief Justice Marshall for the court declaring, as gentlemen will remember, that under this clause if the end be legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, then all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but are in accord with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. By way of example, as gentlemen will also recall, the court called attention to that provision of the Constitution which gives Congress power "to establish post offices and post roads" and to the fact that from this express grant of power there had been inferred the power to carry the mail, and from this the power to arrest and punish persons who rob the post office.

This reasoning makes it clear that Congress has the power under the Constitution to establish a standard of measure and fix penalty, as provided in the pending bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I suggest that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] use the remainder of his time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield that time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] in answering the argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] does not get the distinction clearly. It is true that Congress has the authority to fix the measure of the dollar, but Congress does not undertake to say that the dollar shall have rough or smooth edges, that it shall be so thick, or that it shall be round or square, but it fixes the unit of measure, the amount of the metal in grains that should go into it. That is the unit of measure, not the unit of its size or shape.

Mr. ADAMSON. And you do not haul apples in it, either.

Mr. WINGO. No; you do not haul apples in it. There is a clear distinction between fixing a unit of measure and the size, shape, and texture of a container. There is quite a distinction there.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield to me 30 seconds?

Mr. WINGO. If I have the 30 seconds, I will yield it to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the difference which the gentleman points out exists simply because the measure by which we determine the amount or weight of any commodity is in its very nature and purpose different from the piece of gold by which we measure the value of all commodities. But if Congress has the power—and it has—to prescribe not only the number of grains of gold which a standard dollar shall contain, but also to prescribe the form, thickness, and diameter of the standard dollar, then Congress has the power to prescribe not only the number of cubic inches which a standard barrel shall contain, but also to prescribe the form, thickness, and diameter of the standard barrel; and it has the authority further to provide that no one shall in commerce use anything else than the standard dollar and the standard barrel as a dollar or a barrel.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, this constitutional argument has been somewhat amusing. I can not agree with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] or the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] in reference to the helpless condition in which Congress would thus be placed. For more than 125 years we have had a barrel measure. We have had the liquid barrel and we have the dry barrel. In 1824 England declared what should constitute a barrel measure. Numerous States have declared in mandatory terms what shall constitute a barrel measure. It is not a question of interstate commerce, the power is expressly granted by the Constitution; interstate commerce is a mere incident. Will anybody doubt that Congress has the power to prescribe the form of money which shall be issued, and if the Congress wants to put a hole in the center of it and prescribe the form or size of it, it can do so? Congress can say what kind of metal shall constitute money; it has the power to say what kind of a money stamp shall be placed upon a piece of wood one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness. That is the power that has been granted to Congress, and it is not so helpless that it can not prescribe all the elements that go into the making of these standards. If it were true, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] states, the States could take it out of the hands of Congress and make the congressional power absolutely void and of no effect.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; for a question.

Mr. SUMNERS. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to section 2 of the bill dealing with the intrastate shipments. Does it not occur to the gentleman that the committee has undertaken to standardize the container instead of the unit of measure?

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further. I want to refer briefly to the cranberry barrel. We had before the committee as many as 25 or 30 dealers. They were unanimous in the opinion that it was necessary to have a special cranberry barrel. The cranberry barrel has straight staves. The reason for that is that they can not use the curved-stave barrels, because in the packing of the cranberries they would heat, and you can not get the proper pressure on them if the barrel has a bulge. When cranberries are packed they are put under a certain pressure, and you can only use that pressure on a barrel with straight staves and not upon the circular or bent stave barrel. That was the reason that the entire trade requested the special barrel. They could not use a curved-stave barrel for packing cranberries. A half dozen States have fixed the weight of a bushel of cranberries. The purpose of the bill is to standardize the barrel. We can not get along with permissive laws. They do not get us anywhere. It is only through mandatory acts of Congress that we will ever have any standard weights and measures in this country. There are 48 States legislating on these questions, and we must pass not permissive laws but mandatory laws.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, What amendments come first?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas). The committee amendments come first, and the Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out the word "subdivision" and insert "subdivisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "the," insert the word "third."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "half," insert the words "and three-quarters."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, strike out the following language: "liable to a penalty of $1 and costs for each barrel so unlawfully sold or offered for sale, as the case may be, to be recovered at the suit of the United States in any," and insert the following language: "deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to a fine not to exceed $500, or imprisonment not to exceed six months, in the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 1, strike out the following proviso:
"Provided, however, That no barrel shall be deemed below standard within the meaning of this act when shipped to any foreign country and constructed according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser if not constructed in conflict with the laws of the foreign country to which the same is intended to be shipped."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 47 ayes and 13 noes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. All those in favor of the amendment will, when their names are called, vote "aye" and those opposed will vote "no."

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 219, not voting 111, as follows:

Mr. CANTOR with Mr. MORIN.
Mr. CARR with Mr. MANAHAN.
Mr. ELDER with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
A quorum being present, the doors were opened.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ASHBROOK——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MANN. I thought there was another committee amendment offered on the floor.
The SPEAKER. This is the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 20, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "sixteen."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent that the two amendments which I offered to sections 1 and 2 may be both reported at this time and that the second amendment be first voted on.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to have both amendments to sections 1 and 2 reported and to vote on the second one first.
Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WINGO. Did not the unanimous-consent agreement carry with it that we should vote on these amendments in the order in which they were offered?
Mr. ASHBROOK. It did.
Mr. WINGO. All the amendments.
Mr. CRAMTON. I thought that by unanimous consent that could be changed in this instance in order to save some confusion.
Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman's amendment next in order?
Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the confusion that might follow, I shall object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The Clerk will report the next amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 10, after the word "inch." insert the following:
"Barrels complying with the provisions of this section may be branded 'United States Standard Barrel' or 'United States Standard Cranberry Barrel,' as the case may be. In all contracts when goods are sold by the barrel the word 'barrel' shall be construed to mean a barrel of the capacity herein defined."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.
Mr. WINGO. Ask for a division.
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 74.
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order of no quorum present.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I renew my request for unanimous consent.
Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, regular order.
The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seven Members are present—not a quorum.
Mr. ASHBROOK. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands tellers as to whether there is a quorum here or not.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MANN. The rules provide that the Speaker shall ascertain by actual count whether a quorum is present. I do not know where there is authority for having tellers.
SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!
Mr. ASHBROOK. I simply made it, hoping that a quorum might develop and save a roll call.
Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the roll call.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read, so that we may know what we are voting on.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.
There was no objection.
The amendment was again reported.
Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. THOMAS. I rise for a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. THOMAS. Is it in order now to move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill?
Mr. MANN. Certainly not; we are now voting on an amendment.
The SPEAKER. The business before the House is to vote on this amendment. The Chair thinks as soon as that amendment——
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Chair had better not make any decision on that. No new amendment can be offered; a motion to strike out is an amendment, and we have passed the stage of offering an amendment.
The SPEAKER. That is true; the Chair had forgotten the unanimous-consent agreement. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 240, answered "present" 1, not voting 121, as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. LOFT with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. POST with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. TAGGART with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. GOEKE with Mr. PLATT.

Mr. GORMAN with Mr. SINNOTT.

Mr. L'ENGLE with Mr. WALLIN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to vote on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late. The vote has been announced.

Mr. FOWLER. I was trying to get recognition before the Speaker announced the vote. I ask unanimous consent that I may vote on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent that his name be called and his vote be recorded on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman making the statement, but we have always observed——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. To be recorded now after the vote has been announced?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and if the gentleman wants to object——

Mr. MANN. It has never been done.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I certainly do.

The SPEAKER. So does the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER. That is the same as voting, exactly. The statement the gentleman is making now shows that he is present.

Mr. FOWLER. All right.

The SPEAKER. The reporter will record that the gentleman asked to vote, but was not permitted to do so.

The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 2, offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 19, after the word "barrel," insert the words "branded as above provided."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3, offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 3, line 11, after the word "Commerce," strike out all down to and including the word "measures," in line 16, and insert the following:

"It shall be the duty of each district attorney to whom any local sealer of weights and measures or other officer of a State or Territory appointed to enforce the laws of the said State or Territory, respectively, relating to weights and measures, shall present satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act, to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States for the enforcement of the penalty herein provided."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Strike out sections 2 and 3.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask to withdraw all my amendments except the one which strikes out all after the enacting clause and substitutes other language so as to save time.

The SPEAKER. How many amendments has the gentleman?

Mr. WINGO. There are four or five there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] withdraws all his amendments except one, to strike out everything after the enacting clause and substitute new matter.

For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. To submit an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Should not the amendments offered tending to perfect the text be submitted before the amendment in the nature of a substitute is entertained?

The SPEAKER. The arrangement was to take them as they came to them. That is the unanimous-consent agreement. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the standard barrel, dry measure, for the purposes of interstate commerce, shall be deemed to be a container of the capacity of 7,056 cubic inches."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 81.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think that that is an important amendment, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-seven Members are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. On the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The vote is on the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That a standard barrel, dry measure, for the purposes of interstate commerce, shall be deemed to be a container of the capacity of 7,056 cubic inches."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. When the names are called, those in favor of it will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 226, not voting 131, as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BARKLEY with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. WALLIN.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. EDWARDS with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. SHERWOOD with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. KAHN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUSSELL: Page 2, line 19, after the letter "a" and before the word "violation" insert the word "willful."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-seven gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-six gentlemen have risen in the negative. On this vote the ayes are 57 and the noes are 46, and the amendment is agreed to. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, in line 1, after the word "of," where it first occurs in the line, strike out the "a," and in the same line strike out "form" and insert "measurements."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 3, line 18, after the word "commodities," insert the word "when." And, in the same line, after the word "sold," strike out the word "exclusively."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TOWNER——

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ASHBROOK) there were 112 ayes and 38 noes.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD called for a division.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point for the present.

The question on the passage of the bill was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOWARD) there were 122 ayes and 61 noes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Two hundred and ten Members, or 211 with the Speaker, are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of passing the bill will answer "aye" and those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 104, answered "present" 2, not voting 117, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1915.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire to begin the work of this new legislative day with the thought of God in our hearts and minds, remembering as we face the issues of life that at last we face Thy law, Thy purpose, and Thy rule. Thou art the judge of all men. To Thee alone can we look for the permanency of our institutions and for the continuance of our freedom. All the blessings and all the prosperity of our national life have come from the bounty of Thy care and Thy love. Thou hast not dealt with us after our sins. Thou hast not rewarded us according to our transgressions. The measure of Thy gift has been Thine own grace. We pray that Thy grace may still be extended to us and Thy guidance, that we may be blessed as a Nation and fulfill the divine purpose in us as a people. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

SECRETARY M'ADOO'S SPEECH AT CHICAGO.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the speech delivered by Secretary McAdoo before the commercial club at Chicago, January 9, 1915, on the shipping bill as a means for the creation of an American merchant marine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Kentucky that he is informed that that speech has already been printed.

Mr. JAMES. I think it was made a public document, but it has not been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it was made a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. If it has been printed as a public document, then I object to having it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JAMES. I hope the Senator from Utah will not enter an objection to its being printed in the RECORD. In that way it would be read by many people who will not have an opportunity to secure the public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all, nor did I have any objection to printing it in the RECORD in the first place or printing it as a public document, but I do have an objection to printing it both in the RECORD and as a public document, because that has not been the policy in the past.

Mr. JAMES. That is a very unusual objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. It is a usual objection.

Mr. JAMES. I do not see what objection the Senator from Utah could have to a speech delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury upon such an important subject being published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to having it published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. JAMES. Then let the Senator withdraw his objection. I thought the Senator objected.

Mr. SMOOT. But I do have an objection to having it printed in the RECORD and also as a public document.

Mr. JAMES. I did not ask to have it printed as a public document. I do think it should be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not make any difference whether the Senator asked for it or not, it has been printed as a document.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator knows, of course, that it will be seen by vastly more people if printed in the RECORD than if published as a document and put in the document room.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt if anybody is interested in having this speech printed in the RECORD. If printed as a document it can be circulated throughout the country. I have always found in the past the best way to get any speech before the people is to have it printed as a public document.

Mr. JAMES. I have heretofore given my consent to the publication of all sorts of speeches in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The other day the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asked for the publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of an article written by ex-President Roosevelt, and no objection was interposed. But if the rule that is to be adopted in the Senate is that when the Secretary of the Treasury, one of the highest Cabinet officers, has delivered an address on an important subject, it is to be denied to the people of the United States the opportunity to read it in the RECORD, then, of course, I shall exercise the right I have to object to printing in the RECORD speeches delivered by members of the party of the gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that if the Senator from Massachusetts had asked that the article referred to be printed as a public document and also in the RECORD, I would have objected at that time. I recognize, of course, that this speech can be read into the RECORD and I would have no objection to that course being taken, but I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that I am not objecting because he has requested it. This objection has been made hundreds of times upon the floor of the Senate, and it has been the rule not only of the Senate but of the House that any speech or any publication if printed as a public document is not to be printed in the RECORD, and if printed in the RECORD it is not to be printed as a public document; and that is a good rule.

Mr. JAMES. Is that the rule the Senator has applied all along to the utterances of Cabinet officers?

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, Mr. President.

Mr. JAMES. I think the Senator is mistaken. I think we have not only printed as a public document but published in the RECORD many speeches delivered by distinguished Republicans. Of course if the Senator wants to take the position that he is going to object to this particular speech because it was delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury upon this particular subject, he can do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I resent the insinuation of the Senator that I am objecting to this speech going into the RECORD because it was delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury or because it was an address on a particular subject. That is the farthest thing from my mind. I will appeal to all Senators here on the floor if I have not objected to hundreds of such requests. I think it is perfectly proper to make the objection.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to say that the Senator from Utah has usually objected, but he has sometimes withdrawn his objection. At this session I recall that he made the same objection to the printing of the speech of the President of the United States. I do not know why he did it, but he withdrew that objection, and it was printed in the RECORD and also printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is to be the policy of the Senate——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the Senator from Kentucky has a perfect right to read the speech into the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I have already stated that.

Mr. JAMES. I understand that, of course, the Senator wants me to take up the time of the Senate. I am perfectly aware of the purpose of the Senator along that line. It does not have to be diagrammed to me.

Mr. President, I move that the speech be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that motion is considered, although I doubt whether under the rule it can be entertained, I want to say that if the Senate of the United States desires to have a policy established now that we shall print speeches or documents or publications of any kind both in the RECORD and as a public document I shall never object at all in the future. But I do not know where it is going to end, nor do I know what expense will be attached to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he might draw the line and say that he would object to all except speeches of Cabinet officers.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Colorado support that position?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. I think a Cabinet officer ought to have a right to have any document that he desires printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You might limit the number if you are afraid the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be lumbered up with a great many things.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to have them in the RECORD; I have no objection to that at all; but the only objection I have is to have them in the RECORD and then also as a public document.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if there is going to be given consent to an arrangement made here between these eminent Members of this body as to what is to go into the RECORD I wish to point to a distinction which I think ought to be observed in making that agreement. A Cabinet officer sends an official communication to Congress and is probably entitled to have it printed in the RECORD if we see fit to put it there, but I do not think that everything a Cabinet officer may say at any time or place and every speech he may make necessarily belongs in the RECORD. I am in entire sympathy with the desire of the Senator from Kentucky to put this particular document in the RECORD because it relates to a public bill that is now under consideration here and is undoubtedly an illuminating proposition.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, this is not the desire of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have not spoken to him about it. I know nothing of his desire in reference to the matter. It is my own desire.

I think it is a very great speech, and I think it ought to be printed in the RECORD so that Senators may have the opportunity of reading it and so that their constituents also may have the opportunity of reading it. It is a new thing to me that an objection of this character should be interposed to the printing of such a speech in the RECORD, when it relates to legislation now pending. For that reason I made the motion that the speech be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in this connection. It was on my motion that the speech was ordered to be made a public document. I had the impression that it would perhaps be more largely read in that form than it would be if printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has a very large circulation, but as to the number of readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD views may differ. My own experience has been that the RECORD goes to a great many people who throw it into the wastebasket.

I do not favor making any hard-and-fast rule here at this time in reference to the matter. I recognize the position which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] takes, and it has been the practice heretofore to raise objections of the kind now urged by him, but there are circumstances which ought to change that situation, and this is one of those peculiar circumstances. Here is an important measure which has been introduced; there has been some discussion of it—not very much as yet because of the interference of other bills, but there will be further discussion—and the Secretary of the Treasury, who has taken much interest in the matter, has delivered an address upon this particular phase of the subject now pending in the Senate. It is a very illuminating and instructive address, and it presents the matter from his viewpoint, which the other side are entitled to know and of which this side ought to have the benefit. This is, in my judgment, an instance where an address of this sort ought to go into the RECORD, not so much for its circulation outside, perhaps, as because of its being thereby made available to each and every Member of the Senate. It is for that reason that I ask the Senator from Utah under these circumstances to waive his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I may be foolish in trying to protect the Treasury of the United States against the absolute waste of the people's money in the printing of documents of all kinds. I do not say that it would be a waste in this particular case, and I have not the slightest objection to the address being circulated as widely as possible, but I believe there should be a limit to all things, and I have in the past tried to limit the printing in every way and in every form of speeches delivered in any and every part of the United States.

Mr. President, I suppose this matter has led to enough discussion now to more than offset the amount which would be saved if the address were not printed in the RECORD; and upon the request of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, which I should dislike to refuse, I shall withdraw the objection, but I do so with the distinct understanding that I am opposed to any speech delivered anywhere—I do not care where—being printed both in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and as a public document at the expense of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say that the only reason I also do not object is that the subject dealt with in the address is immediately before the Senate; it is one that we are to consider and are considering as the unfinished business of the Senate, and I think to print the address in the RECORD is the best place to put it for the use of the body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the address will be printed in the RECORD.

The address is as follows:

SPEECH DELIVERED BY SECRETARY MCADOO BEFORE THE COMMERCIAL CLUB AT CHICAGO ON THE SHIPPING BILL AS A MEANS FOR THE CREATION OF AN AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, ON THE EVENING OF SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1915.

"Since 1880 Democratic and Republican national platforms alike have declared from time to time in favor of an American merchant marine. During the whole of this period of 34 years political leaders of all parties and business men of every kind of political faith have recognized the necessity for a merchant marine under the American flag if our commerce is to expand and the American people are to have a fair share of the world's trade.

"The Democratic national platform of 1912 contains the following:

"We believe in fostering, by constitutional regulation of commerce, the growth of a merchant marine which shall develop and strengthen the commercial ties which bind us to our sister Republics of the south, but without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury.

"A similar declaration is found in the Democratic national platforms of 1880, 1884, 1904, and 1908.

"The Republican national platforms of 1884, 1892, 1896, 1900, 1904, 1908, and 1912 contain declarations in favor of building up an American merchant marine, that of 1912 being as follows:

"We believe that one of the country's most urgent needs is a revived merchant marine. There should be American ships, and plenty of them, to make use of the great American oceanic canal now nearing completion.

"The Progressive Party made no specific declaration in favor of a merchant marine, but did declare strongly in favor of extending our foreign commerce, as shown by the following quotation from its platform of 1912:

"The time has come when the Federal Government should cooperate with manufacturers and producers in extending our foreign commerce. To this end we demand adequate appropriations by Congress and the appointment of diplomatic and consular officers solely with a view to their special fitness and worth, and not in consideration of political expediency.

"It is imperative to the welfare of our people that we enlarge and extend our foreign commerce. We are preeminently fitted to do this because, as a people, we have developed high skill in the art of manufacturing, our business men are strong executives, strong organizers. In every way possible our Federal Government should cooperate in this important matter.

"These unequivocal declarations show conclusively that the creation of an American merchant marine is not a partisan question, but a vital policy of national importance upon which all parties have long been in agreement. Like the currency question, it has been talked about interminably, but unlike the currency question it remains to be solved.

"While both of the leading political parties are culpable for the plight in which our foreign trade now finds itself because of their failure to create, as promised, an American merchant marine, the Republican Party is the more culpable, because it has had complete power to legislate during a large part of the last 20 years when it controlled the executive and legislative branches of the Government and yet did nothing. The Democratic Party now has power to legislate, and it will be equally culpable if it fails to act. It will be even more culpable, if it does nothing, since the emergency created by the European war has emphasized, as nothing else could have done, the supreme folly of subjecting the foreign commerce of this great Nation to the hazards of ocean transportation under the flags of nations now engaged in the most gigantic war of all time. Regardless of these hazards, it is an even greater folly, from an economic point of view, to continue deliberately the policy of trying to build up a great foreign trade by leaving to our rivals the control of the vitally important instrumentalities of ocean transportation. So long as our competitors own the ships, they make the rates, they control the service, and they determine the routes. With this power it is easy to favor their own commerce and discriminate against ours.

"One of the most significant utterances on this point is contained in the Republican national platform of 1900:

"Our present dependence upon foreign shipping for nine-tenths of our foreign carrying trade is a great loss to the industry of this country. It is also a serious danger to our trade, for its sudden withdrawal in the event of European war would seriously cripple our expanding foreign commerce. The national defense and naval efficiency of this country, moreover, supply a compelling reason for legislation which will enable us to recover our former place among the trade-carrying fleets of the world.

"The man who wrote that had the power of a seer and the vision of a statesman, because what is there advocated is irrefutably sound, and what is there predicted is exactly what has happened—a European war has caused the 'sudden withdrawal' of a large part of the foreign vessels upon which our foreign trade is dependent, and has seriously crippled 'our expanding foreign commerce.'

"It is necessary only to give a few figures to show how conclusively this is true.

"At the outbreak of the European war in August last, the total amount of gross steam tonnage of all the nations of the world was, in round numbers, 45,400,000. Of this approximately one-half is under the British flag. The largest part of the American tonnage is employed in the lake and coastwise trade and is not suitable for over-seas service. We have but 15 vessels of 1,000 net tons and over, regularly engaged in the trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific trade. They aggregate 164,546 gross tons, and represent about one-third of 1 per cent of the world's gross tonnage. Our total gross steam tonnage, registered for the foreign trade, including everything under and over 1,600 tons, and including all steam vessels admitted to American registry since the war broke out, is only 1,061,676 tons, or little more than 2 per cent of the world's gross tonnage.

"Since the outbreak of the European war reliable estimates show that 5,803,014 gross tons of ocean-going vessels have been withdrawn from commercial use, as shown by the following table:

	Tons.
German and Austrian	3,507,331
British vessels taken under Government charter	1,700,000
British vessels destroyed or seized by Germany	265,000
Vessels lost by mines	330,683
Total	5,803,014

"Prior to the war a large part of our foreign trade was carried in German bottoms, but since they have been withdrawn from the seas we are almost wholly dependent for the transportation of our foreign commerce upon the English flag. This commerce by sea for the 12 months ended June 30, 1914, aggregated the enormous total of $3,785,500,000. So long as England commands the sea our commerce will not be stopped. But who can foretell the eventualities of a great war? It is conceivable that a daring German squadron might get into the Atlantic and play havoc with our commerce in British bottoms. No one can tell how long the war will last, and every day that it continues our foreign trade is subject to its vicissitudes and dangers. Is it fair to our producers, our merchants, and our manufacturers to force such risks upon them? Are we justified in putting the prosperity of our country in needless jeopardy? Aside from this, our trade with some of the belligerent countries is practically destroyed for lack of American ships to carry noncontraband articles to them and to bring back noncontraband articles to us—articles sorely needed in the pursuits of peaceful industry and science. Notably is this true of cotton, which is urgently needed by Germany, Austria, and other countries. But we haven't the American ships. The wants of these countries can not, therefore, be supplied nor can the necessities of our own distressed people in the South be relieved. Neutral flags can not be depended upon for this service. They can not get the necessary war-risk insurance. While Congress has established a War Risk Insurance Bureau in the Treasury Department, we can not, of course, insure ships not under the American flag.

"But this is not all. The withdrawal of the large amount of tonnage—13 per cent of the world's total supply—has created a great scarcity of vessels, with an unprecedented rise in ocean freight rates.

"From every Atlantic and Gulf port there comes the cry of scarcity of ships and exorbitant rates. Let me cite a few conspicuous instances. In July last the rate on grain from New York to English ports was 4 to 5 cents per bushel. In December it was 16 to 17 cents per bushel—an increase of about 300 per cent. To Rotterdam the rate was 6¼ cents per bushel. In December it was 30¾ cents per bushel, an increase of about 400 per cent. The rate on cotton from New York to Liverpool in July last was 20 cents per hundredweight. In December it was 75 cents per hundredweight, an increase of 275 per cent. The rates on cotton to Rotterdam have increased from $1 to $5 per bale, or 400 per cent. In July last the rate on cotton to Bremen was $1 per bale. In December it was $15 per bale, or 3 cents per pound of cotton.

"On all commodities there have been increases in rates of from 50 to 300 per cent, whether destined for English, European, or Mediterranean ports. I will not multiply instances nor weary you with statistics.

"These enormous increases in rates constitute a heavy tax on the American producer. They are reflected in the lessened prices which he has been compelled to take for his product. The increased cost of carrying American produce and commodities to European ports since the war broke out runs into millions.

"This great sum represents a heavy toll that has been exacted by foreign steamship owners from American shippers and producers. It is, in effect, a penalty they are paying for the failure of American politicians to carry out their repeated promises to the American people. Foreign owners may increase their rates overnight arbitrarily—we have no power to prevent it—and we must pay the price or stop our shipments. Already our commerce is being injured and our prosperity is being retarded by the relentless hand of tribute which lies heavily upon it, and which will lie more heavily upon it with each day that passes, because ocean freight rates are still rising.

"Let me read from a few letters from actual shippers in various parts of the country:

"MEMPHIS, TENN., December 7, 1914.

"SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,

"DEAR SIR: I have on my desk several very important inquiries for cotton for Germany, and feel satisfied that at least a million bales of cotton could be sold to Germany and Austria at once, if freight room at a reasonable price could be secured, and, above all, that the 'war risk' would cover the shipments absolutely.

"Now, can not you find a way for the Government to furnish us ships and guaranteeing the delivery of the cotton either at Gothenburg, Rotterdam, or Copenhagen? The importance of this move you can realize in a moment when you think that every bale of cotton that is held over and not spun becomes a weight on the market and reduces the chances of an advance later on that much. You can not grind the mill with the water that has passed, and when a spindle stops operating and the cotton is not being used it becomes a dead-weight on the market, it matters not how much you advance against it.

"Now, what we want is open markets and a chance to ship out cotton. If this can be done, the cotton pool will only be used limitedly. The rate from New Orleans to-day to Gothenburg is $1.50 per hundredweight, and to Rotterdam $2. This is three and four times the regular rate. Suppose a rate of $1 was effected, and with a 'war risk' of not over 50 cents per bale, this would enable you at once to take a million bales of cotton off of the market. Can't you suggest some outlet for these conditions.

"A steamship loaded with 10,000 bales of cotton at $3 per hundredweight, or $15 per bale, realizes, gross, $150,000 for the cargo, when the vessel itself is not worth exceeding $125,000. For such conditions there certainly should be some remedy.

"Yours, very truly,

"JOSEPH NEWBURGER.

"PENSACOLA, FLA., December 12, 1914.

"Senator D. U. FLETCHER,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SENATOR: We here do not know whether to be amused or disgusted in regard to interviews given out by prominent gentlemen who should know better as to the great number of ships available for carrying freight and the ease in obtaining them.

"If some of the gentlemen who talk this way would come down to this coast and see how our business is hampered by inability to get bottoms and the extraordinary freight rates charged, they might change their minds as to the abundance of vessels available. The fact is that freights are almost at a prohibitive figure, and vessels can hardly be obtained, even at the piratical prices asked.

"Congress will be doing a great service for this coast if they can find some effective means of remedying this serious situation.

"Very truly, yours,

"C. E. DONSON,

"The following is taken from a letter of E. J. Glenny, president of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, dated December 12, 1914:

"It has been a great problem with the cotton trade this season to obtain tonnage for cotton, the necessity for freight room for grain being greater than heretofore and the amount of tonnage available being smaller. The ship agents are compelled to pay $10 to $10.50 per ton of 2,240 pounds upon the dead-weight capacity of the vessel for cargo, as against $2.50 to $3 before the declaration of war."

"The following is from the Schuler Cooperage Co., of Jacksonville, Fla., under date of December 22, 1914:

"We are shippers of barrel headings from Savannah to Liverpool, and the established ocean rate was from 23 to 25 cents per hundred pounds. The first available space that we were able to obtain after August 1 was the latter part of October, at which time we were advised that the rate had been advanced to 30 cents. At the present the rate is 45 cents, or an advance of about 96 per cent.

"This rate will prevent our making future shipments, hence we will be compelled to forego taking additional orders until after the normal rates are restored.

"The following is from Cornelius Kahlen, exporter, of 349 Broadway, New York, dated December 22, 1914:

"I desire to point out to you that I am an exporter of wrapping paper to European countries. At the present moment I expect to forward about 25 tons of wrapping paper in rolls from New York to Genoa, Italy, destined for Italian consumption. Before the outbreak of the war the ocean-freight rate quoted by the various steamship lines was 25s. plus 5 per cent per ton weight of 2,240 pounds, but immediately after the commencement of the war the rates increased continuously—at times 40s., 50s. and 75s.

"I am now in receipt of a quotation from the Cunard Steamship Co., New York City, with reference to my above-mentioned shipment, and am quoted by this line the rate of 100s. plus 5 per cent per ton weight of 2,240 pounds. This is a fourfold increase over the previous rates before the outbreak of the war, and it makes the sale of the paper almost prohibitive.

"The following is from the United States and Australasia Steamship Co., of New York, dated December 17, 1914:

"In reference to a bill now before the Senate, known as the ship-purchase bill, authorizing the Government to purchase or charter ships to engage in foreign trade and to lease any of these ships to private corporations, we would respectfully ask that you file our application for Government steamers should this bill become a law.

"This is an American company, incorporated under the laws of New Jersey in 1898. We have been obliged to charter foreign steamers to care for exports to Australasia, and at the present time we are not able to charter steamers.

"There are despatched every year between 35 and 40 steamers from the port of New York to Australasia, with a demand for goods from America constantly increasing.

"The following is from a letter of O. G. Hempstead & Son, steamship agents and ship brokers, of Philadelphia, dated September 21, 1914:

"But, on the other hand, the trade with South American ports by this country is almost negligible, being only 6 per cent of our total exports. There are practically no first-class steamers now plying between United States ports and South American ports on either the Atlantic or Pacific sides of South America. True, the Lamport & Holt and Prince Lines have regular sailings from New York to the east coast of South America, but the Prince Line steamers generally return to England. The Lloyd Brazileiro have ceased running their own boats and now maintain infrequent sailings by means of chartered steamers, as do also Messrs. Funch, Edye & Co. The Atlas, Munson, and Luckenbach Lines do not go to South American ports, and the steamers of Messrs. Barber & Co., R. P. Houston & Co., Norton, Lilly & Co., and the American & River Plate Line only maintain occasional sailings to Buenos Aires by means of tramp steamers.

"On the west coast of South America there is a fairly good service maintained by Messrs. W. R. Grace & Co., the Wessel Duval Line, and the New York & South American Line, but I am convinced that with the stability only the United States could give to a regular line and the class of service which could be established and maintained great and permanent benefit could be secured to the merchants and manufacturers of this country.

"A line of steamers capable of plying between Philadelphia or New York at a 14-knot rate would bring Buenos Aires one week nearer to those ports, and if permanent sailing dates were named and maintained, so that deliveries could be accurately anticipated (the most valuable asset of any steamship line), and the steamers were of the type now in vogue between our North Atlantic ports and Liverpool, Hamburg, and Bremen, so that passengers as well as freight could be carried, a great and valuable trade would open to the citizens of this country and those of South America.

"I have quoted these letters almost in full, because they present the actual conditions more vividly than I could portray them in any language of my own.

"So long as this war continues these unfavorable conditions will not only continue, but grow worse unless something is done. Who can say how long the war will last? Who can forecast accurately its effects and results? Is it reasonable, is it safe, is it right, to remain idle any longer or to trust any further in the happening of some benevolent thing, through private agencies, that will secure and protect our foreign trade?

"Not only has the war emphasized the imperative necessity for the quick creation of an American merchant marine, but it has created an exceptional opportunity for the extension of our trade in the open markets of the world. This is notably the case with South America. The commercial and financial relations of our friendly and growing southern neighbors have been seriously affected by the war. They are seeking, necessarily, new accommodations, new adjustments. Where can they find them so readily and advantageously as in our great country? And where will they be more welcome? Commenting on this matter, that able and distinguished diplomat, the ambassador of Argentina, Dr. Naón, said in a recent speech before the Commercial Club of Boston:

"I do not know whether I am telling you anything new when I say that, if we rely on the indications of our statistics, the Argentine Republic constitutes one of the most important markets for the consumption of the manufactured products of the United States. In support of this fact I wish to present to your consideration a résumé of a number of comparative tables contained in an Argentine official publication entitled 'International Argentine Commerce,' which appeared in 1912. This is an official publication of the general bureau of commerce and industries of my country, and is issued under the responsibility of the ministry of agriculture. As a consequence, the figures appearing therein are as exact as it is possible to make them and the most authentic expression of facts. Gentlemen, these figures show that of the total exports from the United States to the South American Continent, 40.3 per cent entered the Argentine Republic. They also show that our country received 41.1 per cent of the total exports from the United Kingdom to said continent, 47.3 per cent of those from Germany, 49.7 per cent of those from Belgium, 50 per cent of those from France, 66.4 per cent of those from Italy, and 80 per cent of the exports from Spain to South America. It may thus be said that the Argentine Republic absorbed alone 60 per cent of the total exports of the world to the South American Continent. Hence I do not believe that I am going too far when I say, in view of these figures, that they reveal with more eloquence than any address could the enormous purchasing power of my country. They also bear out the assertion made on more than one occasion that it constitutes a consumption market worthy of the best efforts of countries producing manufactured products, if those countries are desirous of obtaining now and in the future a certain means of meeting the demands of their commercial expansion.

"One of the most sorrowful consequences of the war for us, aside from the sentiment and affection intensified by the close ties which bind us with the countries at war, has been the almost complete paralysis of European importation, a paralysis which offers to the American market an unsurpassed opportunity for increasing to enormous proportions its commercial field by supplying the needs which the European industry has ceased to provide for.

"Let us see, now, what practical method could be adopted for supplying those needs and increasing the amount of our international commerce.

"There can surely be no better authority in this regard than the official word of the Argentine Government, as cabled some days ago to him who has the honor of addressing you at this moment. In this cablegram my Government says, in brief:

"'Our products are being exported without increased difficulties, but a scarcity of bottoms is foreseen in the near future for the transportation of our products. A very efficient means of overcoming the difficulty would be if vessels were to come from that country with the usual cargoes, namely, unrefined naphtha, woods, iron, machinery and other agricultural implements, petroleum, furniture, lubricating oils, typewriters, machines, etc. These vessels would return with our products, such as refrigerated meats, wool, hides, quebracho, tannin, live stock, etc. American manufacturers could step into the place left by European industries in all branches formerly supplied by them, such as coal, steel rails, galvanized iron, woolen goods, pig and sheet iron, machinery in general, cement, locomotives, railway cars, refined sugar, automobiles, galvanized iron or steel wire, rail joints, sheet zinc, cotton fabrics, printing paper, electric wire and cables, iron pipes of all kinds, manufactures of iron and steel, household articles, woolen clothing, etc. The present moment offers to manufacturers of such articles most advantageous opportunities for openings, taking advantage of the shutting down of the European market. If they want to get it, it is for them to take the initiative by sending at least small cargoes, and especially by adapting themselves to the custom of not demanding payment on delivery, a custom which others have followed with marked success.'

"This, gentlemen, is the official word, inspired, no doubt, by the Argentine spirit—a spirit of good will and sympathy, favoring the increase of our commercial bonds. From these words you may derive the following solutions, in our mind practical: First, enough vessels to meet demands of our commercial interchange; second, cultivation of the market by sending small cargoes and trustworthy agents to place them; third, the organization of our trade on a basis of credit similar to that established by European commerce.

"With respect to the first practical solution, it is not for me to discuss its possibility. I believe, however, that if the case should arise, the Argentine Government would facilitate, in so far as it was concerned, any initiative toward establishing new lines of maritime communication. I am also convinced that American—and, perhaps, also Argentine—capital will be stimulated by their own convenience to invest in the establishment of steamship lines, which will strengthen the ties of all kinds which bind us together, thus imitating the example of the great commercial countries of Europe, which have derived so many benefits from our international commerce. I firmly believe that to assure the stability of our trade both now and in the future we must conduct it in our own American and Argentine vessels.

"The possibilities offered by the purchasing power of Argentine commerce are well worthy of positive efforts—not words, but action; not wishes, but will—in order to be able to benefit fully therefrom. I do not believe I am wrong when I say that the Argentine Republic offers to American manufacturers to-day a consumption market of not less than one hundred millions over and above present exports to our country, and to obtain such a result it would be worth while to expend in action a part of the effort now spent in more or less theoretical methods in thinking of it.

"It may be true as claimed that there is at the moment ample tonnage offering for South America, but it may be stated with equal truth that the depression in South American trade and the disturbance of South American finances and credits by the European war, as outlined in the speech of the Argentine Ambassador from which I have quoted, have so reduced the demand that the supply of vessels may, at this juncture, be temporarily adequate. But this will not last. Revival of South American trade will soon come and our ships will be needed. South America's present supply of vessels is under foreign flags, the sailings are not sufficiently frequent or reliable, the rates of freight are high and exceedingly burdensome to American commerce and put our merchants and manufacturers at a permanent disadvantage with their European rivals.

"To capture our share of these markets and all other competitive world markets our business men must have the assurance of ocean transportation under the American flag, equal in quality, reliability, regularity, and frequency of sailings to that of their European competitors, and at rates for freight that are equal to, if not better than, those enjoyed by their foreign rivals.

"How can we expect our enterprising men to make large capital outlays to produce the particular goods required for the South American trade or any special trade and to enter upon an active campaign to get their share of the business unless they have the certainty of transportation at reasonable rates for a sufficient length of time to establish the trade upon a firm and profitable basis? We must stand back of them through governmental action if we want them to succeed. We must develop South American and other foreign trade relations through the fundamental of sufficient transportation of the right sort just as we developed the great West in the sixties by building, with governmental aid, the transcontinental railways, thereby adding an empire of territory and wealth to our national resources. I merely repeat a platitudinous axiom when I say that trade follows transportation. American trade in foreign markets will follow transportation under the American flag and thrive as it never did before. The markets of the world are before us, the Orient as well as South America. Enterprise and courage are needed to secure them.

"This is, as I said before, a question of vital national policy. It must not be considered in a narrow and partisan spirit. We must deal with it as statesmen loving our country and wanting its welfare above partisan advantage and selfish interest. We must have highly developed vision and practical imagination to solve these questions.

"We have passed a tariff law which has put us in position to reach out and take our share of the world's markets because we have broken down those barriers which made it difficult in the past for other nations to establish on a large scale reciprocal trade with us. Reciprocity in trade is essential to permanent commercial intercourse, and no enduring trade development can have any other basis. On top of a favoring tariff law we have passed a splendid piece of financial legislation, the Federal reserve act, which gives our bankers for the first time in our history the opportunity to establish branches in foreign countries, to extend American credits, and thereby to promote American commerce.

"The only remaining thing to be done to make our conquest of foreign markets certain is to restore our merchant marine and enable our courageous and enterprising business men to carry our flag in the peaceful pursuits of commerce to every part of the civilized world. When we do that the American people will enter upon a career of solid, unfluctuating, and unexampled prosperity.

"But we must act immediately. We must not waste time in useless talk. The insistent knock of opportunity must not go unheeded. We need the ships as quickly as men and money can provide them. If we could put a substantial number of American ships in the trans-Atlantic service to-day, it would immediately result in reducing the present extortionate rates to a more reasonable basis, as well as provide facilities not now procurable at any price.

"As I said before, there seems to be an absolute unanimity of opinion throughout the country as to the necessity for the prompt creation of an American merchant marine. The only question is as to the method of getting it. Among the various remedies proposed are:

(1) SUBSIDIES.

"The Republican Party has always favored direct ship subsidies, but during all the years it had control of the Government and had the power to legislate it failed to put this policy into force. It either lacked the courage to do so or was unable to command the united support of its own followers in the enactment of such legislation. Whatever the cause, it has utterly failed to do any effective or practical thing for the restoration of our merchant marine.

"The Democratic Party, on the other hand, has uniformly opposed ship subsidies, and since it is now in control of both legislative and executive branches of the Government and is irretrievably committed against such a policy we may as well dismiss as impracticable and impossible the building up of our merchant marine through governmental bounties.

(2) DISCRIMINATING DUTIES IN FAVOR OF GOODS SHIPPED IN AMERICAN BOTTOMS.

"A provision for discriminating duties is contained in the Simmons-Underwood tariff bill, enacted in 1913, but the Attorney General has held that it violates our treaty obligations with various foreign nations. This plan, therefore, must be dismissed as unworkable. Even if our treaties did not stand in the way, and we could enforce such discriminating duties in favor of our ships, it would be easy for other nations to retaliate with similar discriminations and thereby largely negative such a policy. Retaliatory reprisals of this character would only prove hurtful by creating irritation and ill will and prevent the building up of our trade under our own flag.

(3) GUARANTIES BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST OF BONDS ISSUED BY PRIVATE CORPORATIONS ENGAGED IN SHIPPING.

"This proposal has been urged, but it is not worthy of serious consideration. It would be the worst form of subsidy, to say nothing of the wholly indefensible policy of having the United States Government become the guarantor of the bonds of private corporations engaged in any sort of enterprise. Once we entered upon such a course we should be asked to indorse the bonds of corporations engaged in other than ship enterprises. In time we should have the same kind of scrambling at Washington for governmental favor in the way of indorsements of obligations of private corporations that we had for bounties to favored interests under our old tariff laws. As between this kind of subsidy and the granting of a direct subsidy under a general law applicable to all ships operating under the American flag the latter would be far preferable.

(4) AMENDMENT OF THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

"Much has been said about changing our navigation laws in such manner as to make the field for private capital more attractive. It is said that our navigation laws are so unfavorable and put American shipowners at such a disadvantage that unless they are changed in numerous particulars it will be impossible ever to build up an American merchant marine. Even if our navigation laws could be changed to the extent proposed, there is no assurance that private capital would come forward quickly and provide our business men with the shipping facilities required in the present emergency. It is not, however, practicable to change our navigation laws to the extent which private capital demands, because the principal change relates to the wages of the American sailor. It is stated that the wage standard for American labor makes the cost of operating American ships so much greater than the cost of operating the ships of other nations that it is impossible for the American shipowner to compete with his foreign rivals. This may be overstatement; but whether it is or not, I think it can be said with certainty that public opinion in this country will never permit the passage of any legislation that will reduce the American sailor to the standard of the Asiatic and European sailor. Instead of lowering the standard of the American sailor, it is more likely to be increased. If, therefore, the wage scale of the American sailor is an insuperable obstacle, as alleged, to the investment of private capital in American shipping, we may dismiss as impracticable the enlistment of private capital in the upbuilding of our merchant marine through a change in our navigation laws. There are other features of our navigation laws which, it is said, must also be modified or amended before private capital will enter the field, but it is not necessary to mention them.

"If ship subsidies can not be obtained, if discriminating duties are unavailable, if Government guarantees of the bonds of private corporations can not be granted, if the standard of wages of the American sailor can not be lowered, if private capital can not, for all or any of these reasons, be induced to build up an American merchant marine, what is the remedy?

"The only practicable suggestion that has yet been made is the shipping bill now pending in the Congress of the United States. This measure provides for direct Government action. It means business; it means prompt and effective work; it means the beginning of a merchant marine which will meet the present emergency and give prompt relief to our distressed foreign commerce; it means the upbuilding of a permanent merchant marine under our flag that will establish our commerce securely in the open markets of the world; it means the creation of a naval auxiliary which is absolutely indispensable if our Navy is to be an effective instrument for the national defense.

"The essential features of the shipping bill are the organization of a private shipping corporation with a capital stock of $10,000,000, 51 per cent of which is to be subscribed by the Government, and the remainder is to be offered to public subscription. If the public does not subscribe, the Government will take all of the stock. A shipping board is created, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce. This board is to have the voting power on the Government stock and general supervision over the shipping corporation. The active management of the corporation will, however, be conducted by its board of directors and officers, just as the affairs of the Panama Railroad Co. are conducted by its officers and directors under the general supervision of the War Department. Although the Government owns the entire capital stock of the Panama Railroad Co., that company has, as is well known, long operated successfully a line of steamships between New York and the Canal Zone.

"In addition to the $10,000,000 of capital stock of the proposed shipping corporation, $30,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds, now in the Treasury, may be sold, and the proceeds used for the purchase or construction of ships, which are to be turned over to the proposed corporation in consideration of a like amount of its 4 per cent bonds, which are to be held by the Treasurer of the United States and sold at the discretion of the Government. The act authorizes the transfer to the new corporation of the ships of the Panama Railroad Co. and any vessels belonging to the War and Naval Establishments suitable for commercial purposes and not required by the Army or Navy in time of peace upon terms to be approved by the President of the United States.

"These are the salient features of the bill. It will be observed that the Government does not engage in the shipping business; it is merely a stockholder, or the only stockholder in a private coroporation engaged in such business. The officers and directors of the corporation will be chosen for their ability and knowledge of the shipping business, and the corporation will be managed like any other well-conducted business enterprise or organization. There is no reason why such a corporation can not be made just as successful as any other privately managed shipping corporation. It is not the purpose to operate the ships of the proposed corporation in competition with American ships where they are providing a sufficient and satisfactory service at reasonable rates to properly take care of and build up American trade.

"The object is to have a fleet of vessels, many of which may be of the improved type of tramp steamer, which can be readily mobilized and thrown into service at any point or upon any routes where there is a special demand for vessels under the American flag; and also to establish certain definite steamship lines or routes to be operated and maintained in such manner and at such reasonable rates as to give our merchants, manufacturers, and business men the assured transportation facilities which are indispensable to the upbuilding of our foreign trade and the extension and expansion of American enterprise.

"The proposed corporation will also have the right to charter ships for its own service or to make charter parties of its own ships to individuals and corporations for their purposes. It will, in fact, provide that mobile and flexible shipping organization without which it will be impossible ever to enlarge our foreign trade upon any permanent and secure basis.

"The act does not require the shipping board to buy the ships of any particular foreign registry. It is needless to say that no unneutral act will be permitted by the shipping board nor will any worthless ships or junk be sold to the Government. Suitable vessels for the purpose will be purchased, if they can be found, and suitable vessels will also be constructed. The purpose is to give our shipyards as many orders as possible, because it is realized that in order to create and maintain a satisfactory merchant marine under our flag our shipyards must be encouraged to provide and maintain the necessary facilities. With such encouragement it is only a question of a short time when our shipyards will be able to build ships in competition with the world. The larger the American merchant marine, the more quickly and certainly will our shipyards be able to establish a shipbuilding business of large and profitable proportions.

"Some timid people have argued that if the Government is interested as a stockholder in a shipping company, and a ship of such company should be seized by a belligerent and brought into a prize court, the sovereignty of the Government would be involved. There is no ground whatever for this view. If the Government operated ships outright, just as it operates the vessels of our Navy, an awkward situation of this character might arise; but where a nation is merely a stockholder, or the sole stockholder, in a private corporation, its sovereignty is not and can not be directly involved if the ships of such a corporation become the subjects of litigation in a prize court concerning any issue which does not involve the Government itself. The Government would stand in relation to such a corporation exactly as any individual stockholder does to a corporation in which he is interested. A suit against the corporation does not necessarily involve the shareholders.

"The only objection seriously urged by the opponents of the bill is that it puts the Government in the shipping business. This has a familiar sound. I remember that when the Federal reserve act was being formulated and while it was on its passage in the Congress, it was strenuously opposed on the ground that it put the Government in the banking business. The currency bill does put the Government in the banking business to some extent, and to the extent that it does the Government ought to be in the banking business.

"Let us see what it does: In the first place, it has compelled the national banks of the country to consolidate a large part of their reserves in 12 different reserve banks for the purpose of enabling these reserve banks to come swiftly to the assistance of each other and to the assistance of their member banks whenever injury threatens and whenever the commerce and industry of the country require. This act has put us in position to throw the weight of the banking power of the country at any time and upon a moment's notice to any weak spot. This is accomplished through the Federal Reserve Board, sitting at Washington. This board also has the power to review and determine the interest rates that may be charged by the Federal reserve banks, and through this power to influence greater uniformity in interest rates throughout the country and the keeping of interest rates within more reasonable limits. The very existence of these powers, to say nothing of their judicious exercise, is a matter of inestimable value to the business interests of the country. There is no man engaged in trade who will not feel, directly or indirectly, its beneficial influence. This has already been conclusively demonstrated, although the act has been in operation but a short time.

"The shipping board will exercise analogously an immensely beneficial influence upon our foreign commerce. Just as the Federal Reserve Board is able to throw the banking power of the country to any weak spot for the purpose of protecting our domestic, financial, and commercial situation, so the shipping board, through the proposed shipping corporation, will be able to move its mobile fleet of steamers to any weak spot that may develop in our ocean transportation system and give relief to our foreign commerce. The shipping board may exercise a determining influence upon the general ocean-freight situation by establishing reasonable rates for the vessels operated by the shipping corporation, with corresponding benefit to the American shipper. One of the weaknesses in the movement of our foreign commerce is our utter inability under existing conditions to prevent arbitrary and excessive freight charges by foreign steamship companies. Through the means I have described we shall have the power to protect ourselves if the shipping bill becomes a law.

"The extension of our foreign commerce by means of a well-established American merchant marine will directly benefit our railroad companies because of the increased traffic which they will haul to and from our seaports. There is no reason why an extremely effective cooperation and coordination of our railroad and steamship facilities can not be brought about if this shipping board is established, just as such cooperation exists between the steamship lines and railroads of foreign countries. Such a development would enormously strengthen the American economic situation and make it all the more certain that our merchants and manufacturers can reach out and take their legitimate share of the world's trade.

"The objection that the shipping bill puts the Government in the shipping business is not tenable. Those who urge it seem to forget that it is the duty of the Government to engage in any activities, even of a business nature, which are demanded in the interest of all the people of the country, when it is impossible to engage private capital in such operations.

"Just after the outbreak of the European war, when our foreign exchanges had been completely deranged, with great hurt to our foreign trade, a conference was held at the Treasury Department in Washington for the purpose of devising methods to protect the American situation. At that conference there were many representative men of the business, financial, and shipping world, such, for instance, as James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation; P. A. S. Franklin, vice president of the International Mercantile Marine; Robert Dollar, a prominent shipowner of San Francisco; James J. Hill, of St. Paul; Edwin N. Hurley, of Chicago; John D. Ryan, of New York; E. P. Thomas, president of the United States Steel Products Co., of New York; John H. Fahey, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; Seth Low, president of the Chamber of Commerce of New York; Julius Barnes and H. E. Rycroft, of the Chicago Board of Trade; James G. Andrews, of Minneapolis; F. R. Eaton, of the Washburn-Crosby Co., Minneapolis; and L. E. Moses, of Kansas City, Mo., representing the western and northwestern milling interests; J. P. Morgan, James Speyer, James Brown, and Benjamin Strong, jr., representing New York foreign exchange and banking interests, besides other prominent men whose names I am obliged to omit for lack of time. These gentlemen adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That this conference urge the United States Government to establish a bureau of war-risk insurance, to be administered under the direction of a suitable Government department by a board of three or five members, which shall assume the risks of war on American vessels and American cargoes shipped or to be shipped thereon whenever, in the judgment of the board, it shall appear that American vessels or shippers on American vessels are unable in any particular trade to compete on equal terms with the vessels or shippers of other nationalities by reason of the protection offered such other carriers or shippers by arrangements for war indemnity through their Governments, and that such board have power to fix rates of premium, subject to change, to each country or for each class of cargo.

"You will observe that they strongly favored and urged that the United States Government go into the war-risk insurance business. Why? Because private capital would not engage in this business and because it was essential to afford immediately this protection to our foreign commerce if it was not to cease altogether. War-risk insurance is just as essential an element in the shipping business as the hulls of the ships themselves. No shipowner and no shipper will send a ship and cargo to sea without war-risk insurance in time of war and without marine insurance in times of peace or war.

"These representative business men did not hesitate to advocate strongly the Government going into a part of the shipping business, viz, the war-risk insurance business. It was a perfectly reasonable and defensible thing to do. They urged it because private capital would not engage in it, just as it will not engage in an American mercantile marine. The Congress of the United States promptly enacted the desired law, and the Government is in the war-risk insurance business to-day. What it has done for our commerce already can not be estimated in figures alone. It has not only supplied indispensable protection, without which our commerce would not have moved across the seas, but it has also secured to the American shippers reasonable rates and prompt indemnity. It has protected them against extortionate charges. At the same time the business has been conducted in such a way as to protect the Government, through reasonable rates, for the risks assumed. Congress passed the law on September 2, 1914. Up to December 23, 1914, the total amount of war-risk insurance issued was $25,544,106 and the total premiums collected $591,572. No losses of any consequence had been incurred up to that date, and the total cost of operating the bureau up to that time had not exceeded $6,000. Yet 'they say' that the Government can not successfully manage a business undertaking.

"The representative business men whose names I have given made a distinct declaration in favor of—

"First. The Government engaging in the insurance business for the express purpose of enabling American vessels or shippers on American vessels 'to compete on equal terms with the vessels or shippers of other nationalities'; and

"Second. The establishment of a board with power to fix rates of premium, and so forth.

"Now, this is exactly what the shipping bill is intended to do for our merchant marine. As private capital can not be obtained for this great enterprise, and as the need, like that for war-risk insurance, is immediate and imperative, it is proposed—

"First. To have the Government engage in the shipping business for the purpose of enabling American vessels or shippers on American vessels 'to compete on equal terms with the shippers of other nationalities'; and

"Second. To establish a shipping board which will have the power to fix the rates for our shippers on such American vessels, and thereby the more certainly to secure to our shippers that degree of equality and protection in the foreign trade which will enable them to compete successfully with their foreign rivals.

"The war-risk insurance bill was passed on September 2 by the votes of Republicans, Democrats, and Progressives alike. In the Senate there was no roll call, the vote being aye and no. In the House of Representatives Democrats, Republicans, and Progressives voted in favor of the bill, which passed by an overwhelming majority. Here is a striking instance where all political parties and business men of the country, regardless of political faith, deliberately supported the principle of the Government going into the most private kind of private business for the purpose of protecting the commerce of the country. It may be argued that the War Rick Insurance Bureau is to continue only for the period of the war, and that, therefore, it does not establish a precedent. War-risk insurance can not, of course, last longer than the war, because the necessity for it expires with the return of peace, but the necessity for an American merchant marine will continue during times of peace as well as during times of war. The principle, however, of the Government going into private business for the purpose of protecting the commerce of the country is not altered by the fact that a part of the business in which it may engage is of a temporary character. There is ample precedent for the Government going into private business. We have numerous notable instances where broad national policy and the protection of the people of the country made such action on the part of the Government essential.

"Let me refer again to the Panama Railroad Co., which operates a railroad on the Isthmus and a steamship line between New York and Panama. The Government bought the entire stock of the Panama Railroad Co., and has operated with great success a line of steamships between New York and Panama for years. Now that the canal has been completed the railroad across the Isthmus has become of small importance, but the steamship line between New York and Panama is of great value to the country and must be continued. Not only has a regular and reliable steamship service been maintained, but a favorable influence has been exerted on freight rates throughout Central and South America, where the Panama steamship lines and railroad have been a factor.

"The Panama Railroad and steamships have been operated under Government supervision at a profit always. Here is a striking instance of the successful conduct of business under Government control and supervision.

"What has been successfully accomplished by the Panama Steamship Line can be accomplished by the steamship company which the pending bill proposes to create.

"Recently the Government has gone into the railroad business in the Territory of Alaska. The development of the resources of this great Territory has been delayed by the failure of private capital to undertake the essential enterprise of transportation. Congress has recently passed a law authorizing the construction by the Government of a system of railways in Alaska.

"Just as it became necessary in the case of the Pacific railways for the Government to shoulder the burden of the large initial expenditure necessary for their construction, so is it necessary for the Government to provide the means of transportation in Alaska, because private capital will not take the risks and incur the initial losses which must be spread over a number of years, until the development of the country will make the railway lines self-supporting and profitable. This development should be all the more rapid under Government auspices, because the railroad company will be able to make reasonable and favorable rates for the transportation of freight and passengers. The same thing is being done in Alaska that we did in the case of the Pacific railways, except that the Government is not building the Alaskan railways with its own money in the form of subsidies and presenting the system when completed to favored individuals, but is retaining possession of the system in order to operate it under such conditions and upon such terms as will most rapidly develop the Alaskan Territory for the benefit and enrichment of all the people of our country.

"For all these years we have waited for private capital to develop Alaska. Is there anyone who would advocate a continuation of the policy of expectant waiting for private capital and the continued neglect of the great resources of the Alaskan Territory?

"The objection that 'the Government must never go into private business,' even though private capital refuses to engage in such business, when the interests of the people imperatively demand it, is always urged against any progressive step of this character. Are we to be bound by a mere dogma of this sort? Are we to be deterred from doing, through the agencies of Government, what is essential to the welfare of our people when private capital can not be secured? While I believe that the Government should not engage in business where private enterprise can be depended upon for the purpose, I am not afraid of the Government going into business where private capital refuses, and where the business in which the Government is to engage is for the benefit of all the people of the country. I am afraid of the Government going into private business only when it is for the benefit of special interests or to serve the selfish purposes of some particular class.

"For 50 years we have waited for private capital to provide an American merchant marine. For 50 years our foreign trade has languished while we have waited. Shall we wait any longer upon a fatuous hope or lean any longer upon a broken reed?

"If the shipping bill is objected to by our opponents, what practical suggestion or remedy have they to offer? The American people will not be content with academic objections. They do not want a practical plan rejected unless a better substitute is offered. Let the opponents of this bill present such a substitute or let them hold their peace.

"Will the Republicans, Democrats, and Progressives in Congress meet the cry of the American manufacturer, the American business man, and the American banker by immediately passing this measure, which will set our great country upon a new career of world influence? Will they vote now to carry out their long-neglected pledges to the people? Will they emancipate American commerce from dependence upon foreign vessels, and set it safely on the highway of peaceful conquest, under the American flag, of the open markets of the world?"

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. LANE presented the credentials of GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN, chosen by the electors of the State of Oregon a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented petitions of sundry citizens of Scribner, Atkinson, Pickrell, Elgin, Herman, Stanton, McCook, Hoskins, Hastings, Diller, Hallam, Rising City, Arapahoe, Gothenburg, Staplehurst, Gresham, Lincoln, Blue Hill, Campbell, Fremont, Crowell, St. Helena, Boelus, Firth, and Teton City, all in the State of Nebraska, and of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OLIVER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the United Presbyterian Church, of Emsworth, Pa., praying for the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the City Council of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Stoneboro, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation increasing the Army and Navy equipment, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lisbon, Bethel, Danbury, Rockville, Norwich, New Britain, Baltic, and Taftville, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Business Men's Association of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation that will interfere with the exportation of the products of this country to any other country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Adath Israel Congregation, of Bridgeport, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Cosmopolitan Club, of South Manchester, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate commerce in convict-made goods, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Framat Lodge, No. 51, International Order of Good Templars, and of sundry citizens of Ansonia, in the State of Connecticut, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of 66 citizens of Danbury and Bethel, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Westbrook, Me., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LIPPITT presented a petition of the Rhode Island Medical Society, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a mental examination of immigrants by the Public Health Service, especially trained in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, Board of Erin, of Providence County, R. I., remonstrating against the treatment accorded Catholic priests and nuns in Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRADY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2789) to award the medal of honor to Maj. John O. Skinner, surgeon, United States Army, retired, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 913) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 3430. An act for the relief of Lottie Rapp (Rept. No. 914); and

H. R. 9701. An act for the relief of F. W. Theodore Schroeter (Rept. No. 915).

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 12464. An act providing for the expenditure of part of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000 made by the urgent deficiency bill of October 22, 1913, for the completion of the post-office building at Hanover, Pa. (Rept. No. 911); and

H. R. 15000. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Huntingdon, Tenn. (Rept. No. 912).

VANCE PARK, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6403) donating the old iron fence around Vance Park, Charlotte, N. C., to the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence Chapter, to be placed around Craighead Cemetery, near Sugar Creek Church, in Mecklenburg County; and I submit a report (No. 910) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported favorably the bill (S. 6403) donating a fence around Vance Park, in Charlotte, N. C., to the local chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

STATUE OF GEN. GEORGE MEADE.

Mr. SHIVELY. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 234) directing the selection of a site for the erection of a statue in Washington, D. C., to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade and submit a report (No. 909) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania to the report.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs and on behalf of the chairman of the committee, who is not now in the Senate, I report a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 521) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on the pending Indian appropriation bill, such stenographer to be paid at a rate not exceeding $1 per printed page; and that the expense thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 7273) granting an increase of pension to Gardner B. Taylor; and

A bill (S. 7274) granting an increase of pension to Ellen A. Pains; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7282) granting a pension to William M. Faidley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURLEIGH:
A bill (S. 7283) granting a pension to George T. Moulton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HITCHCOCK:
A bill (S. 7284) for the relief of Simon J. Lonergan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GORE:
A bill (S. 7285) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Newton;
A bill (S. 7286) granting a pension to Jesse Watkins; and
A bill (S. 7287) granting a pension to General P. Frederick (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:
A bill (S. 7288) granting a pension to Minta Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:
A bill (S. 7289) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Stanton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:
A bill (S. 7290) granting an increase of pension to Harriett S. Crooks; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:
A bill (S. 7291) granting an increase of pension to David Youts; and
A bill (S. 7292) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Kniffin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:
A bill (S. 7293) for the relief of the Iowa Tribe of Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STONE:
A bill (S. 7294) granting a pension to Joseph Lieber; and
A bill (S. 7295) granting an increase of pension to William H. McKinley; to the Committee on Pensions.
A bill (S. 7296) for the relief of Walter E. Holden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell to the bishop of Oklahoma for cemetery purposes certain lands situate in Pittsburg County, Okla., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMAS submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to negotiate an agreement with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians for a final settlement of all the rights, claims, and demands of these Indians against the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHURST submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $23,000 for extension of the Ganado irrigation project on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted seven amendments intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. (H. R. 20189), which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8846), which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have received two short letters which I ask may be read.

There being no objection the letters were read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1915.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The East Washington Civic Association at its regular meeting held at Withaft's Hall January 13, 1915, unanimously and emphatically indorsed the Sheppard amendment providing for prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District after November 1, 1916.

The East Washington Civic Association represents a signed constituency of nearly 5,000 residents and property owners in East Washington.

We respectfully and earnestly pray for the adoption and passage of the above legislation as being for the best interest of the people of the District.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES W. McGUIRE,
Vice President and Secretary pro tempore.

By order of the East Washington Civic Association, with their request that this action be laid before the Senate and entered upon the record.

J. W. M.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 13, 1915.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The people living in that section of the District of Columbia known as Petworth are, I am sure, with you almost to a man in your effort to make the District "dry." While our citizen bodies have taken no recent action upon this question, I have had excellent opportunity for learning the sentiment of our people. As vice president of the Petworth Citizens' Association and as president of the Petworth Home and School Association I have large acquaintance and close personal contact with the people.

We enjoy so much living under prohibition, as we are within the Soldiers' Home mile limit, that we would like the entire District to have the benefit of so sane a law.

Surely there is no good reason for Congress in this single instance surrendering its right to exercise "exclusive legislation" in the District, and there are many reasons for not having a referendum vote on this question. We have not the requisite election machinery, and it is hardly possible that such could be perfected for this single vote. This question should not be singled out for popular action.

Thanking you for your work for humanity, I am,

Yours, most respectfully,

JESSE C. SUTER, 911 Webster Street.

SUPPLY OF ANILINE DYESTUFFS.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration:

The resolution (S. Res. 520) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as fully as possible as to the facts relating to the supply of dyestuffs for American textile and other industries, the sources of such supply, the extent and nature of the supply, the movement of prices, the available materials for the manufacture of such supplies in this country, the possibilities, if any, as to the stoppage of such supply by reason of the existing European war, and any and all such other facts as will bring the existing conditions in the aniline-color industry fully to the knowledge of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over and be printed.

KING THEOLOGICAL HALL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5168) for the relief of the King Theological Hall, and authorizing the conveyance of real estate to the Howard University and other grantees, which was, on page 2, line 3, after "meeting," to insert: "or any special meeting called for that purpose."

Mr. HOLLIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

On January 11, 1915:

S. 6454. An act to authorize the Government Exhibit Board for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to install any part or parts of the Government exhibit at the said exposition in the exhibit palaces of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. or in the Government building at said exposition; and

S. J. Res. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present the bell of the late U. S. S. Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J.

AMENDMENTS TO THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. CHILTON and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 741, being House bill 19076. I desire to explain that this bill has been passed by the House and has been fully considered and reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. I think it will not take over 5 or 10 minutes to dispose of the measure. I desire to offer certain amendments on behalf of the committee, and unless the bill is passed very soon there will be no opportunity for the Senate amendments to be concurred in by the House.

The bill is designed to relieve the Supreme Court of certain classes of cases and to make some needed amendments in the Judicial Code which it is conceded are necessary. The bill has the approval, I think, of everyone who understands the subject, and I hope that no objection will be made to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. I know that he does not desire matters taken up by unanimous consent——

Mr. CHILTON. The bill will take but a few moments——

Mr. JONES. And I shall have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CHILTON. Then, I move, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19076, the objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19076, notwithstanding the objection. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia what the bill is? We could not hear what he said back here.

Mr. CHILTON. It is a bill to relieve the Supreme Court of a part of its present jurisdiction and to make certain amendments to the Judcial Code to that end.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill be read before we vote on the motion to take it up.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand the yeas and nays have been ordered. I could explain the bill briefly if I could get the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 19076) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first subdivision of section 116 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"First. The first circuit shall include the districts of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, and Porto Rico."

SEC. 2. That sections 128, 238, and 246 of the act aforesaid are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 128. The circuit courts of appeals shall exercise appellate jurisdiction to review by appeal or writ of error final decisions in the district courts, including the United States district court for Hawaii and the United States district court for Porto Rico, in all cases other than those in which appeals and writs of error may be taken direct to the Supreme Court as provided in section 238, unless otherwise provided by law; and, except as provided in sections 239 and 240, the judgments and decrees of the circuit court of appeals shall be final in all cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy being aliens and citizens of the United States or citizens of different States; also in all cases arising under the patent laws, under the trade-mark laws, under the copyright laws, under the revenue laws, and under the criminal laws, and in admiralty cases."

"SEC. 238. Appeals and writs of error may be taken from the district courts, including the United States district court for Hawaii and the United States district court for Porto Rico, direct to the Supreme Court in the following cases: In any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue, in which case the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision; from the final sentences and decrees in prize causes; in any case that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States; in any case in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority is drawn in question; and in any case in which the constitution or law of a State is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States."

"SEC. 246. Writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii and of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico may be taken and prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States within the same time, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and in the same classes of cases, in which writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, may be taken and prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States under the provisions of section 237; and in all other cases, civil or criminal, in the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii or the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, it shall be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States to require by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the case be certified to it, after final judgment or decree, for review and determination, with the same power and authority as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error; but certiorari shall not be allowed in any such case unless the petition therefor is presented to the Supreme Court of the United States within six months from the date of such judgment or decree."

SEC. 3. That section 244 of the act aforesaid is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of appeals in all proceedings and cases arising under the bankruptcy act and in all controversies arising in such proceedings and cases shall be final, save only that it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the proceeding, case, or controversy be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error; but certiorari shall not be allowed in any such proceeding, case, or controversy unless the petition therefor is presented to the Supreme Court within six months from the date of such judgment or decree.

SEC. 5. That an action or suit by or against a railroad company incorporated and existing under an act of Congress shall not be regarded as a case arising under a law of the United States within the meaning of the statutes regulating the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, unless there be some sufficient reason for so regarding it independently of the incorporation and existence of the railroad company under an act of Congress.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of April, 1915.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19076? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the question is not debatable. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. MCCUMBER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I desire again to announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I omitted to state that I am paired with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]; but on this question I feel at liberty to vote, and therefore will allow my vote in the affirmative to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—61.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19076) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk three amendments which are proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary, and to show their relevancy and meaning I want to explain to the Senate in just a few words the purposes of the bill.

The first section of the bill puts Porto Rico in the first circuit, so that appeals from the courts of Porto Rico will take the same course as appeals from the courts of the different States. The bill was drafted upon the idea that Porto Rico was on the line of travel of the first circuit, Boston being the place where the circuit court of appeals of the first circuit is held. At present, under the law, practically every case of importance tried in Porto Rico is taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it burdens the court very much. We thought it ought to be put in a circuit, so that appeals could be made to the circuit court of appeals for the first circuit, and then cases from Porto Rico could go to the Supreme Court of the United States only by certiorari, as is the case in all of the States.

There are several other amendments. The one to section 128 is intended to correct what was probably a mistake on the part of the lawmakers and to bring trade-mark cases into the same category as cases arising under the patent laws and under the copyright laws. There was at least a dispute as to whether or not they are now in the same category, and the amendment to section 128 makes appeals in trade-mark cases take the same course as those in copyright cases and in cases arising under the patent law.

In section 238 the words "and the United States District Court of Porto Rico" are inserted to conform to the amendment made in the first section.

The next amendment is to remedy the following situation: There is one railroad company in the United States that is incorporated under the laws of the United States, and that railroad company clogs the record of the Supreme Court by taking all of its cases to that court, on the ground that as it is a corporation organized under the laws of the United States there arises a question under the laws of the United States. The language used in section 5 of the bill met with objection, and several of the Senators on the Judiciary Committee proposed that this section should be amended. The amendment was proposed, and while it occurs to me that the language of the House bill and that of the amendment mean the same thing, the amendment was unanimously agreed to by the Judiciary Committee.

Another amendment made by the committee is to require petitions for certiorari to the Supreme Court to be filed in three months instead of six months. They struck out "six months" and inserted "three months."

Those are all of the amendments, except one suggested by the Senator from Minnesota. There was a certain law that he wanted excepted from the provisions of the bill, and it is contained in the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

I will ask the Secretary now to read those amendments, and it will be seen that I have stated them correctly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 4, line 20, to strike out "six" and insert "three," so as to read:

But certiorari shall not be allowed in any such proceeding, case, or controversy unless the petition therefor is presented to the Supreme Court within three months from the date of such judgment or decree.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber. Would the amendment limiting the time in that way apply to Porto Rico?

Mr. CHILTON. It will apply to everything.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator think it is advisable to do that with reference to Porto Rico?

Mr. CHILTON. The Committee on the Judiciary thought so, and unanimously reported that amendment, after considering the whole subject pretty thoroughly. I think that will be ample time. It is very desirable that the time for presenting petitions for certiorari shall be as short as possible. It would seem that everybody could act within three months. A petition could be filed within that time.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the amendments have the unanimous assent of the entire Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir; it is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. GOFF. As to all the sections?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir; all of the amendments.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, does this bill deny to the Porto Rican the right to go to the highest court, the Supreme Court?

Mr. CHILTON. It gives to the Porto Rican just the same right that the Senator has in Kentucky. It puts Porto Rico in the first circuit, just as every State in the Union is in some circuit. Anyone in Porto Rico having a controversy will go from the courts of Porto Rico to the circuit court of appeals of the first circuit; and in those cases in which any citizen of that circuit can go to the Supreme Court of the United States, then, upon the same terms and in the same way, a citizen of Porto Rico can go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. JAMES. So it just makes another court that the Porto Rican has to go to before he gets to the Supreme Court?

Mr. CHILTON. It does; or, rather, it puts Porto Rico in just the same position as a State of the Union in that respect. It puts it in the first circuit.

Mr. JAMES. As I understand, on an issue arising in Porto Rico a citizen there could appeal to the Supreme Court directly?

Mr. CHILTON. Directly; yes. The result is that they bring their cases to the Supreme Court, and they occupy much of the time of that court.

Mr. JAMES. So, instead of that, you now propose to send him up to New York? Is that it?

Mr. CHILTON. We send him to the circuit court of appeals for the first circuit.

Mr. JAMES. Which sits where?

Mr. CHILTON. It sits in Boston.

Mr. JAMES. And then he comes back, by way of Boston, to the Supreme Court?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; just like the citizen of any one of the States.

Mr. JAMES. I am opposed to it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from West Virginia. As I understand, Porto Rico is not in any circuit at all now?

Mr. CHILTON. Porto Rico is not in any circuit. Hawaii and Alaska are each in a circuit, and we propose to put Porto Rico in a circuit.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is not attempting to change circuits, or anything of that kind?

Mr. CHILTON. Not at all. It is only annexing Porto Rico to a circuit, so that a citizen of Porto Rico will have the same rights as to an appeal that any other citizen of the United States has.

Mr. THOMPSON. At the present time, as I understand, they have to appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. CHILTON. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5 and to insert in lieu thereof:

No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any action or suit by or against any railroad company upon the ground that said railroad company was incorporated under an act of Congress.

Mr. CHILTON. As I said before, that is simply changing the language of the section as it passed the House. The Senate committee thought that the language of the amendment is a better way to express the purpose intended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6 and to insert in lieu thereof:

That this act shall not affect cases now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States or cases in which writs of error or appeals have been allowed at the date of its approval. And nothing in this act shall be deemed to repeal, amend, or modify the provisions of an act entitled "An act providing for writs of error in certain instances in criminal cases," approved March 2, 1907.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the passage of this bill, because I regard it as a very necessary piece of legislation; but I received this morning a letter from a very prominent lawyer in Hawaii—I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] received a similar letter—in which he stated that some members of the bar there are very much opposed to the provision of the bill which seeks to take from the Supreme Court of the United States the jurisdiction which it now has over appeals and writs of error from the Supreme Court of Hawaii, where the amount involved is $5,000 or more.

I confess that such information as I have upon the subject inclines me to the view that the provision of this proposed law is a wise one. The Supreme Court of the United States ought to be relieved from appeals in that class of cases. But the writer of the letter also stated that a meeting of the bar of Hawaii is in contemplation at which this subject would be taken up. I am reluctant to ask that the bill be delayed until the bar can be heard from, because, as I have already stated, I think it is a very necessary piece of legislation, and if it should be delayed for any length of time it probably could not be passed at this session of Congress.

I am going to offer an amendment to come in at the end of section 2, on page 4, so that the matter may go into conference and there be considered. I have written the amendment somewhat hurriedly, and fearing that the Secretary may not be able to read it I will read it myself. Add at the end of section 2:

Writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Courts of the Territory of Hawaii and of Porto Rico wherein the amount involved, exclusive of costs, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, exceeds the value of $5,000 may be taken and prosecuted in the circuit courts of appeals.

The circuit courts of appeals are given jurisdiction over the district courts of Hawaii and Porto Rico, and it might be well if they are given the same jurisdiction over the supreme courts of those Territories. At any rate, I offer the amendment, and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not object to it and let it go into the bill, and inasmuch as the bill has to go to conference anyway this may be considered in connection with the other matters.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to section 2:

Writs of error and appeals from the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Courts of the Territory of Hawaii and of Porto Rico wherein the amount involved, exclusive of costs, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, exceeds the value of $5,000 may be taken and prosecuted in the circuit courts of appeals.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The effect of it is to give the circuit courts of appeals to which Hawaii and Porto Rico are attached the same appellate jurisdiction the bill seeks to give over the district courts.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course, I have no right to accept the amendment, but after the statement of the Senator from Utah, who has given this matter much attention, I urge no objection to its going into the bill. It will probably go to conference and can be considered further. In the meantime the protest of the Bar Association of Hawaii will have been received and the Senator from Utah can speak more definitely upon the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, adding to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, it will be remembered that in the organization of the Territory of Hawaii a different judicial system was provided than had ever been provided for any Territory before that time. At the time that it became a Territory, or at the time that it became subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, they had a well-developed and fully equipped local judiciary system, and it was the purpose to incorporate that in bulk as far as possible into the new Territorial organization in order that there might not be any sudden disturbance of their judicial procedure. Therefore a different method was provided for reaching the Supreme Court of the United States, and it allowed appeals from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii, composed entirely of a local organization, to the Supreme Court of the United States in cases where the subject matter in controversy was over $5,000.

I had, I suppose, a communication in substance such as that received by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and it had been my purpose, had I been in the Chamber when the Senator from West Virginia first called up this measure, to ask that the bill might go over until to-morrow, perhaps, or the day after, in order that the formal views of the Hawaiian bar might receive consideration. But I realize that that is too late.

Personally I have an exceedingly high opinion of the bar of the Territory of Hawaii. I doubt if any jurisdiction in the United States of equal area and equal or far more population has a bar that would exceed in learning and in ability the bar of the Territory of Hawaii. I would be glad if an opportunity could be had for the views of their bar association to be expressed. I think, however, under the method suggested by the Senator from Utah that this appeal, instead of coming direct to the Supreme Court of the United States, may be allowed to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit. Probably the differences and the inconveniences can be equalized, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that section 5 be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any action or suit by or against any railroad company upon the ground that said railroad company was incorporated under an act of Congress.

Mr. CHILTON. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. My attention was distracted, and for the moment I did not know whether the section had been amended as we had agreed on it or not.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; that has been agreed upon as a committee amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I see it has.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why the first circuit was ageed upon as the circuit to which appeals might be taken from the local courts in Porto Rico and whether in determining which circuit appeals should be considered the committee took into consideration either the second circuit or the third circuit at Philadelphia.

I wish to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that a year or more ago I was in quite close communication with a number of lawyers in Porto Rico, and they at that time, I know, desired that their appeals and writs of error should be taken to Philadelphia. I do not know what their position is now, but it seemed to me that possibly that would be much more convenient for them than Boston. Of course the New York circuit would be the most convenient, because of the rapid exchange between New York and Porto Rico, but Philadelphia is within one hour of that port, where all the Porto Rico trade centers, although I think there are some boats running to Philadelphia, whereas Boston would be five hours and would be longer.

I only inquire so that I may know whether any consideration has been given to it.

Mr. CHILTON. I will say to the Senator that that was considered after many suggestions were made. There were two reasons why the first circuit was agreed upon by the committee unanimously. One was that it was thought that Boston, where the court is held, comes within the line of travel as nearly as any place would, and that docket was not crowded with business, and that court would probably take care of the business more expeditiously than any other circuit court of appeals. It was all discussed before the committee, and we came to that conclusion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I ask the Senator whether any representation was made by the bar of Porto Rico as to their desire regarding the circuit to which appeals and writs of error might be taken?

Mr. CHILTON. There was none before the committee of the Senate, as I recall.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state, if the Senator from West Virginia will allow me, that I received a communication from Judge Hamilton, who is at present judge at San Juan, P. R., and he prefers the Boston district. I also received, being chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, a communication from some other party, saying that they thought it was more desirable that the Porto Rican courts should be in the first circuit than the one at Boston. As to distance, it seems to me to be very immaterial whether it is five hours or one hour or two hours. When people come for the consideration of business before a court it is not a question as to one or two or three hours.

I do not think there is any line of steamers that go to Philadelphia.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think there is a line of fruit steamers.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be, but the passenger traffic goes to New York, and inasmuch as there is no certainty as to the arrival of the same, being sometimes delayed, they could get a hearing at Boston as well as at Philadelphia. The people down there seemed to think that the Boston court was a better court for them.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think that the disposition made in the bill by the House, and which was anticipated by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, would facilitate the disposition of business coming from Porto Rico much better than to send it to the second circuit. The second circuit appears to be overburdened, and the effect of sending it there would be probable delay in the disposition of causes that come up. The opportunity to get a swift decision in the first circuit, I think, is very much better. I think that is a wise disposition, and that was the view of the committee.

While I am on my feet I want to say one word particularly because of something the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] said a few minutes ago. The transaction of business in Porto Rico and Hawaii and different outlying possessions has been gradually shaping down to a fixed course of procedure and a common understanding of the relations of the judicial proceedings in those islands to the general administration of justice in the United States. There was a period during which everything was chaotic; there were great misunderstandings and differences of understanding, and it was probably desirable at that time that the Supreme Court of the United States should supervise the settling of the law.

I think that time has passed. I think they are getting down to an ordinary regular course of procedure in the administration of justice, which makes it appropriate to apply to them the same principle with respect of appeals and with respect of the review of decisions which we apply to our own States. Inasmuch as it is quite certain that as we go on we must progressively relieve the Supreme Court, it seems to me that this step which puts Porto Rico on the same basis with Connecticut and Rhode Island and Vermont and the other New England States is timely and is called for.

The enormous growth of this country and the still greater growth of national business as compared with local State business and the great extension of the field over which national authority is asserted are creating an enormous number of new questions and increasing the burden upon the Supreme Court, and as the process of extension goes on that increase of burden will go on. The judges of our Supreme Court now are driven to the very limit of their human power to do their work, and if you drive them too hard, if you impose too great a body of duty upon them, you do not get good work; you do not get the operation of fresh and active minds, and thus we are going to have the great and all-important function for the whole country which is performed by the Supreme Court done in an inferior way. We must follow the increase of Federal business by relieving the Supreme Court from the less important in order that it may be able to do the more important part of its work.

This seems to me a plain and very desirable step in that direction, and no injustice is done to Porto Rico and Hawaii or any other island.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Utah, who offered the amendment, whether, under the existing law, there is any appeal from the trial courts in Hawaii to a court of review or appeal in the islands?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whether there is under existing law?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. An appeal lies now from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii to the Supreme Court of the United States——

Mr. WALSH. I understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Where the amount involved is $5,000 or more.

Mr. WALSH. What is the condition when the amount involved is less than $5,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the judgment of the Supreme Court of Hawaii is final. It is exactly the same provision that existed in the Senator's State when it was a Territory, and that existed in my State when it was a Territory.

Mr. WALSH. I understand. The supreme court is a court of appeals.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; the supreme court is an appellate court.

Mr. WALSH. Then, in the case of a judgment of $5,000 or more, it would be tried in the first place in the lower court in Hawaii; it would then be reviewed by the Supreme Court of Hawaii, and then reviewed again by the court of appeals.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; where the amount involved is $5,000 or more.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the immigration bill, being House bill 6060.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on day before yesterday, when this conference report was under discussion, I was engaged in making some remarks upon it when the hour arrived at which, under a unanimous-consent agreement, we were compelled to take up another matter. I could, otherwise, then have concluded what I had to say in a very few moments. I desire now to supplement my remarks very briefly.

I had referred to the immigration of the black or African race to this country during the last few years. I desire to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading, a tabulation showing the amount of that immigration during the last five years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Immigration of black or African for the past five fiscal years.

	Immigrants.			Nonimmigrants.			Total.
	Arrivals.	Illiterates over 14 years of age.	Percentage of illiteracy of aliens over 14 years of age.	Arrivals.	Illiterates over 14 years of age. Mr. REED. I also ask permission to insert in my remarks, without reading, statements of various educators of prominence in the United States, including certain statements of President Wilson, then governor of New Jersey and candidate for President, in criticism of the literacy test.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statements referred to are as follows:

PRESIDENT WILSON ON IMMIGRATION—"AMERICA PROUD TO OPEN HER GATES TO EVERYONE WHO LOVED LIBERTY AND SOUGHT OPPORTUNITY."

On Wednesday afternoon, September 4, 1912, a delegation of about 100 journalists and editors of newspapers published in German, French, Italian, Hungarian, Polish, Jewish, Greek, Bohemian, and other languages met Gov. Wilson at the National Arts Club, in Gramercy Park, New York City. Herman Bernstein, the chairman, in his speech introducing Gov. Wilson to the writers, said, in part, as follows:

"You have brought with you your best traditions; you have brought your lofty ideals; you have brought your energy and earnestness; you have brought with you a love for your great literatures and your great cultures; you have brought with you the great past of your nations, and here in the furnace of tolerance and opportunity you are working out your own future together with the great future of the American people * * *."

EXTRACTS FROM GOV. WILSON'S SPEECH.

Gov. Wilson then spoke to the representatives of the press present, as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen, your very cordial and gracious greeting confirms the impression with which I came to this place. It confirms the impression that we are not separated in ideas or in opinions, that I am not the American and you the foreigners. That is exactly the impression which has never been in my mind, and your greeting of me shows me it is not in yours. Because there is a certain sense in which we do America an injustice by classifying ourselves as native born and foreign born. And I have always pleased myself with the idea that America, in some degree, exists in spirit all over the world and that there are men coming to these shores who have displayed their force in our affairs, who bring to America a more vivid conception of what it means than those of us who were born and bred here ourselves entertain * * *

OPEN SIGNS OF LIBERTY.

"If I go to a country reputed to be a country of equality and of liberty, I must expect to find constant, visible, and open signs of liberty and equality; and therefore I carry to that country a demand which that country must satisfy. But I carry it only on one condition, namely, that I have gone to that country with that idea. I carry it only as I have gone to America because I was really, without knowing it, born an American. I wanted that thing that I thought I could get in America, and therefore I broke the tender connections of old associations, the intimate connections of a birthplace, and went to a far country looking for an ideal. And that is the distinction between voluntary immigration and involuntary and assisted immigration, is it not? And that, it seems to me, furnishes one of the clues to the only basis that we can have when we discuss the limitations that must be put upon immigration.

"If we can hit upon a standard which admits every voluntary immigrant and excludes those who have not come of their own motion, with their own purpose of making a home and career for themselves, but have been induced by steamship companies or others to come in order to pay the passage money, then we will have what we will all agree upon as Americans. * * *

WILSON A DIRECTOR OF A LIBERAL IMMIGRATION SOCIETY.

"Now, strange as it may seem to some gentlemen who have criticized me, the only blunder I have made, the only practical blunder I have made in my interest in a liberal policy with regard to immigration, is that I got into the wrong society to encourage it. So that it was an indiscretion of judgment and not an indiscretion of purpose, for my interest in immigration is to see that the immigrant is properly informed, is properly safeguarded against imposition of every kind, whether by the Government or anybody else, and is directed to the place where he can attain the objects he has come for with the greatest advantage to himself. That, to my mind, is the solution of the immigration question * * *."

WILSON'S LETTER TO A WELL-KNOWN ITALIAN-AMERICAN IN CONNECTICUT.

The Democratic Party could not, without forgetting its very origin, advocate an illiberal policy in the matter of immigration. The party may almost be said to have originated in opposition to the alien and sedition laws, by which the Federalist Party sought to all but shut the doors against naturalization and at the same time silence the criticism of our own people against their Government. America has always been proud to open her gates to everyone who loved liberty and sought opportunity, and she will never seek another course under the guidance of the Democratic Party. I am in hearty accord with the ancient faith and practice of the party that has honored me by nominating me for President. * * *

HIS LETTER TO DR. CYRUS ADLER, OF PHILADELPHIA.

I think that this country can afford to use and ought to give opportunity to every man and woman of sound morals, sound mind, and sound body who comes in good faith to spend his or her energies in our life, and I should certainly be inclined, so far as I am concerned, to scrutinize very jealously any restrictions that would limit that principle in practice. * * *

WILSON'S LETTER TO THE "WARHEIT."

I, like the other Democrats, have always held liberal views with regard to immigration. I feel that it would be inconsistent with our historical character as a Nation if we did not offer a very hearty welcome to every honest man and woman who comes to this country to seek a permanent home and a new opportunity. * * *

The attitude of the party and the strength of public opinion in this matter was shown in the most interesting way in the matter of the recent abrogation of our treaty with Russia—the whole country resenting any action on the part of a foreign Government which would discriminate against any American on any ground.

CARDINAL GIBBONS OPPOSED TO LITERACY TEST.

I am not in favor of any educational test as applied to immigrants desiring to enter the United States. Such a law, if passed, would, in my opinion, work great harm, for illiteracy is by no means always ignorance. If the immigrant is industrious and thrifty, he will make a useful citizen, whether he be literate or illiterate. The educated schemer is in more ways than one more dangerous than the honest workman, even though he be illiterate.

PRESIDENT ELIOT'S VIEWS.

I beg leave to invite your attention to the following statement of the principles which should govern the national legislation on immigration:

(1) Our country needs the labor of every honest and healthy immigrant who has the intelligence and enterprise to come hither.

(2) Existing legislation is sufficient to exclude undesirable immigrants.

(3) Educational tests should not be applied at the moment of entrance to the United States, but at the moment of naturalization.

(4) The proper education test is capacity to read in English or in the native tongue, not the Bible or the Constitution of the United States, but newspaper items in some recent English or native newspaper which the candidate can not have seen.

(5) The attitude of Congress and the laws should be hospitable and not repellant.

The only questions which are appropriate are, Is he healthy, strong, and desirous of earning a good living? Many illiterates have common sense, sound bodies, and good characters. Indeed, it is not clear that education increases much the amount of common sense which nature gave the individual. An educational test is appropriate at the time when the foreigner proposes to become a voting citizen. He ought then to know how to read.

LITERACY TEST A FETISH.

I am a believer in a liberal immigration policy.

The reading test is not a fair measure of desirability. It is a fetish that has been very unduly magnified.

My answer to your third question is, of course, no.

Dr. G. STANLEY HALL,
President Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

I do not believe in a literacy test for immigrants. I do believe, however, in the most rigorous tests of physical soundness and mental soundness. No one who is suffering from disease or who is mentally defective should be admitted.

Dr. WILLIAM H. MAXWELL,
City Superintendent of Schools, New York City.

I am not opposed to a liberal immigration policy.

I do not believe that a reading test is entirely fair as a measure for determining the desirability of an immigrant.

I do not believe that immigrants fleeing from religious or political persecution should be subjected to a literary test, should such a test be enacted.

It seems to me American experience is proving that the immigration problem is a serious one chiefly for two or three reasons:

First, because we have been receiving a large number of immigrants of a quality made inferior by a selfish system of class exploitation in Europe.

Second, after arriving in America the immigrants are often further exploited in industry and corrupted in politics by unscrupulous Americans.

Third, this has been somewhat due to the lack of a public point of view in the leaders of industry and politics, owing to a somewhat confused and disorganized system of hostile competition in social affairs, now beginning to be corrected.

Dr. C. J. BUSHNELL,
President Pacific University, Forest Grove, Oreg.

LITERACY TEST POOREST OF ALL.

The literacy test is the poorest of all. People who flee from religious persecution, no matter how ignorant, are people worth while. The vast horde of degenerates who have been pouring into this country are for the most part able to read and write. They are shrewd and cunning, and they have no place in a civilized country. * * * The honest and industrious and healthy immigrant of good stock, no matter whether he is able to read or write, should be welcomed to our shores.

Dr. EDWIN B. CRAIGHEAD,
President University of Montana, Missoula, Mont.

"LITERACY NOT ALWAYS AN ADEQUATE TEST OF QUALITY."

Your favor of the 14th instant is at hand. It has never seemed to me advisable to establish a literacy test for immigrants, because, in my opinion, literacy is not always an adequate test of quality. If we can establish a test which will exclude those who are really undesirable—that is, who are unlikely to make intelligent, industrious, and law-abiding citizens—such test I should approve. I do not believe that the literacy test conforms to that condition.

HARRY PRATT JUDSON, LL. D.,
President University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

CAN ADMIT IMMIGRANTS WITHOUT EDUCATION BETTER THAN HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Gladly do I avail myself of the opportunity you have offered me to say a few words on the question of immigration. It seems to me clear that we have always been able to assimilate the immigrants that come to our hospitable shores whenever they came with sound moral principles and the firm desire to better their lot. Read the roster of our great men these days and you will find them children of men that came over here to escape persecution, without, perchance, the knowledge of the alphabet. We want just such men in our day—men of sterling worth, that respect the law of God and the Commonwealth, who stand for the nobler things in life, who will teach their children such lessons. The next generation will see to the reading. Ours is an immense Commonwealth, and the population is so large now that we can admit immigrants without education better than we could a hundred years ago, and yet our country prospered and kept apace of all other nations in civilization and progress.

According to the opinion of all thinkers the Nation's troubles lie more in the absence of moral principles and the want of respect for law and rightly constituted authority than want of education, and many of our best-instructed men are our greatest rascals.

I believe, then—

(1) In the liberal immigration policy.

(2) I hold that the reading test is certainly not a fair measure of the desirability of the admission of an immigrant, though, if all things else were equal, we prefer educated men.

(3) Above all, it seems to me against all the best traditions of our country to refuse shelter to men who flee to our shores to have civil and religious liberty, though they may not be able to read.

I am in thorough sympathy with that magnificent man that rules the Nation to-day, and I can only hope that our Congress will follow his lead in this as in other matters.

EDWARD CUMMINGS, S. J.,
President Spring Hill College, Mobile, Ala.

ILLITERACY "A MERE ACCIDENT."

In reply to your questions—

(1) I wish to state definitely that I am in favor of a liberal immigration policy;

(2) That I do not think a reading test to be a fair measure for determining the desirability of an immigrant; and

(3) That it would be a barbarous proceeding to subject persons fleeing from religious and political persecution to a literacy test.

Illiteracy is a mere accident, that may affect a family in one generation but be conspicuously absent from succeeding generations. Thousands of our best people are descended from illiterate ancestors, and as long as the country is only one-fifth really occupied our policy should be the wise policy that has hitherto prevailed.

LYON G. TYLER, LL. D.,
President College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.

LITERACY TEST SUPERFICIAL.

If you interpret "liberal immigration" to mean an immigration without any restrictions, I am opposed to it. I think the United States Government may wisely restrict and even prohibit, in cases, immigration.

I do not believe that a reading test is a fair standard by which to determine the desirability of an immigrant. Unquestionably, immigrants who could not measure up to the most rudimentary test of literacy may yet be industrious, honest, and very desirable men.

I do not believe that immigrants such as Russian Jews, who are evidently fleeing from religious and political persecution, should be subjected to the literacy test. However, it does not necessarily follow that they should be subjected to no test whatsoever. In brief, I am convinced that the literacy test is very superficial in any case.

GEORGE LEWIS MACKINTOSH, D. D.,
President Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind.

CAN NOT RESPECT INTELLIGENCE OF MAN WHO MAKES LITERACY TEST OF FITNESS.

I am not opposed to a liberal immigration policy.

I do not believe that the reading test is a fair measure for the determination of an immigrant's desirability. I can not respect the intelligence of the man who can make literacy the test of fitness, and I am driven to suspect some underlying motive—which he is ashamed to make public—in the statesman who would make this test the law.

If the literacy test should be enacted, I believe in making the exceptions as numerous as possible, and first on the list of exceptions should be placed those who flee to us from religious and political persecutions.

BERNARD J. OTTING, S. J.,
President St. Louis University, St. Louis, Mo.

TOTALLY OPPOSED TO BURNETT BILL.

I am totally opposed to Mr. BURNETT'S bill now before Congress for the restriction of immigration by means of a literacy test. There are a number of respects in which we can not be too strict in admitting immigrants, but some of the least desirable persons who come to this country to live are persons who would have a quite abundant entrance so far as any literacy test is concerned.

With reference to the first question, as to whether I am opposed to a liberal immigration policy, I would say that the question is, to my mind, a little vague. I am in favor of a policy which is very strict in requiring physical and moral fitness and a sane attitude toward government as such.

I would answer the second question that you ask in the negative. A reading test is not a fair measure for determining the desirability of an immigrant. There should be, in my judgment, some such test before naturalization.

As to the third question, my position will be plain from what I have already said. Least of all, should well-disposed, industrious, and physically healthy people who are suffering religious and political persecution be hindered from entering our country. We would be very recreant to the spirit and purpose of the forefathers of this Nation should we adopt such a test.

Dr. D. E. JENKINS,
President University of Omaha, Omaha, Nebr.

I hasten to say that I am most emphatically a believer in a liberal immigration policy and I do not believe that a reading test should be applied in any case. It is not the proper way of determining who are undesirable immigrants.

Dr. THOMAS MCCLELLAND,
President Knox College, Galesburg, Ill.

I do not believe a reading test for determining the desirability of an immigrant is a proper measure, and I do not believe immigrants fleeing from religious and political persecution ought to be subjected to a literary test.

Dr. A. W. HARRIS,
President Northwestern University, Chicago, Ill.

I am not opposed to a liberal immigration policy. I believe, however, that such restrictions should be imposed as would prevent persons who are disqualified for life and work in our country, on moral and physical grounds, from entering the United States.

I do not believe that a reading test is a fair one of the desirability of an immigrant. Moreover, it involves complications that I think make a proper application ineffective. Many of the immigrants of comparatively high intelligence are the ones that are the least fitted for the privileges and liberties of our country.

Dr. DAVID R. BOYD,
President University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, N. Mex.

"INADEQUATE AND MISLEADING."

I am not in favor of a literacy test for immigrants to this country. It would be inadequate and misleading, often resulting in the exclusion of worthy and desirable additions to our population. There may be other causes than inability to read and write, such as a criminal record or a diseased condition of the body, which might make exclusion appropriate. But I believe that these things should be attacked openly and directly, and that effective means should be devised, if they do not already exist, to keep out really undesirable persons. Illiteracy, while regrettable, is not necessarily an indication of the lack of those fundamental virtues which contribute to the making of a good citizen.

GEORGE S. DAVIS, LL. D.,
President of the Normal College of the City of New York.

RESTRICTION UNAMERICAN.

I am convinced that the effort to restrict immigration by a literacy test is un-American as well as unwise. The training of the will to right conduct is more important for American citizenship than a literary training, and thousands of desirable citizens have received training of the will through religion and the influence of virtuous homes, though the opportunity for even elementary education in the schools has been denied them. Virtue is not dependent on letters, and virtue, not letters, is the right foundation for American citizenship.

JOHN CAVANAUGH, C. S. C.,
President University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.

HOPES BURNETT BILL WILL NOT PREVAIL.

Your letter inclosing a press sheet on the subject of immigration and making certain inquiries of me as to my position in the matter has come to hand this morning. I am able to reply at once, because for many years I have held a very consistent position upon the matter.

I am greatly in favor of a liberal immigration policy. I regret very much the pressure from different parts of the country to restrict immigration unduly. I believe that if our present laws relating to undesirable immigrants are enforced, they will keep out of the country all whom we ought to exclude. I do not believe that a reading test is a fair measure for determining the desirability of an immigrant. Some of the best immigrants who ever came to America could not read when they landed, but settled down into helpful American lives. I do not believe that a literacy test should be enacted. I am perfectly willing at all times and in all places to declare this view.

Hoping that any bill to this effect will not prevail with Congress, I am,

STEPHEN M. NEWMAN, D. D.,
President Howard University, Washington, D. C.

LITERACY TEST NOT A FAIR MEASURE.

In answer to yours of the 14th instant, I will say that I am very strongly in favor of an immigration policy which will exclude a large number of persons who are not now kept out of this country, namely, criminals, the physically and morally unfit. I am aware that the present laws are supposed to exclude such persons, but as a matter of fact, many of them find entrance into the United States under the present laws.

Second, I do not believe that a reading test is a fair measure for determining the desirability of an immigrant. It seems to me that the physical and moral qualifications are far more important.

Third, I believe that immigrants fleeing from religious and political persecutions should not be subjected to a literary test should such test be enacted.

HERBERT L. STETSON, D. D.,
President Kalamazoo College, Kalamazoo, Mich.

LIBERAL IMMIGRATION—"HUMANE AND GOOD POLICY."

In reply to your questionnaire on the subject of immigration, I beg to say, first, that I am in favor of a liberal immigration policy, particularly toward that class of immigrants who from their antecedents or through any influence that can be brought to bear upon them, can be disseminated over the country and induced to settle upon land as over against the tendency to gather in cities.

Second, the literacy test is of some value, but it is not a fair measure of the desirability of an immigrant. It should not be the sole test. There are many valuable men and women who could be of service in this country who possibly can not read and write.

I am aware of the variety of opinions on the subject of immigration and grant that we have perhaps too many foreigners of inferior grade in our large cities, but in the country there is a constant need of laborers, both men and women, and that is particularly true through the great central portions of the United States. These people have to give that which we need and they need that which we have to give. It seems to me humane and in the end a good policy to make this exchange.

WINTHROP E. STONE, LL. D.,
President Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.

"MELTING POT" DOES ITS WORK EFFECTIVELY AND ADVANTAGEOUSLY.

I am not opposed to a liberal immigration policy except to the extent of believing that we should ascertain whether our immigrants be honest and healthy. It does not seem to me that a reading test is a fair measure for determining the desirability of an immigrant; nor do I think that such a test, if enacted, should be imposed on immigrants fleeing from religious or political persecution. I used to incline toward a belief in much stricter immigration laws, but upon becoming acquainted with the sons and daughters of possibly objectionable immigrants, I saw that the "melting pot" does its work effectively and advantageously.

JAMES A. B. SCHERER, LL. D.,
President Throop College of Technology, Pasadena, Cal.

Mr. REED. I also desire to place in the RECORD editorials from the St. Louis Republic, of January 9 and January 13, 1915, entitled "Never a worse time" and "The illiterate immigrant."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The editorials referred to are as follows:

NEVER A WORSE TIME.

The manifest unfairness of the immigration bill as it came from the Senate with its amendment exempting Belgian farmers from the literacy test was not overlooked in the House, where the amendment has been rejected; but by eliminating that discrimination the House merely intensifies the cruelty of the bill, which now shuts the door of America in the face of every war-cursed illiterate in Europe, Belgians and all. No matter what their suffering may have been, no matter how unjustly they may have been treated, no matter how useful, how good, or how strong they may be, the bill as it stands says to every European who can not read, "You must stay out." Is that typical of American character or are we represented by the thousands of generous people who are now helping to load ships with food and clothing for the victims of the war without regard to their nationality, their station in life, or the fortune which gave them a schooling or denied it?

Once again the Republic insists that there never was a worse time for the passage of a restrictive immigration law in the history of this country than now. Immigration is at a low ebb and the war will keep it so. If there are any of the oppressed of Europe who can escape from the zone of war to this country, whether they be Belgian or Turk, they ought to be permitted to come. There will be time enough to frame a just immigration law when the distress in Europe is less and conditions in this country favor a clearer vision.

THE ILLITERATE IMMIGRANT.

There is a foolish streak somewhere in the wisest man, and the same thing is true of legislative bodies. The present Congress will long be remembered as the most efficient lawmaking body that has sat in Washington in 50 years, but in passing an immigration bill imposing a literacy test it has temporarily mislaid its judgment.

I takes three things to make an immigrant out of a man and send him across the sea to a new land with a strange language. He must have a good deal of courage, or he would never make the venture; a good deal of thrift, or he could never get the money together working at the wages paid in the countries that furnish us immigrants; a good deal of dissatisfaction with his surroundings, or he would stay in them. We only get discontented or ambitious people—how discontented or ambitious we may judge by asking ourselves how much it would take to induce us to emigrate to a land of strange customs and strange language.

Now, the literacy question in connection with immigration reduces itself to this: Does it pay us to shut out the kind of man who immigrates simply because he has not had a chance to learn to read?

Here is a Magyar, born and brought up in a little village in the midst of the great Hungarian plain. He can neither read nor write; three-quarters of the people in his village are in the same case. He has a desire for better things; the boy walks to Budapest and gets a job unloading steamers on the quays of the Danube, under the shadow of the great castle on the rock. He eats the coarsest fare; his feet are bare and his legs, too, up to the short trunks of coarse blue cloth which cover his thighs. Here, on the quay, he hears about America from a man whose brother is in St. Louis. He forms a mighty resolve. He begins to save money, a few heller at a time. It is the work of years; he falls ill with fever, and some of his precious money goes in the weeks of weakness that follow the discharge from the hospital. Finally, however, he steps proudly abroad the ship at Fiume bound for America.

What makes America rich? Our greatest wealth is in the spirits and souls of men. We may put inspectors at Ellis Island who will accurately determine the health and physical force of every immigrant, count his money, and test his knowledge of books. But all this only touches the surface. It takes no account of the invisible riches of faith, hope, purpose—the vision that sees things hidden beneath the horizon, the soul that clings to an ideal in spite of the handicap of ignorance and poverty and lack of opportunity.

In the old days, when children at school "spoke pieces," we used to memorize extracts from the utterances of great Americans who praised this Nation as "a refuge for the oppressed from all nations." It is an old-fashioned conception perhaps, but the Republic is glad to go back to it. Our modern statesmen are willing to have America still the refuge for the oppressed among all nations, provided, however, that the oppression has never proceeded far enough to deprive them of the opportunity to learn to read. If a man has been the victim of oppression, to that extent they will none of him.

The proposition to exclude immigrants who can not read is snobbish and un-American and undemocratic. The bill containing it ought to be vetoed. The sons and grandsons of European illiterates who were such because they never had opportunity to learn are to-day coming from American colleges and universities. One of the things that lured those men on was hope of schooling for their children. The Republic is heartily glad that they, so poor in learning, so rich in self-sacrifice, and the vision of better things, were not excluded from the "land of promise" they labored against such difficulties and discouragements to possess.

Mr. REED. I also desire to insert as a part of my remarks an article from the New York Times of December 12, 1914, the author of the article being Mr. Max J. Kohler.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

EFFECTS OF THE WAR ON IMMIGRATION—HISTORY OF OTHER WARS SHOWS THAT INFLUX SHOULD NOT BE ABNORMALLY HEAVY WHEN PEACE COMES.

The theory that after the close of the present war we will at once have an unprecedentedly heavy immigration to the United States has been given wide currency recently, particularly by Congressman BURNETT, chairman of the House Committee on Immigration, in order to secure the passage of the Burnett-Dillingham bill, containing a literacy test and other restrictive provisions, but while at first blush this prediction seems reasonable a closer study of conditions exposes its fallacy.

The argument has had wide publicity to counteract the obvious fact that immigration has now practically ceased, on account of the war, and that, therefore, new and convincing reasons now exist for not enacting the literacy test which had been vetoed by Presidents Cleveland and Taft, and which President Wilson expressed disapproval of during the last presidential campaign. It would seem that Congress might properly wait, even with consideration of this measure, till facts attest the correctness of the theory that immigration will become abnormally heavy. But while, of course, immigration will approximate more closely to normal figures after the war is ended important factors restraining it will continue to be potent. First of all, immigration has for its nucleus the classes of military age now engaged in active military service whose numbers the war is enormously decreasing by death, wounding, and illness. For example, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, less than 6 per cent of the immigrants admitted were over 45 years of age, and it is well known that the alien over that age who does not receive an unfavorable medical certificate calculated to exclude him under our strict medical examinations is rare indeed, even aside from the fact that older people are not generally disposed to migrate to new lands.

A reduction in the number of adult males under 45 coming over enormously reduces also the number of wives and minor children or aged parents or grandparents ordinarily accompanying them or apt to be sent for by them, so that the ranks of potential immigrants are at once enormously reduced.

Next we must consider the fact that the immigrants are not recruited in general from the lowest classes abroad, economically or from the point of view of intelligence, as the Immigration Commission demonstrated. A relatively considerable amount of money is essential to defray the expenses of the journey and to exhibit and use on arrival, and the war has enormously impoverished the ranks of the possible immigrants, making it impossible for them to emigrate. This factor is strongly augmented by the fact that a large majority of immigrants are normally encouraged to come to join relatives and friends already here, who normally look out for them, but who know that economic conditions here now prevent them from holding out such encouragement to prospective arrivals. For example, the panic of 1907 caused a decrease in the number of immigrants from 1,285,349 for the year ending June 30, 1907, to 782,870 for the next year.

Moreover, the wounded and widows and orphans likely to become a public charge are of course excluded by the provisions of the present law, and, despite sympathy for victims of this terrible warfare, the immigration officers err quite regularly against the immigrants by excluding them rather than in their favor by admitting doubtful cases. Further, if the promises supposed to have been made to persons fleeing from religious and political persecution are realized, as, for instance, Russia's alleged promises to the Poles and the Jews, one of the chief incentives to immigration will be removed.

If we examine historical precedents since our Government began to keep statistics of immigration, in 1820, we shall find that they bear out these views. Two European wars since then have been waged which might have appreciably affected our immigration—the Crimean War (1853–1856) and the Franco-Prussian War (1870–1). As to the former, Mr. Stanley C. Johnson, in his able recently published History of Emigration from the United Kingdom to North America, points out that the Crimean War materially reduced British emigration during its course, the figures for 1852, antedating the war, of 255,015 being reduced to 209,154 for the year 1857, following its close, instead of being increased. Our own American figures for the two years in question are to the same effect and exhibit a fall from a total of 371,603 in the year 1852 to 251,306 in 1857, and only 123,126 in 1858. As regards the Franco-Prussian War, the figures for the year 1869 of 352,768 sank in 1871 to 321,350, and were 404,806 459,803, and 313,339 in the following years. It is interesting to observe that Commissioner Howe, of Ellis Island, has correctly gauged such influences in denying the accuracy of a prediction of a large increase after the war. He is reported as supplementing the factors above referred to as follows:

"The lure of America for the immigrants will be less strong, compared with the immediate opportunity to be found at home. * * * When the war is over each country will make heroic efforts to recover lost ground and greater inducements than ever will be offered to keep citizens at home. * * * It is safe to assume * * * that the great countries now engaged in war will bend every energy, once the conflict is over, to give every citizen within their boundaries a job and keep him at it."

While even our sympathy for the suffering ought not to sway us to admit persons properly excludable under the existing law, it would be unspeakably cruel at present to establish unnecessary and ill-advised new restrictions against desirables seeking an asylum here after sufferabroad from this horrible combat. The exemption of religious refugees from the illiteracy test is so badly phrased in the Burnett-Dillingham bill as to be practically worthless, although alien illiteracy is often a direct result of foreign discriminatory educational laws and regulations.

Mr. REED. I desire also to insert a very powerful editorial in opposition to the literacy test which appeared in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of January 12, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

THE LITERACY TEST.

It is gratifying to note that the President affirmed to the delegation of Chicago women who protested against the literacy test in the immigration bill his opposition to that measure.

The opposition stands on solid American ground. The bill is un-American. It is contrary to the fundamental principle of liberty and justice upon which the Republic is founded. It is contrary to the spirit of America.

The bill in detail is full of gross faults. It is difficult of enforcement and would work many hardships upon innocent and worthy immigrants. It would divorce husband from wife and separate parents from children. It proceeds upon the wrong theory in that it makes mere ignorance of letters—the fruit of oppression—the test. The true tests are character and industry. Men without education may be good workmen and good citizens. They may be eager to obtain the educational advantages of which they have been deprived by social or political oppression. They may be eager to have their children enjoy the advantages they lack. Honesty and industry and good intent are the real tests of the fitness of immigrants to gain the chance to enjoy the better conditions and opportunities offered by America as compared with many other countries.

Some of the richest contributions to American resources and achievements have come from uneducated peasants from Europe or their immediate descendants.

The pending bill denies the right of men to freedom of movement in the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness—of better social, industrial, and political conditions. It will be a sad day for the world when America furls the banner of asylum for the oppressed by making the effect of oppression the bar to liberty.

The measure was conceived in racial prejudice and born of intolerance which are obnoxious to American principles and institutions and which should be eliminated, not nourished by law.

The adoption of the bill by the Senate discredited the sincerity as well as the Americanism of the Senate majority. Is the House also ruled by hypocrisy, intolerance, and prejudice?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have taken much of the Senate's time in discussing various phases of the immigration bill. I desire, in conclusion, to say that I am now and always have been in favor of every test being applied which will keep out of this country people who are unfitted for citizenship—unfitted because of any reason, whether it be race or the condition of the immigrant's health or the condition of the immigrant's morals.

I am unalterably opposed and always have been unalterably opposed to the promotion of immigration by those selfish interests which bring to this country under contract hordes of people whose advent here under such contract means the beating down of the standard of American wages. Those contracts are not only unfair to the American laborer, but they are unfair to the immigrant himself, because they are made with the immigrant when he has no opportunity to be advised with reference to the conditions of living or the conditions of labor or the cost of living in this country; he being unadvised and being in ignorance regarding these important matters is called upon to contract with shrewd, keen, and possibly dishonest men who are advised.

There are many other arguments against contract labor; there are many arguments equally strong against the promotion of immigration by steamship and other transportation companies. No one can desire more than do I that all those methods shall absolutely cease; no one is more willing than I to carefully guard our portals against the arrival here of those who are diseased and those who belong to indolent, nonsupporting classes. I am ready to go beyond that and to exclude every race of men who, as a race, are incapable of appreciating

American institutions and of becoming a part of the political, commercial, and social life of this Republic; but I am unwilling to exclude a man or a woman from the right to enter this land simply because, through oppression and tyranny, they have been denied the opportunity to secure an education. That is not the proper test. I have placed in the RECORD the opinion of great educators in opposition to this test, and at their head is the President of the United States, as evidenced by the letter I have read into the RECORD.

In regard to the literacy test and the reason for its having been placed in this bill let there be no possible doubt. The committee give us their reason in their report, and the reason they give is that they have placed the test in the bill not for the purpose of excluding a class of people unfitted for American citizenship but because of a desire to cut down and restrict immigration as an original proposition. I desire, Mr. President, to call attention to this language from the report:

> The bill contains one provision intended directly to restrict immigration, although said provision is also, incidentally and to a certain extent, selective in its operation. The "illiteracy test" has been adopted as the best device so far suggested for reducing immigration where it most needs to be reduced.

Mr. President, I am well aware that this bill will pass, and I do not desire to further detain the Senate. All I can do is to protest against this un-American and unjust policy. It is at war with every tradition of our country; it is at war with every tradition of the Democratic Party. As I have already stated, the Democratic national committee sent out tens of thousands—yes, hundreds of thousands—of copies of the letter of Mr. Wilson, and those letters were placed in the hands of the foreign-born population of the United States by the Democratic national committee in order to give them assurance that this restrictive legislation would not be adopted. I do not claim that the committee had the authority to bind the conscience or control the vote of any Senator; but I do say that when these letters were sent out to the voters and when I, at least, was a party to the sending of them out, so far as I am concerned, I feel myself bound not only so far as my action is concerned, but I feel impelled to call the attention of Democratic Senators to the fact.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the decisive vote before, I will not demand a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ayes have it, and the conference report is agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a brief statement regarding amendment No. 15, which was eliminated by the conference report and which I did not explain the other day. I will not ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

> As amendment No. 15 was discussed at some length on December 10 and again on December 15 before it was placed in the act by the Senate, and as the vote to adopt it was 45 yeas and 6 nays a brief explanation to the Senate as to why the House conferees thought the Senate should recede thereon and as to why the Senate conferees agreed to so recommend seems to be in order.
> It will be recalled that the words "mental or manual" were inserted in the definition of contract laborer in response to a recommendation from the Commissioner General of Immigration and the Secretary of Labor, their object evidently being to make the language of the law perfectly clear and have the new statute fully accomplish the purpose of the existing one. It is understood that the department's difficulty in this regard arose from the handing down over four years ago by the Attorney General of an opinion restricting the operation of the statute to laborers engaged in occupations in which manual elements predominate over mental. The conference committee's recommendation is not due to concurrence in the construction of the law which limits its operation to manual laborers, but is due solely to the belief that the definition of the term "contract laborer" as it stands in the existing law and is repeated in the pending measure is clearly to the contrary effect without the insertion of the words "mental or manual."

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Lane	Poindexter
Borah	Goff	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell
Burton	Gore	Lee, Md.	Robinson
Camden	Gronna	Lippitt	Saulsbury
Clapp	Hitchcock	Lodge	Shafroth
Crawford	Hollis	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard
Culberson	James	Nelson	Sherman
Dillingham	Johnson	Norris	Simmons
du Pont	Jones	Page	Smith, Md.
Fletcher	Kern	Perkins	Smoot
Stephenson	Thompson	Vardaman	Williams
Sterling	Thornton	Walsh	Works
Stone	Tillman	Weeks
Swanson	Townsend	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 19422, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is at the bottom of page 59, where the committee proposes to insert——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that that amendment may be passed over for the present. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] desires to say something in regard to it, and I observe he is not present in the Chamber at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 60, after line 7, to insert:

> For repairing public crematory, $2,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the amendment on page 57, lines 13 to 18, inclusive, was passed over?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. As I understand, it was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think, then, it ought to be reconsidered. I find by reference to the statutes that the act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia enumerates the contagious diseases, including leprosy, and that that matter is placed by statute entirely in the hands of the health officer of the District of Columbia. It seems to me that if, in the face of that statute, we now place this particular matter in the hands of the United States Public Health Service there will be found to be a conflict of authority.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that if that is the case we were led astray in the information given us, which was to the effect that there is at present no such authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. We were; but it is included in this statute as one of the contagious diseases, and is entirely within the jurisdiction of the health officer.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then will the Senator make the motion to reconsider?

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I ask that the amendment may be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Courts," on page 62, line 9, after the word "fees," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$3,250," so as to make the clause read:

> For witness fees, $3,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 15, after the words "In all," to strike out "$13,500" and insert "$13,750," so as to make the clause read:

> In all, $13,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Courts and prisons," on page 64, line 9, after the words "Attorney General," to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$90,000," so as to make the clause read:

> Support of convicts: For support, maintenance, and transportation of convicts transferred from the District of Columbia; for expenses of shipping remains of deceased convicts to their homes in the United States, and for expenses of interment of unclaimed remains of deceased convicts; for expenses incurred in identifying and pursuing escaped convicts and for rewards for their recapture; to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Charities and corrections," subhead "Reformatories and correctional institutions," in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of the Washington Asylum and Jail, on page 67, line 2, after "$1,200," to insert "operator of X-ray machine, $600; pathologist, $600; anæsthetist, $300," and in line 3, after the words "in all," to strike out "$27,010" and insert "$28,510," so as to read:

Registered pharmacist, who shall act as hospital clerk, $720; gardener, $540; seamstress, and housekeeper, at $300 each; laundryman, $600; assistant laundryman, $365; 3 laundresses, at $360 each; 2 chambermaids, 3 waiters, and 7 ward maids, at $180 each; temporary labor, not to exceed $1,200; operator of X-ray machine, $600; pathologist, $600; anæsthetist, $300; in all $28,510.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator having the bill in charge who has attended to the work of the operator of the X-ray machine for the Washington Asylum and Jail in the past?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I can answer that question. I will say to the Senator that they have had no operator of an X-ray machine, nor have they had an X-ray machine. What is done now with the poor, unfortunate people who are taken to the hospital is this: If a man is brought there supposedly with a broken hip or other broken bone, a gunshot wound, or something of the kind, they have to place him in an ambulance and haul him a mile or more to have him examined at the Emergency Hospital, and then take him back to the place from whence he started. The purpose of this amendment is, as the Senator will notice, in line 12, to furnish an X-ray machine for these very purposes and a man to operate it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There has been none in the past; but there is to be an X-ray machine, and therefore they will have to have somebody to operate it.

Mr. SMOOT. I knew there had been none in the past, and I wanted to know where the work had been done.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We have appropriated an amount of money to buy one, and, of course, it is necessary to have a man to operate it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that of course I knew that the bill provided by amendment for the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine, and $1,000 for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With reference to that latter item in regard to a pathologist, I want to say to the Senator the young surgeons out there have given their services for nothing, and in order to have a pathologist, who is a man very much needed, they go down in their own pockets and pay him themselves in addition to furnishing their services free to the Government. I have been out there a number of times and have taken a good deal of interest in it, and I say in all frankness to the Senator those unfortunates out there are not treated as well as cattle in my State. It was with that end in view that these amendments were added to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with the consideration of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is, to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business and proceed with the appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. With the understanding that that will come up immediately upon the conclusion of the reading of the bill for action upon the committee amendments, I will have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is the request—that it be temporarily laid aside and we proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. JONES. And there will be no objection to taking it up, as I have suggested?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is the understanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside by agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senator from Oregon to understand that all I inquired about was as to where this work had been done in the past.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At the Emergency Hospital.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly do not object to the provision for the purchase of an X-ray machine and $1,000 for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment for the Washington Asylum and Jail. I sincerely hope when the bill comes into conference these items will remain in the bill. I understand they were presented to the House, and the House refused to insert them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 11, after the word "apparatus," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$5,750, $2,750 of which sum to be used for the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine and $1,000 for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment," so as to make the clause read:

For repairs to buildings, plumbing, painting, lumber, hardware, cement, lime, oil, tools, cars, tracks, steam heating and cooking apparatus, $5,750, $2,750 of which sum to be used for the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine and $1,000 for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 21, after the date "1906," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000," so as to make the clause read:

Payments to destitute women and children: For payment to beneficiaries named in section 3 of "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906, $6,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia, on itemized vouchers duly audited and approved by the auditor of said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 11, after the words "Washington Asylum and Jail," to strike out "$123,510" and insert "$129,760," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Washington Asylum and Jail, $129,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for Home for Aged and Infirm, on page 69, after line 5, to insert:

For purchase and installation of two electric generators, $4,875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 7, to insert:

For purchase of material and erection of permanent fence, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 10, after the words "Home for Aged and Infirm," to strike out "$45,432" and insert "$50,807," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Home for Aged and Infirm, $50,807.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to revert to page 67, the items in lines 11 to 14. I wish to say to the Senator having the bill in charge that I doubt very much whether the amendment which has been agreed to will carry the appropriation he desires and that we all desire. Beginning in line 9 it reads:

For repairs to buildings, plumbing, painting, lumber, hardware, cement, lime, oil, tools, cars, tracks, steam heating and cooking apparatus, $5,750.

After a direct appropriation for all these items you undertake to provide:

Two thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars of which sum to be used for the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine and $1,000 for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment.

It seems to me the amendment ought to be in a different form; that is, for repairs to building, plumbing, painting, lumber, hardware, cement, lime, oil, tools, cars, tracks, steam heating, and cooking apparatus, $2,000; for the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine, $2,750; for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment, $1,000. I think $2,000 ought to be appropriated for the items specifically enumerated in lines 9, 10, and 11.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have no objection to that change.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, let the amendment in lines 12, 13, and 14 read in this way:

For the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine, $2,750; for the purchase and installation of pathological equipment, $1,000.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have no objection to that. Certainly it does not alter the intention.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not alter the intention; but I think it alters the construction that may be placed upon the amendment as it now reads. I move that the vote by which the amendment on page 67, lines 11 to 14, was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment striking out $2,000 and inserting $5,750, so that $2,000 will remain as the appropriation in the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to insert the following item:

For the purchase and installation of an X-ray machine, $2,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move also to insert:

For purchase and installation of pathological equipment, $1,000; in all, $5,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I understand that would be in line with the objection which the Senator from Utah made, if you aggregate the amount at the end. Each should be a separate item.

Mr. SMOOT. They are specifically provided for and the whole paragraph ends "in all, $5,750."

Mr. BURTON. That is for the Washington Asylum and Jail.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it pertains to the Washington Asylum and Jail.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think that the words "in all" are unnecessary. I move to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will read as suggested, without the words "in all."

The next amendment was, in the items for National Training School for Girls, on page 70, after line 8, to insert:

For repairing roofs, gutters, and spouting, administration building, preparatory building, male dormitory, and stable, $220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 11, to insert:

For remodeling fire escapes and approaches thereto, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 14, after the words "National Training School for Girls," to strike out "$25,380" and insert "$25,850," so as to make the clause read:

In all, National Training School for Girls, $25,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical charities," on page 71, after line 7, to insert:

Toward the construction of a new building for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, erected on the site purchased and owned by said hospital, $50,000.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill what emergency, if any, requires the appropriation at this time of $50,000 for the construction of a new building for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital and $500,000 for the establishment of a new or additional hospital as provided at the bottom of page 72.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator this is an emergency hospital, and the other is a somewhat different hospital in a part of the city that is farther off.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think the Senator understood my inquiry. I want to know what emergency exists at this time for making these large appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that there has been a large amount of money raised by certain people of the District of Columbia for this Emergency Hospital, and that there is a large sum of money that is due on it. They feel that it is impossible for them to raise the money that is due, and they have come to the Government to help them in their distress, in order that the hospital may be paid for. It is a matter that appealed to us. We felt that they were doing a good work and that they ought to be encouraged, as they had already raised a large amount of money themselves, and they have outstanding now, if I am not mistaken, about $140,000 indebtedness upon the hospital. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] if that is the amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is about $161,000 all told.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. One hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars. They have raised a very large amount of money, and we felt that we ought to encourage them, and that it was our duty to take care of this Emergency Hospital.

Mr. GALLINGER. There has been invested up to the present time about $257,000 in the hospital, and the hospital is erected. It is not furnished, and this large indebtedness is upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They are doing a good work, and we felt that this money could well be appropriated to help them continue to carry on that good work.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not doubt that all hospitals in the District of Columbia are engaged in a good and necessary work. The fact that they are indebted——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Senator wants to understand the situation correctly. This is an old hospital that has been in operation certainly during the entire time I have served in this body. It was located on Fifteenth Street. The hospital has been dispossessed of its property by the United States Government for the purpose of building a Government structure on that site. The Government paid the hospital for the property perhaps a fair amount. They either had to abandon their work or erect a new hospital. They started a propaganda, a 30-day propaganda, here with the intention of raising $300,000. As a matter of fact they raised $120,000 odd in contributions from citizens, and other donations have been made.

They are now at a time when they must of necessity occupy the hospital, the Government having asked them how soon they can vacate the old hospital building. They find themselves without money even to furnish their new hospital; and, in view of the fact that the building is constructed and ready for occupancy, and that it is doing this most excellent work in an emergency way not only for the people of the District of Columbia but for people from the various States who come here and suffer accidents or are taken suddenly ill, we felt that we might well give them this help. That is the story of the hospital.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think that the conditions are such as that a postponement of this appropriation until some time when the Treasury conditions are better than they are now would not be just as well?

Mr. GALLINGER. I would exceedingly dislike to see that hospital dismantled. A friend of mine was in the old hospital the other day, and he found six patients in one room. They are doing a good work. They have got to vacate those premises. The new hospital is actually constructed, ready for occupancy, and unless they get this help they can not even furnish it.

Mr. THOMAS. That being the case, I shall not oppose the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 25, after the words "resident physician," to strike out "$480" and insert "$600"; on page 72, line 8, before the word "each" to strike out "$180" and insert "$240"; and in line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$18,120" and insert "$18,360," so as to make the clause read:

Tuberculosis Hospital: Superintendent, $1,800; resident physician, $600; pharmacist, and clerk, superintendent of nurses, and engineer, at $720 each; pathologist, $300; matron, dietician, chief cook, assistant engineer, laundryman, and 7 graduate nurses, at $600 each; assistant cooks—1, $360; 2 at $240 each; assistant engineer, $480; elevator conductor, $300; 3 laundresses, at $240 each; farmer, laborer, night watchman, 3 orderlies, and assistant laundryman, at $360 each; 2 ward maids, at $240 each; 4 servants, at $240 each; in all, $18,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 18, after the words "Tuberculosis Hospital," to strike out "$52,120" and insert "$52,360," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Tuberculosis Hospital, $52,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 18, to insert:

Gallinger Hospital: Toward the construction of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings is hereby fixed at $500,000: Provided, That said hospital shall be constructed with a view to making future additions, as the exigencies may demand.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman having the bill in charge whether this is a new construction?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is entirely a new construction.

Mr. THOMAS. What exigency now exists for this very large appropriation at this time?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I would ask the Senator if he would take the time and the pains to go out to the Municipal Hospital in this city I think that would answer the question. I think there is hardly a city in this country that has such poor accommodations for the poor and afflicted as the city of Washington.

It appears to me to be almost criminal that the poor and the afflicted of the city of Washington should have no better accommodations than are afforded them by the Municipal Hospital we now have. I beg of the Senator to go and look at it, as some of the rest of us have done.

This hospital, I will say to the Senator, is to be erected upon ground which belongs to the Government, a part of which is now occupied by the Tuberculosis Hospital. There are, I think, in the neighborhood of 20 acres. It is a most admirable place for it. It will be separated from the Tuberculosis Hospital by a street which is to go through it.

This is a matter that has been pending for some while, and we have been endeavoring to secure an appropriation for this purpose. I am satisfied there is not a Senator in the Senate who, if he will go and look at the hospital that the Government now has for the purpose of taking care of the poor and afflicted of this city, will not find that it is as inadequate as would be a hospital in any city with a population of 10,000 people in this country. We felt that this hospital is of all things a great necessity, and that it should be started at once.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I of course accept the representations made by the Senator concerning the undesirable conditions of the municipal hospital in this city. I assume, however, that those conditions having been the outgrowth of the administration of the affairs of the hospital very largely, and that while they are not as desirable as they might be or as we would have them, the emergency is not sufficiently great to justify at this time this large additional appropriation.

The aggregate of the appropriations this year, as was the case last year, will be used as the measure or standard by which the extravagance or the lack of it of the present administration is to be governed. Indeed, a great many gentlemen in both Houses who favor an expenditure of this kind would be among those criticizing the aggregate result of all of our appropriations.

I do not want to consent to the making of an appropriation of this size and of this character until the revenues of the Government are in a better condition than they are now, unless the condition is so exigent as to make it a matter of absolute necessity.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator if there is anything of absolute necessity in this city it is this hospital. I consider it a crying shame. There are a lot of buildings dotted about in various places with no convenience whatever. The fact is that the people there hardly receive as much attention as do animals in hospitals that are provided for them in various places of that kind. I would only ask the Senator to go and see it. I am satisfied if he would go there and see the buildings, see how inappropriate they are, he would not for one moment oppose this amendment, but would be in favor of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that this question was thoroughly gone into a year ago.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I think it was then defeated, but not in this body.

Mr. SMOOT. Not in this body, but there was this provision placed in the act——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We appropriated $15,000.

Mr. SMOOT (reading)—

For the preparation of plans and specifications for the erection of hospital buildings, including power house and domestic-service building, for municipal purposes, to be located and erected on the site now owned by the District of Columbia at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, and hereafter to be known as Gallinger Hospital, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary

A year ago we thought that it would be very unwise to appropriate $500,000 for the full requirement of the erection of the buildings; but we did feel, and so did the House, that there should be an appropriation made of $15,000 for the preparation of plans and specifications for the erection of the buildings hereafter. That was agreed to by both Houses and became a law.

Mr. President, I became interested in this matter after I had visited the present buildings. As I said a year ago, there is not a city in Colorado of 5,000 people that would be content to have a hospital in the class of buildings that we have our hospitals in here in Washington in many cases. If there is anything that is required for the improvement of the condition of the District of Columbia, in my opinion it is the erection of a hospital. In this bill we do not provide for the $500,000. We appropriate $150,000 for the purposes named in the bill.

I know the Senator will not charge me with trying to be extravagant. I have tried to cut the appropriations wherever it was possible, and I have made what protest I could against appropriations that I thought were extravagant; but I do think, for humanity's sake, for the respect of the District, that this item ought to be taken care of in this appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I would be one of the last Members of this body to dispute the last statement of the Senator from Utah. I think he is one of the Senators here who has striven and is striving for economy. But he is also one of the severest critics of Democratic extravagance. He has undertaken heretofore, with statistics at his command and with which he has familiarized himself, to present a very severe indictment of the present administration, and has contrasted the aggregate of their appropriations for different Government purposes with those of preceding Congresses, the conclusion being, of course, favorable to the former.

Now, here is an appropriation of $500,000, ultimately, more than that needed, because it is provided that it "shall be constructed with a view to making future additions, as the exigencies may demand."

But I want to emphasize the fact that it is a large appropriation—an unusually large, amended appropriation—to a bill made by the committee of the Senate, and that in the total of appropriations made by this Congress we should at least receive credit for this increase of $500,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I never have made a criticism of small items.

Mr. THOMAS. No; but the Senator from Utah knows better than any other man on this floor that the aggregate of small items is what constitutes the increased expenditures.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but, Mr. President, they do not come in in hundred thousand dollar appropriations; they come in million dollar appropriations; and I did not criticize the increased appropriations under the present administration until after they had reached over a hundred million dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; these increases, while they sometimes appear in startlingly large amounts, are composed of the aggregate of a great many small amounts. Take this bill, for example. The increases which have been made both in the amounts reported from the House and in added amounts will, in the aggregate, be very considerably in excess of the House bill. So with every other appropriation bill that comes here. It is the multitude of small things added together that makes these enormous increases.

The Senator from Utah this morning objected to the introduction into the RECORD of a speech recently delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury, and made a statement at that time, with which I sympathize, that he was trying, so far as he could—and he has been doing so—to save this unnecessary expenditure of the people's money. He knows, I repeat, better than any other Senator upon this floor how the constant little increases of the expenditures of the Government make a tremendous and formidable showing against those who are responsible for them, when all the appropriations have been made and computed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on behalf of the Appropriations Committee, however, I want to say that many appropriation bills come here from the other House to which Members of the House know that amendments will have to be made increasing the amounts in the Senate of the United States; when they know that it is absolutely necessary that such increases must be made to the bills, I do not make any criticism upon this administration more than I do on past administrations as to that policy, because it has been the policy ever since I have been on the Appropriations Committee of this body.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is true, Mr. President, and it will continue to be true until our system of appropriations is radically changed.

Mr. SMOOT. I am willing for that.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to take this occasion to emphasize the fact that increased expenses of this Government are the natural and unavoidable outgrowth of a machinery whereby the appropriations are made which is not only antiquated but ought to be impossible. Real, genuine economy in public administration must find its genesis in our change of method, and regardless of whether the administration be Democratic or Republican.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am quite in sympathy with the statement which the Senator from Colorado has made, but I want to say in this connection that if I were going to economize in the expenses of the Government of the United States there are a thousand other ways in which to economize rather than to do it upon the item under consideration. If I were going to be extravagant with the money of the United States, it would be in just such items as this—to take care of the unfortunate sick who happen to be living in this District, over which we have absolute control.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator's statement does him credit, and I cheerfully join in the same expression. It is for that reason, very largely in view of what was said here, that I shall make no objection to this appropriation; but, as I said some time ago, I want it understood that, so far as I can do so, I shall call attention to these minor items in the hope that when the general review of this administration comes, as it will come, the responsibility for the expenditure of large amounts of money will be placed upon the shoulders which ought to bear it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Colorado has practically withdrawn his objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I have made no objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, the Senator has withdrawn at least his criticism of this particular item; but I feel it incumbent upon me to say merely a few words in reference to conditions at the Washington Asylum and Jail. It really ought not to be called the Washington Asylum and Jail, because it is not a jail; and, while it is a converted workhouse, the people who go there are not prisoners; they are simply unfortunate men and women, young and old, white and black, who are too poor to take care of themselves and have no friends who can take care of them.

I have had a good deal to do with eleemosynary institutions in my own State, and the duties which have devolved upon me have made it incumbent upon me to visit such institutions in other States. It has been my pleasure to go out and visit this institution more than once; and I say, in all candor and frankness, that I do not believe that there is an institution of this kind in the United States that is so discreditable to the Government of the United States as is this institution.

As I said a while ago, it is a converted workhouse; it is a place that formerly was used as a sort of reformatory institution and which from time to time has been changed, in name at least, to a hospital. I think it might more properly be called a cold and barren barn where the unfortunate people of Washington are compelled to be detained when they are sick. It would be practically impossible to undertake to repair that institution and to put it in any sort of proper shape whatsoever. In winter it is cold; it is heated from a central plant, but the windows and doors are so open that it is almost impossible to keep it in any sort of comfortable condition. In summer it is absolutely a disgrace to this community. I have been out there in the summer time, Mr. President; I have gone through the different wards and have seen patients there so enfeebled and so weak that they could not raise their hands to keep the flies off. The windows were partly open, the screen doors were neglected, and in some places where there should have been screens on windows and doors there were none at all.

I wish every Senator here could visit not only that institution but others of a kindred kind in the District of Columbia. Then, instead of undertaking to economize at the expense of humanity, Mr. President, they would economize in other directions, where moneys are recklessly expended in the District of Columbia in other departments of the Government.

I am simply adding my testimony from personal experience and from having visited this institution a number of times within the past year and having gone through it with the physician in charge; and I say that it is impossible to properly repair it and that we ought to appropriate money for the construction of a new hospital. Whenever an attempt has been made in the past, while I served on this committee, to undertake to raise money to improve this institution, the same cry of economy has been raised, with the result that they not only have not given them a comfortable house, which decency at least demands, but they do not give them enough to eat in the institution.

One Senator suggested that it was probably due to expensive administration of the institution; but an examination of the report and of the estimates which have been made here will disclose that the Congress of the United States has declined to give this institution enough money to support these people as they ought to be supported.

It would be very much better, Mr. President, to cut out all of these appropriations and buy enough of anesthesia to put them all into a perpetual and permanent sleep than to undertake to keep them as they are now kept there. I insist, in the cause of humanity, that this appropriation for the construction of a new hospital ought to be made without a single voice in the Senate being raised against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Child-caring institutions," on page 73, line 8, after "$1,200," to strike out "one $1,000" and insert "two at $1,000 each," and in line 10, after the words "in all," to strike out "$12,580" and insert "$13,580," so as to make the clause read:

For agent, $1,800; clerk, $1,200; placing and investigating officers—one $1,200, two at $1,000 each, six at $900 each; record clerk, $900; clerk, $720; messenger, $360; in all, $13,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 19, after the word "board," to strike out "$55,000" and insert "$65,000," so as to make the clause read:

For board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts of the District, and for temporary care of children pending investigation or while being transferred from place to place, with authority to pay not more than $1,500 to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control and not more than $300 for burial of children dying while under charge of the board, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 21, after the word "guardians," to strike out "$91,080" and insert "$102,080," so as to make the clause read:

In all, board of children's guardians, $102,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 14, to insert:

For new boiler, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 16, after the words "Industrial Home School," to strike out "$27,280" and insert "$29,280," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Industrial Home School, $29,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary homes," on page 76, after line 15, to insert:

Southern Relief Society: For care and maintenance of indigent and infirm men, women, and children under a contract to be made with the Southern Relief Society for the support of those under its care by the Board of Charities, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 20, to insert:

AID TO THE BLIND.

Aid Association for the Blind: For aid, maintenance, improvement of grounds, and purchase of mechanical equipment for the workshop of the Aid Association for the Blind, located at 3050 R Street NW., $5,000, said sum to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 2, to insert:

Columbia Polytechnic Institute: For the instruction and employment of the blind of the Columbia Polytechnic Institute who are actual residents of the District of Columbia, for the purchase and repair of a typesetting machine, stitching machine, and purchase and repair of machinery and tools which may be needed to equip a workshop for the blind of said District, $5,000, to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 17, to strike out:

Reformatory: For construction of roads, grading of sites, and other development work, $15,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the commissioners.

And insert:

Reformatory: For the construction and erection of a reformatory, on the site purchased therefor, under the provisions of the District act approved March 3, 1909, and acts amendatory thereto, including construction of roads, grading of sites, and other development work, superintendence, custody, clothing, guarding, care, employment, and support of prisoners; for identifying and pursuing escaped convicts and rewards for their recapture, provisions, subsistence, medicines, and hospital instruments, furniture, and quarters for guards and other employees and inmates; the purchase and maintenance of farm implements and live stock, seeds, and miscellaneous items, tools and equipment; transportation and the means of transportation; the maintenance and operation of means of transportation; fuel, supplies, and personal services, and all other necessary items, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $50,000: Provided, That whenever any person has been convicted of crime in any court in the District of Columbia and sentenced to imprisonment for more than one year by the court, the imprisonment may be in a penitentiary, or in the Reformatory of the District of Columbia, above referred to; and it shall be sufficient for the court to sentence the defendant to imprisonment in the penitentiary without specifying the particular prison or the reformatory, and the imprisonment shall be in such penitentiary or the reformatory as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall from time to time designate: Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby vested with jurisdiction over male and female prisoners from the time they are delivered into their custody or into the custody of their authorized superintendent, deputy, or deputies, and until such prisoners are released or discharged under due process of law: Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have all the power and authority now vested by existing law in the Attorney General to provide for the care, support, custody, transportation, employment, and maintenance of convicts sentenced to imprisonment by any court in the District of Columbia, and that the appropriation for the support of convicts authorized for the fiscal year 1916 shall be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The provisions of this paragraph shall take effect on and after July 1, 1915.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On behalf of the committee I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 81, line 12, after the words "District of Columbia," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as applying to the National Training School for Boys or the National Training School for Girls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge if this is also an entirely new institution or whether it is designed to take the place of some other institution found insufficient or for other reasons undesirable?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this institution has been already started.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while the Senator from Maryland is looking up the facts, I will say that this institution, embracing a tract of land of 1,500 acres, I think, in the State of Virginia, is designed to provide for the convicts sentenced by the courts of the District of Columbia for offenses the nature of which would send them to the penitentiary. Such convicts are now sent to institutions in the several States, where they are supported at the expense of the Government and of the District of Columbia. This provision is designed to provide for an institution to take care of the convicts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand what it is designed for, but I want to ascertain whether it is a new institution?

Mr. GALLINGER. The land has been purchased and they are just commencing the construction of buildings, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Militia of the District of Columbia," on page 82, line 10, after the word "service," to strike out "$25,900" and insert "$30,000," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, offices and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 22, after the word "matches," to strike out "$1,250" and insert "$2,500," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of target practice and matches, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 12, to insert:

ANACOSTIA RIVER FLATS.

For continuing the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, to be expended for the purposes and under the conditions specified in the item for this improvement contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $100,000, and authority is hereby granted to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to enter into a contract or contracts for and on account of said work in an amount not exceeding $100,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask about this item pertaining to the Anacostia River Flats. I understand a considerable amount of land will be reclaimed, or rather recreated, as a result of this appropriation. In whom will the title to that land vest?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, this item is for continuing an improvement now under way, I will say to the Senator, and gives to the Chief Engineer the right to enter into further contracts.

Mr. BURTON. The item appropriates a hundred thousand dollars and authorizes contracts for an additional hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. But what is the object of the appropriation? Is it not to narrow the channel of the river or creek and create land; and if so, in whom is the title to that land to be vested? Is it to be vested in the abutting property owners or in the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On account of the confusion, I am unable to hear the Senator's question.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, this matter was pending before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors some years ago. As I understand, the general plan is to increase the depth of the river and to narrow its channels, and as an immediate result land will be created, which formerly was overflowed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator understands, I presume, that the abutting property owners are to pay proportionately according to the increased valuation of their property.

Mr. BURTON. Are they to pay for the extra land that is created or is title to it to be vested in the Government? I ask this question for the reason that a plan was once suggested which seemed——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. As I understand, the title to the land will vest in the Government.

Mr. BURTON. I will continue what I was saying: A plan was at one time suggested which seemed to me to give undue advantage to the abutting owners. The Government, under the guise of a river and harbor improvement, was asked to increase the quantity of land, and the amount created would belong to the abutting owners. I should like to ask if the project has been so changed as to avoid that result?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I regret that the Senator is so far off that I am not able to catch the entire purport of his remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me, as I understand the matter, whatever advantage the present abutting property owners may derive from this improvement will be assessed against them as benefits; but the land that is made is to belong to the Government, and is intended for park purposes. That is as it has been represented to the committee. Of course, the primary purpose of all this improvement was the protection of health; but there is no question in my mind, from what has been represented to the committee, that the land which will accrue as the result of this improvement will be under the control of the Government for governmental purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Will it be owned by the Government?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should say so, from what has been represented to us.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I do not know whether the legal status of the matter would be different in the District of Columbia from what it is in the States; but I know that a very similar project came up in connection with the improvement of the Providence River. A large amount of excavation was proposed to be dumped on adjoining lands, and the opinion of the legal department of the city of Providence and of the State of Rhode Island was that that improvement would belong to the abutting owners, and that there was no way of overcoming that result, except by the purchase by the State prior to making the improvement of the land adjoining the improvement. I do not know what the legal status of such a matter is in the District of Columbia, but I do know that that was very carefully gone into within a very short time in Rhode Island. As suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the abutting owners claimed it under the law of riparian rights.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter has been very carefully looked into by Mr. Sinclair, a competent attorney of the District, and I am sure that I correctly state his view as it has been represented to the committee. I know that the Government purchased from private owners some land that was under water for the purpose of making this improvement.

Mr. LIPPITT. Perhaps they acquired in that way the riparian ownership.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think very likely they did.

Mr. LIPPITT. I think that is a point that ought to be very thoroughly understood.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. This appropriation has been delayed in order to get title to this land which, we understand, has been secured.

Mr. BURTON. There is a great variety of laws in different States. The general regulation, or the one in vogue in most of the States, is that the accretion to the land caused by the narrowing of the stream or in other ways accrues to the riparian owner. If that is the case, the Government will be doing this work for the benefit of private owners. Some years ago a plan was suggested, the basis of which was the improvement of the navigation of the Anacostia River and the improvement of the public health; but it was rejected in the House, for the reason that an unfair advantage would have resulted to the owners of adjoining property.

I should like to ask another question here. Why was not this item put in in the House? Why was it put in in the Senate? Was it not considered in the House?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the same provision, or nearly so, has been in the District of Columbia appropriation bills in the past and the House has failed to agree to it. I do not know whether the House considered it this year or not.

Mr. BURTON. I trust this matter will be carefully considered before it is agreed upon in conference. I think I should object to it except for the fact that it must be agreed upon in conference with the House conferees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it would seem that there is really but one question involved, and that is, Does the Government own the adiacent land, so that this improvement will belong to the Government? If it does not, we ought not to vote for it. Does the Government own the land, so that this improvement would make it the property of the Government?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Water department," on page 84, line 25, after the word "clerks," to strike out "2, at $1,500 each" and insert "1, $1,800; 1, $1,500"; and on page 85, line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$87,055" and insert "$87,355," so as to make the clause read:

For distribution branch: Superintendent, $3,300; engineer, $2,400; assistant engineers—1, $1,800; 1, $1,600; master mechanic, $2,000; foreman, $1,800; assistant foremen—1, $1,275; 1, $1,200; 1, $1,125; 1, $900; steam engineers—chief, $1,750; 2, at $1,100 each; 3 assistants, at $875 each; chief inspector of valves, $1,600; leveler, $1,200; inspector, $1,200; draftsman, $1,050; clerks—1, $1,800; 1, $1,500; 4 at $1,200 each; stores clerk, $1,500; 1, $1,000; 1, $900; timekeeper, $900; 2 rodmen, at $900 each; 2 chainmen, at $675 each; 4 oilers, at $610 each; 3 firemen, at $875 each; janitor, $900; watchmen—1, $875; 1, $700; 1, $610; drivers—1, $700; 1, $630; 2 messengers, at $600 each; in all, $87,355.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. Is the waterworks department of this city self-sustaining? In most of the cities the water system is not only self-sustaining, but has a sufficient income to pay interest on the bonds and have a surplus besides. Is that the case here?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I understand it is self-sustaining, sir.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Government of the United States pay water taxes?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No, sir.

Mr. BURTON. It receives free its supply of water for Government buildings?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes; free; paid for from the revenues of the waterworks. The Government does not pay anything.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, when the Senator says the system is self-sustaining, he simply means that it pays the expense of operation.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. My question is, Does it pay a rate of interest on the original cost?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand that the Senator means that it does that. I understand that he simply means that it pays the expenses of operation.

Mr. BURTON. It is not a very profitable plant if it merely pays the expenses of operation. Does it also pay an adequate return, whether you call it interest or income, upon the cost?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That I am unable to say. I do not know about that, sir. I do not know what the cost is, and I do not know what percentage is put on for that purpose. I understand that it is self-sustaining, so far as the running of it is concerned.

Mr. BURTON. Of course it is to be expected that the running expenses are provided by the income; but I think if the commission which has been suggested is to be appointed, that would be a very desirable subject for it to consider.

Mr. LANE. I should like to suggest that the chairman of the board of commissioners should make a report to the committee as to what the cost of the plant was, how much interest it pays on its bonds, whether or not it has a sinking fund, and whether or not it pays for the extension of mains.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me, it is very likely that this system was not built by the issuance of bonds, but by cash appropriations from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury. It ought, however, to be a very easy matter to compute the cost of the original plant and additions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, referring to the question of revenues and expenditures for the waterworks department, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the commissioners' report for the year ending June 30, 1914, contains this statement:

The water revenues from all sources during the year amount to $828,396.69. The expenditures for the year amounted to $794,952.16. The outstanding net liabilities on June 30, 1914, were $32,497.90, leaving a working balance to the department on that date of $946.63. Of the expenditures during the year about 52 per cent were for the extension of the plant—

That is, the expenditures during the year were $794,952.16.

Mr. BURTON. That is, for operating expenses and maintenance?

Mr. SMOOT. No; for extension also.

Of the expenditures during the year about 52 per cent were for the extension of the plant, 27 per cent for operation, and the balance for repairs and replacements.

Water is furnished free to churches, hospitals, orphan asylums, schools, and charitable institutions under authority of law to the extent of 19,348,600 cubic feet. This is based on a per capita allowance of from 60 to 100 gallons per day, depending on the character of the institutions. All water in excess of that allowed is charged for at meter rates. This excess of allowance amounted to 5,419,700 cubic feet during the year.

Mr. BURTON. Does it appear that there are no bonds on which interest is paid?

Mr. SMOOT. No; there are no bonds.

Mr. BURTON. What is the amount expended for extensions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Roughly, $400,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The amount expended for extensions is 52 per cent of $794,952.16, or a little over $400,000.

Mr. BURTON. It seems to me that the amount expended for operation is small for an extensive water plant.

Mr. SMOOT. It is 27 per cent of the receipts from operating expenses.

Mr. BURTON. About $240,000.

Mr. SMOOT. About $225,000.

Mr. BURTON. Is it stated there whether or not water is furnished free to the Government buildings?

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing said about that in the report in regard to water revenues and expenditures, water consumption and waste, or water mains, nor do I believe it is mentioned in the report. I am quite certain that the Government of the United States pays nothing for its water.

Mr. BURTON. There is a minimum amount furnished to each home without any charge? That system is adopted, is it?

Mr. SMOOT. They are putting in water meters just as fast as possible. I will say to the Senator that during the fiscal year 1914–15 there were installed 8,555 meters, making the total number in service on June 30, 1914, 42,161 meters.

Mr. LIPPITT. Does the Senator mean 1914–15 or 1913–14?

Mr. SMOOT. I was speaking of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I can answer the Senator from Ohio. The Government built the conduit originally and turned it over to the District and the city under an agreement that the Government's water should always be supplied free. The extensions are built, I am advised, from the profits of operation. Something over 50 per cent of the receipts are profits, and they go into extensions of water mains.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that the cost of water in the District of Columbia is very low. (Reading:)

The rate charged for water on metered services during the year was 4 cents per 100 cubic feet. The minimum charge, allowing 7,500 cubic feet, is $4.50 per annum. The average annual rent where meters were installed by the District of Columbia was $5.80.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One thing that is cheap here is water, and it is good.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he knows what plan is pursued in the extension of mains? Does the District undertake to extend mains into newly opened tracts before residences are built in them?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think they do until they know that the residences will be built. They keep the extension of mains pretty well in advance of the building up of the District.

Mr. LANE. Do they require any guarantee of an income which will be a certain percentage of the cost of extending the mains into new tracts?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is left entirely to the judgment of the commissioners as to where the mains shall be extended.

Mr. LANE. The reason I ask the question is that in a subdivision of the District known as Cleveland Park there is a large tract of land which has been laid out in streets, and it has water mains, I suppose, all through it, but there are no houses on it. Did the District extend those mains at its own cost?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; out of the profits of the water system. I will say to the Senator that that has happened in other localities in advance of settlement.

Mr. LANE. That system has been pursued?

Mr. SMOOT. That system has been pursued and is pursued to-day.

Mr. LANE. I know of a city where they require, in the case of unoccupied tracts, that they shall guarantee a certain rate of return before they will extend the mains. Otherwise the municipality or the District is at the expense of opening up tracts of land for speculative purposes, adding value to lots held for speculation without any cost to the man who is speculating in the property.

Mr. SMOOT. Or, in other words, they want some interest upon their investment before they will undertake to expend the money.

Mr. LANE. Yes; something like 5 or 6 per cent. That is not done here?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not the policy in this District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 5, on page 90, line 3, after the word "necessary," to insert "engineering and other," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the commissioners are authorized to employ in the execution of work the cost of which is payable from the appropriation account created in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905, and known as the "Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia," all necessary inspectors, overseers, foremen, sewer tappers, skilled laborers, mechanics, laborers, special policemen stationed at street railway crossings, one inspector of gas fitting, two janitors for laboratories of the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light Cos., market master, assistant market master, watchman, horses, carts, and wagons, and to incur all necessary engineering and other expenses incidental to carrying on such work and necessary for the proper execution thereof, such services and expenses to be paid from said appropriation account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that we are not yet quite through with the committee amendments. There are some matters that were passed over.

Mr. NORRIS. Are there some committee amendments undisposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are a number of amendments passed over, which will now be taken up.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is a committee amendment on page 47 in which I am interested. I must go to the Judiciary Committee in a few minutes, and I should be glad if that amendment could be taken up now.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I suggest that that amendment be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The following amendment on page 47 was passed over:

After line 18, insert:

"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to close public areas which may lie wholly within the boundaries of any site purchased for the Eastern High School, and the same, when so closed, shall be used as a part of said site."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will yield to me, this amendment was passed over day before yesterday at my request. I have a communication from the president of the East Washington Citizens' Association which I shall read, and I will ask the chairman of the committee to make such corrections as should be made if the statement which I am about to read contains any errors. It impresses me as a straightforward veracious statement of fact:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 13, 1915.

Hon. J. K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As president of the East Washington Citizens' Association I have to thank you for this opportunity to place in your hands full data relative to the proposed purchase of ground for the erection of a new Eastern High School at Nineteenth and East Capitol Streets, in close proximity to the United States jail, smallpox hospital, crematorium, and Congressional Cemetery.

On March 13, 1914, this whole matter was discussed in the United States Senate when the $150,000 was appropriated for the purchase of a site for an Eastern High School, and at that time the record will show that the erection of a high school on reservation 13, which belongs to the Government, was opposed by Senator GALLINGER because of the proximity to the smallpox hospital, jail, crematorium, and cemetery.

Our association has been on record for over one year as opposed to the purchase of any ground as a site for an Eastern High School, believing that the District already owns sufficient upon which to build such a building. And if it be the intention of the District authorities to remove the smallpox hospital from reservation 13, as a part of the Gallinger Hospital, when established, there would then remain about 75 acres of land belonging to the Government upon which no objectionable buildings would be located and would make a model site for a high school and stadium.

Our association has protested to the board of commissioners and to the board of education against the selection of this site and against the closing of public highways sought in this connection to be closed, believing that such action would infringe the property rights of our citizens and at the same time affect the right of ownership of the United States in these streets without recompense.

Every association of citizens of southeast Washington has opposed the selection of this site; not one indorsement can be found of record favoring the same. The Board of Commissioners has declined to grant the request of our associations for a public hearing, and as these commissioners, in whose selection our people have no voice, have refused our appeal for such hearing, we are forced to petition and beg for the fairness of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives to aid us in this matter. We accordingly most earnestly request that no autnority be given the commissioners to close the streets referred to in the amendment on page 47 of the appropriation act now before you. If this authority is denied the commissioners, it will in all probability result in the matter of the selection of a site for this Eastern High School being reconsidered, while at the same time the delay would not retard the building of a new high school, there being no appropriation carried by this bill.

Congress has heretofore failed to give authority to the commissioners to close the public streets and highways of the city. A few years ago the commissioners undertook to narrow one of our streets in east Washington, and upon an appeal to the local courts by one of our citizens it was held that the commissioners "are without power to narrow the roads of established streets in the city of Washington" (Walter v. Macfarland, 27 App D. C., 182), and the court further held that "although the commissioners may have unlawfully exercised this power without challenge, yet such power will be denied them when duly challenged."

It is respectfully submitted that it would be unwise and unfair to clothe the commissioners with such great authority without giving the citizens an opportunity to be heard on the necessity and advisability of the proposed closing.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHAS. M. EMMONS, M. D.,
President East Washington Citizens' Association.

Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to visit this locality, and I do not know anything about the facts. As I stated the other evening, the merits or demerits of the proposition are merely a matter of hearsay with me. If the chairman of the committee has any information on the subject, I should like to have him let us have it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that the president of the board of education, Mr. Blair, in whom we have great confidence, came before our subcommittee and urged that this street, or so-called street, should be closed. He impressed us with the importance of it; and his statements, which can be found in the report of the hearing, were such that we believed that for the good of the school and the site it was necessary that the street should be closed.

If the Senator will permit me, I have a letter here from the president of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association which I will have read from the desk. We felt that it was a proper thing to do because those who had looked into it, especially the president of the board of education, Mr. Blair, in whom we had great confidence, recommended that it should be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the letter be read first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

NORTHEAST WASHINGTON CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1915.

Hon. J. WALTER SMITH.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Relative to the committee amendment to the District of Columbia bill providing for closing the streets in the site for the new Eastern High School, which was objected to in the Senate to-day, permit me to say that I know of no opposition whatever to the closing of said streets except from those who are opposed to the site selected by the board of education and the commissioners for said school, and that I have never known a site to be selected for a building in this District that it was not opposed by parties interested in other sites.

I fail to see how anyone would be affected by the closing of said streets, one of which, A Street, has never been opened and can not be used, and Eighteenth Street, while open, is seldom used.

In view of the fact, however, that one of the Senators objected on the ground that the amendment is too general and granted to the commissioners too much authority, I suggest the advisability of revising the amendment so as to provide for the closing of A Street NE. from Seventeenth to Nineteenth Streets, and Eighteenth Street NE. from East Capitol Street to B Street.

Yours, very truly,

EVAN H. TUCKER,
President Northeast Washington Citizens' Association.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me? I shall have to attend a committee meeting in a few moments.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am opposed to allowing these streets to be closed, in part because I am very much opposed to this purchase. There is too much land continuously being purchased in the District, both by the District and by the Government, for which there is no necessity for a purchase. Instead of using land that we have, instead of using land now available, we continually purchase and purchase, and there is a constant pressure upon Congress to purchase.

I do not in any sense mean to reflect upon the committee, but yet I want to call attention to a couple of facts about this proposed purchase. As is known, when it was the purpose to make this purchase the owners of these four blocks asked for it $232,000. I am advised now——

Mr. THOMAS. That is for one school building.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For one school building, four blocks, $232,000. I find by the city papers of day before yesterday that they have come down to $84,000. I find that the property is assessed at $30,000.

I can conceive of no necessity for this large quantity of land for this schoolhouse. There are a number of pieces of land already owned by the District more accessible and better suited for the schoolhouse. These blocks are not on a street car line; they are not as accessible to the people of that section as land already owned by the Government. The present high school, I understand, is upon a piece of land in size equal to 2 acres. If instead of appropriating $150,000 to buy more land we had appropriated $75,000 to put another building on the present lot, that section of the city to-day would be better accommodated for high-school purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator mean the present lot occupied by the Eastern High School?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So I have been advised.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator looked at it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I have not.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will not advocate it if he looks at it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are a number of other pieces of land already owned by the District fully as good as this piece that it is proposed to purchase, and when the time comes I wish to offer this amendment:

The appropriation of $150,000 for the purchase of a site for the new Eastern High School is hereby withdrawn.

I think one of the pieces now owned by the District should be utilized instead of this perpetual purchasing of more ground by the Government and by the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am pretty familiar with the eastern section of the city.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I did not yield the floor. I yielded to the Senator from Georgia. I still hold the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will not interrupt the Senator from Mississippi. I thought he had concluded.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I merely wish to say in this connection, Mr. President, that the imputation the gentleman makes against the motives of Dr. Emmons and others in the letter just read is hardly justified by the facts, because these gentlemen have no land to sell. They protest against this purchase and insist that the city already has plenty of land that is more favorably located; that there is a tract of 75 acres belonging to the Government, a part of which could be used for this purpose. The desire manifested by Dr. Emmons and his associates to save the Government $150,000, the cost of the site for the schoolhouse, ought to commend them to the Senate. I do not think that Mr. Tucker's suggestion that the motives of Dr. Emmons and others are not proper is justified by anything that has come out in this discussion. Indeed, the reverse is true.

I wish to call attention to another fact. This proposed amendment is, in my judgment, legislation upon an appropriation bill. It repeals a general law with reference to closing streets, and unless I hear from the Senator who has charge of the bill some better excuse for closing the streets than has up to this time been given I shall invoke that rule.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire had previously risen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not know when I rose before that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] was entitled to the floor, or I would not have interrupted him.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to assure the Senator from New Hampshire that I would have been very glad to yield to him. His uniform courtesy and decorum in debate imposes an obligation upon every Senator upon this floor to be not only courteous and obliging but deferential to the Senator from New Hampshire; but I simply wanted to let it be understood by the Chair that I had not yielded the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

I was about to observe, Mr. President, that I am reasonably familiar with the eastern portion of the District of Columbia, having traveled over it a great many times and with a view of acquainting myself with conditions. There has been an agitation for a good many years for a new Eastern High School. I have been importuned hundreds of times to exert what little influence I might have to secure an appropriation for that purpose. I have examined the present Eastern High School, both the building and the site. It is occupied not only by the Eastern High School but also by another school of a lower grade. The ground is almost entirely occupied; and yet it has been argued, time and time again, that there was room on that site for another high school. It is a mistake, and anyone who will look at it will see that it is a mistake.

Mr. President, personally I traversed that section of the city and I discovered there were four sites that I thought might be used for the purpose, Congress having made an appropriation for the purchase of a site. I recall the site that has been tentatively purchased by the commissioners and I think it is an admirable situation, but perhaps it is not any better than some others that might be obtained.

The controversy which has arisen, to the effect that we have plenty of land in that section of the city upon which to erect a high school can never appeal to me. It is on the eastern branch of the river. We are improving that now, or will have it improved in some years. At the present time it is an unhealthy situation. It is a reservation owned by the Government. On that site we have a jail—a very large jail.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to my friend from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. That was the same objection the Senator made last year when it was suggested by me that the site might be used for this purpose. I should like to ask him if it is not true that the location now selected is within easy access of the jail, which is a little more than a square distant? I am informed that it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is much more than a square distant. I will say to the Senator I do not know the exact distance, but it is considerably removed from that situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if this location which was finally determined upon is not, in his judgment, a little too far out? Is it not a little too much to one side of the locality that will patronize the school?

Mr. GALLINGER. Frankly I will say to the Senator that I personally have an impression that a site a little nearer the Capitol would have been a better site. That is my judgment, and yet whether such a site can be obtained or not I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. I asked the Senator the question because I understood he had been looking over the sites. I will ask him, Are any of the sites that are now owned by the Government better located than the one which was selected?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know of no site owned by the Government except the reservation upon which the jail, the smallpox hospital, the crematory, the laundry building, and various other buildings of that nature are situated. The old Washington Asylum is on that site.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the proposed site is not within about a block of the smallpox hospital, certainly not more than that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is a considerably greater distance than that.

Mr. NORRIS. Have the people who are objecting to the present site a suggestion to make as to a location for this school?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know. My attention was distracted when the letter the Senator from Mississippi had read was presented to the Senate. I do not know who those parties are.

I know this, Mr. President, from a long and rather sad experience. There never was an attempt made to buy a site in the District of Columbia for any purpose whatsoever that there were not objections to it. That is the rule, and it is the rule without variation. Mr. Tucker, whose letter was read, is president of the association covering that section of the city. We have, I think, 30 of these associations called "citizens' associations," and Mr. Tucker is president of the association that would seem to be most interested in this matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will yield to me just a moment, I will say to him that the author of this letter is Dr. Charles M. Emmons, president of the East Washington Citizens' Association. I know nothing about Dr. Emmons personally. I had some investigation made, and one of the commissioners answered me that he was a man of good standing and of character.

Mr. GALLINGER. I personally vouch for Dr. Emmons. I know him. He is a citizen of standing and of influence, and his opinions are worthy of very serious consideration. I do not raise the question at all against Dr. Emmons or against the propriety of his expressing his views in reference to this matter.

But, Mr. President, what I rose to say—and I am not very particular about this matter one way or the other—is that I have a great deal of confidence in the board of education, particularly in the chairman of the board. I know that they have given a great deal of attention to this matter; they have reached a conclusion, and I think we ought to hesitate before offhand coming to a contrary conclusion here or taking the word of any citizen of the District that they have made a mistake. Possibly they have. If I had my way in this matter, I would not contend for this amendment. We have authority to close those streets. They are worthless, as I happen to know personally. They are of no account to anybody as they stand to-day, and probably never will be. We have authority to close them beyond a question for this public purpose. If the people in that section of the city who say they want a high school, and who have been importuning the committee and importuning me for 10 years that they should have an appropriation for a high school, can not agree among themselves where the high school should be located, I would let them go without a high school a while longer. That would be my decision in the matter. So, personally, I would not contend for this amendment. If Senators who have looked into this matter are ready to take the word of others concerning it and think it ought not to be included in the bill, I should be quite willing to let it go out of the bill and let the matter rest another year. I think it would be unfortunate to postpone the construction of that building, and yet they will get along for another year.

Of course, I do not undertake to speak for the committee, and especially not for the chairman of the committee. I speak for myself; and I say frankly that I think those people ought to agree among themselves. They ought not to insist that any individual or little faction should have its own way as against the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the board of education, both of which bodies have agreed upon the site that is named in the bill.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about it. I shall vote for the amendment if it is put to a vote, but if it goes out of the bill I will not allow myself to mourn over it, because I think the people in that portion of the city who are so insistent upon having a high school ought not to come in here at the last moment and undertake to obstruct and defeat an amendment submitted by the committee upon the recommendation of the commissioners and the board of education.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am through.

Mr. JONES. I ought to know, I suppose, being a member of the committee, but I will say I do not know. I thought we had already acquired the site for this school.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have appropriated $150,000.

Mr. JONES. But have we acquired the site? Have we bought the site for which the money was appropriated?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. I think they have been bargaining for it.

Mr. JONES. I had an impression that we had acquired the site, and that the sole purpose of the amendment was to close up some streets.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I unsuccessfully opposed the making of this appropriation a year ago from the slight information which I then possessed. I believed that it was unnecessary to expend $150,000 in the purchase of a site for a new schoolhouse. It was represented to me that the Government owned a tract of land amounting, as I now recall, to about 75 acres, a part of which could well be devoted to this purpose. The objection was made with great force by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that the character of the buildings upon that tract was objectionable to the erection of a schoolhouse in their vicinity. He spoke of the jail, I believe, and smallpox hospital and some other objectionable or undesirable structures, so far as this question is concerned, upon that tract of land. The Senate did not coincide with me and the amendment was allowed to stand.

I had practically forgotten the circumstance until my attention was called to this amendment a day or two ago by Dr. Emmons, the writer of the communication which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has submitted to the Senate. The proposed site, whether it has been purchased or is to be purchased, comprises a tract of ground laid out in four blocks. I am unable to say what are the dimensions of the blocks, but the purpose of the amendment, although its language is very vague, is to close the streets which divide these blocks so that the territory may consist of one compact whole. Of course, if it is necessary to use a large area of ground for the erection of a high-school building, it follows as a matter of course that the streets or public highways which either have been opened or have been surveyed through the tract should in some manner be vacated.

But, Mr. President, I believe as sincerely as I believed a year ago that if this money has not been actually devoted to the purchase of this tract of ground the appropriation itself should be repealed, for the reasons which were urged by the Senator from New Hampshire against the use of Government land in the neighborhood of this tract were good, and they seemed to be conclusive then and they are equally good and conclusive now. The tract which has been selected is within one block, or within two streets, to be more exact, of the territory which it was then supposed would be sufficient for this purpose. Of course, that does away with the immediate objection—that is to say, there is no direct contact between the proposed educational institution and these other buildings.

But to me it seems incredible, Mr. President, that if because of the existence of these buildings upon 75 acres of ground a school should not be erected there, nevertheless it can be erected in that immediate vicinity, without resulting in the same contamination and exposure which would result from the utilization of a part of the land already owned by the Government. Seventy-five acres, and of course I am speaking by hearsay, is a very considerable tract of territory. These other institutions can very easily be assigned to some remote part or some particular part of this tract, and the remainder of it can be devoted to the erection of this high-school building. It therefore appeals to me now, as it did then, as a sheer waste of money.

I want to take this occasion to say to the people of the District of Columbia that it is precisely such appropriations and the use that is made of them that lies at the bottom of congressional objections to the half-and-half system; for, whether the notion be well or ill founded, it nevertheless does exist, that appropriations made by the Government for the partial support of the District of Columbia are invested in such wise as to accrue to the pecuniary advantage of citizens and property holders within the District. That, of course, involves no reflection whatever upon the committee, but it does justify the feeling that any Government funds which are used indirectly upon such purposes should be withdrawn and the appropriations by which the expenses of the District of Columbia are to be paid should come from the direct taxation of the property holders themselves.

Mr. President, I do not vouch for it, I do not know whether it is true or not, I make no charges, but I am informed that two members of the school board are the owners in trust of the title to a part of the ground that is to be conveyed for the erection of this structure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the statement made in this communication from Dr. Emmons that—

> Every association of citizens of southeast Washington has opposed the selection of this site; not one indorsement can be found of record favoring the same. The Board of Commissioners has declined to grant the request of our associations for a public hearing, and as these commissioners, in whose selection our people have no voice—

They have declined to listen at all to their protest. They have declined to give them an opportunity that this matter might be submitted and the world might know the facts regarding this matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; Mr. President, I was impressed with that recital when the letter was first submitted to the Senate. I was also impressed with the fact, because it is a fact, suggested by the chairman of the committee and by the Senator from New Hampshire that the selection of a site for a public or semipublic building always results in opposition. That is true. It is human nature. It is just as true of the city of Denver as it is of the District of Columbia. It is just as true of any municipality or any community where money is to be expended for public or semipublic purposes that rival interests desire to secure the location of a site for it. But here, unless I am misinformed, the objection to this site does not come from aggregations of individuals owning other sites and seeking to secure investment in those sites; it comes from a body of people whose children are dependent upon this school for their education and who object to its location at this particular place; first, because of the fact that it is largely remote from the center of population of the community, and also because it is too expensive; because it is larger than is necessary, and also because it involves, among other things, the closing of the streets belonging to the people of the United States, and the virtual transfer of the title and possession thereto to the District of Columbia.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, they also insist that the Government owns land that is better situated and more suitable for the site than the land it is proposed to buy.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator anticipated what I was going to add as another and, to my mind, the conclusive reason. If it be true, Mr. President, that the title of this property is vested, either in trust or otherwise, in any member of the board of education, that circumstance itself justifies the impression that the transfer itself should be very carefully scrutinized before it shall be approved even indirectly by legislation of this sort.

Now, Mr. President, before I take my seat I want to inquire whether a point of order has heretofore been presented against the consideration of this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. My understanding is that it has been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that a point of order had been presented and overruled. It was made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. THOMAS. I do not care to say anything more on this subject, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I should like, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, to ask him a question.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Individually I know very little about this site. I have depended and the committee has depended upon the judgment of the board of education. Therefore I have nothing to say in regard to its eligibility except that these matters are placed in the hands of the board of education here. I do not know many of the members of that board. I know some of them. I do know the superintendent of the board, Mr. Blair, and I have a very high regard for him in every particular.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask if that is Mr. Woodbury Blair?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know his first name.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Henry P. Blair.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator was just arguing that the Government had a large quantity of land on which a school could be built; and he said that the buildings upon this land could be removed so that a site—I presume that was the idea—could be made eligible for this school.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; in other words, that the entire tract was not necessary for the structures now upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes; but upon this site of which the Senator speaks, as I understand, there is a jail, a crematory, a smallpox hospital, and another hospital. So it strikes me that it would cost a great deal more money to remove those buildings than a site would cost elsewhere. It would be a tremendous undertaking to move all those buildings in order to obtain an eligible site. The Senator may be right in the matter; I do not know as to that; but we, of course, have to depend upon somebody. It is not the function of the individual members of the committee to personally know these things. I am willing to confess, so far as I am concerned, that I do not know; and the action which I, as a member of the committee, have taken has been dependent upon the advice and information which I have obtained from the parties who are delegated with the power to act in such matters.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not the slightest doubt, Mr. President, but that is so; but the fact that——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland a question if the Senator from Colorado will allow me to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator in charge of the bill has heard the statement which has just been repeated here—that several members of the board of education or of the school commissioners are interested either as trustees or otherwise in this site.

Mr. THOMAS. I should say as to that that they are interested as trustees; that is my information.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is there any answer to that?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If that is the case, I know nothing about it. I have never heard the statement made that such was the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. The answer to that would be that, if that can be shown, there is not a member of the committee who would not repudiate the action of the commissioners and of the board of education. I have never before heard it suggested. The Senator from Colorado says somebody told him that it was so.

Mr. THOMAS. I said that Dr. Emmons told me. I would not make a statement of that sort upon the floor of the Senate without giving the author of the information.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is the first intimation that we have had of it.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt of that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There might be conditions when a matter of that kind might militate against the purchase of property. At the same time, I should think that a man could be a trustee for a property, if he is an honorable and upright man, and yet it would not influence him to do an improper thing in the sale of it or in turning it over to the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not question that either. The fact is not a conclusive one. It is one, however, which always should receive inspection, as it would have done, I am sure, if any member of the committee had been informed of it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I grant that.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be that the information which I have received and which I have deemed it my duty to lay before the Senate will, upon investigation, be found to be erroneous.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. THOMAS. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is rather remarkable that Dr. Emmons, a gentleman whom I know and whom I respect, should not come to the committee to make a statement of that kind. He did not do so.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from New Hampshire has vouched for Dr. Emmons. My acquaintance with him is casual.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I will ask the Senator from Colorado if Dr. Emmons or anyone else has told him who these members of the board of education are who have an interest in this property?

Mr. THOMAS. He did not. He did not mention any names.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. It seems to me that that almost amounts to an anonymous communication. I should think that if a charge were going to be brought up here on the floor of the Senate it at least ought to be definite enough to specify individuals. You can not indict a whole nation; you can not indict a whole board on the ground that some of them have done something wrong. It seems to me there ought to be a little more specificness to that accusation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, you can not indict a whole nation, but boards have frequently been indicted. I am not indicting this board, nor am I indicting any member of it. I am giving a reason which, if true, can be ascertained, inasmuch as it applies to one or two of a very small circle of men. I conceive that the fact itself may be an entirely innocuous one in so far as this transaction is concerned and that a trustee dealing with his property with others may do so with perfect propriety and along the line of his duty without subjecting himself to criticism.

One word as to the last statement of the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. SMITH of Maryland]. If it be true, Mr. President, that upon this Government tract of land there is a jail and a smallpox hospital, which it may be expensive to remove, it argues either that they should have been removed long ago or else that they are located in a practically uninhabited part of the city. If there is a community of children in that section needing this institution, then these other institutions should have been removed long ago.

If, on the other hand, there is no considerable population there, when you select a site two blocks beyond that point, it is no place for a schoolhouse, and you might as well go farther into the country. I have yet to be convinced that a tract of land 75 acres in extent belonging to the Government is not sufficient for the purpose for which it is sought to be used and sufficient as well for the erection of this structure.

For my part, I am opposed to the policy under which the Government of the United States purchases private property in this District for any purpose unless it is absolutely necessary—and the burden should be upon those who assert the necessity to prove it—when, as a matter of fact, it is known that the United States is the owner of a large amount of territory within the District.

Why, Mr. President, one of the arguments made in favor of the half-and-half system here, the one which appealed to me, was that the United States owns over 50 per cent of the territory in this District, yet in matters of this kind moneys appropriated by the Government are frequently used for the purpose of purchasing private property.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, my information is that the Federal Government does not own more than 5,000 acres of land in the District, and that a great deal of that is owned on the half-and-half principle. For instance, that is the case with the Rock Creek Park. Practically, about 100 acres of the land here is used by the Federal Government for its buildings and its work.

Mr. THOMAS. Whether it be true or not to the extent to which I have stated it—and I am informed that such is the fact—it certainly is true that the Government has plenty of territory upon which to erect its structures.

Mr. JAMES. I do not doubt that in the slightest. I was merely seeking to correct the Senator's statement, as I am informed about the number of acres that the Federal Government really owns in the District. I am in sympathy with the Senator's position.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the location selected for this high school is an unfortunate one. I believe also that the location of the Government property would be just a little bit more unfortunate. I presume when you refer to the land owned by the Government reference is made to that tract of land upon which the jail, the workhouse, and these other buildings are located. They are in the same vicinity, being but a block or two away. In either case the location for a high school, it seems to me, is undesirable, for the reason that——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to interrupt him there to make a suggestion which will probably facilitate the matter?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator merely let me finish this sentence?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. This locality is entirely to one side of the district that will furnish the students for the high school. Now I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Before making my statement, I wish to read a letter which has just been sent to me. It is as follows:

I desire to inform you that before selecting the site for the Eastern High School the board of education gave a full hearing to Dr. Emmons and others interested, and heard his argument, as well as others.

Mr. GALLINGER. By whom is that letter signed?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is signed by Mr. Tucker, president of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association.

I would suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as there have been some statements made about some of the members of the board of education being trustees, that this matter be postponed, and let us make some investigation in regard to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There is not a member of the committee who wants the Government improperly treated in any way. I can hardly think, however, that there is any member of this board, whether he be a trustee or not, who would lend himself to anything wrong. At the same time, as the charge has been made, I think it would be well to lay the matter over until to-morrow and let us make an investigation.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as to laying the matter over until to-morrow, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Pardon me a moment. I did not mean to lay the bill over; I meant this one item.

Mr. STONE. If we should pass the bill to-night, what would become of that item?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We could not pass the bill if it were allowed to go over.

Mr. STONE. Will my friend from Maryland allow me to make a suggestion with respect to this item?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think I have the floor, but I yield to the Senator. I will not object to the Senator making a statement.

Mr. STONE. I beg the Senator's pardon. At the moment I thought the Senator had yielded the floor. I will only occupy a moment, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Inasmuch as the question has been raised here about the interest of members of the board of education in property they are advising us to purchase by this appropriation, leaving us in doubt as to whether the action is entirely what it ought to be; and, inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is as familiar with District affairs, I suppose, as any other Senator here, and whose devotion to the interests of the District is recognized by everybody, thinks that no harm would be done or public interest jeopardized by postponing action on this item until the next appropriation bill—whether the Senator from Maryland concurs in that view of the Senator from New Hampshire I do not know—but, in view of the whole situation, I desire to inquire if it would not be better, all things considered, to let this item go out of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to say a word?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did express myself as the Senator from Missouri suggests. I am troubled, however, about the accusation which has been made. Mr. Henry P. Blair, chairman of the board of education, is the son of a man who occupied a seat on this floor for 12 years. Mr. Blair is a man of the highest integrity and is so recognized by the bar of the District of Columbia. He has served as assistant corporation counsel, a position which he resigned to continue private practice. He is a man against whom no breath of suspicion has ever been uttered or thought of, and I dislike exceedingly to have this matter dismissed at the present time without being looked into with some care. It is a serious accusation. While Mr. Blair's name——

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. While Mr. Blair's name has not been mentioned, he is my friend; he is from my State originally, although he has lived in Washington from early boyhood, coming here with his father when he was a Member of the Senate, and I feel unwilling that anything should go on the records here that might taint his good name; that is all.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator if the Senator from Nebraska does not object.

Mr. THOMAS. I have just been informed by Dr. Emmons that, upon examination of the records, Mr. J. B. Larner was found to be trustee for part of this property for the Washington Loan & Trust Co. That is the extent to which Dr. Emmons now goes concerning the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Larner is counsel for the Washington Loan & Trust Co., and it develops that the Washington Loan & Trust Co. has some interest in this property. That, Mr. President, is pretty gauzy. I think it bears out the point I have in mind.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course the Senator does not refer to anything but the last statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I meant to say was that it is remote; that it does not apply to any member of the board of education.

Mr. THOMAS. The statement which I first made was made practically as it was given to me, and is now made practically as it was given to me again.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the Senator said, in the first instance, that two members of the board of education, instead of one, were in some way interested.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, we can not hear the colloquy which is going on.

Mr. THOMAS. I say that the statement which was given to the Senate was given practically as it was given to me, and the last statement is the statement which Dr. Emmons has just furnished me. I have made no statement here of my own.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What connection has this man with the board of education?

Mr. THOMAS. I have made no statement here of my own, upon the theory that it was either gauzy or unfounded.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What connection has this gentleman with the matter?

Mr. THOMAS. As I understand, Mr. Larner is one of the trustees.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Colorado, the matter reduces itself to this: That a member of the school board is attorney for the Washington Loan & Trust Co., and the Washington Loan & Trust Co. has an interest in this property, or part of it.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the substance of the information which I have just given to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator have any information as to the nature of the interest which the Washington Loan & Trust Co. has in the matter?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I assume, however, that its interest is in the shape of a deed of trust given to secure a loan.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, a mortgage on the property?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Unless they were very wild in making the loan, I do not suppoce they are at all interested whether this is to be used as a school ground or whether it is to be used for a farm.

Mr. President, the particular clause which we now have up for consideration ought to become a law if the site to which it relates is to be acquired for the Eastern High School. The particular provision we are discussing gives the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the authority to close the streets that lie within the boundaries of the site. I think, however, the selection of this site would be a serious mistake. I think the site ought to be located more in the center of that part of the district which will supply the students for the new high school.

I should like to say, in reply to some of the suggestions made by the Senator from Colorado, that I believe there ought to be a new Eastern High School. I am somewhat acquainted with the present high school and its locality. I have been on the premises and in the building, and I think no Senator here who will look at it will say that there is room enough there or that it would be advisable to build a new high school on the same site. There is located on the same tract of ground on which the Eastern High School is situated the Wallach School, which in itself is a large building, and there is not sufficient room for playgrounds. Under the conditions as they now exist I believe that a new location and a new school building are absolutely necessary, but the new building ought to be located at some point not away to one side of the population to be served.

This particular location, as I understand, is out on Eighteenth Street, which is half a mile beyond Lincoln Park, that park being located between Eleventh and Thirteenth Streets, so that it is at a point where there are very few buildings inhabited by citizens of the District. The location suggested by several Senators on the tract where the Government owns 75 acres is still farther out. If that site were selected, the pupils would all come from one direction and there would be none coming from the other direction.

I do not believe that the Government owns property in a more central and accessible location that could be used as a site for this school unless it be one of the parks. There is located what would be a splendid site for the Eastern High School just north of Providence Hospital, a beautiful park, but I presume that would be objected to because it would be taking up one of the parks of the city. There may be other parks and triangles which perhaps, by closing portions of some streets and acquiring some adjacent property, would make desirable sites, but——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has not dealt as directly with District matters as it has been my misfortune to do. I want to say to the Senator that if any movement were inaugurated to take 40 feet square from any park in the District of Columbia there would be a rebellion on hand at once.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly, there would be; there would be a rebellion in the Senate; there is not any doubt about that. I am not advocating that, and I do not want to be understood as advocating it; but I am suggesting this in answer to the argument which has been made that the Government already owns a site, and I am saying that the only sites which would be at all appropriate are those that are now used for public parks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, the question of acreage property in the District of Columbia has been very seriously considered by some of us. When the movement was inaugurated to establish a reformatory, which was a very much needed institution, we were compelled to go to Virginia to get land. We have no acreage property in the District of Columbia suitable for large buildings.

Mr. NORRIS. I am satisfied that the Senators who are stating that there is property now owned by the Government suitable as a site for the Eastern High School certainly have not made an investigation, or they would be convinced that there is not such a property, unless we go to that portion of the city where the jail and the reformatory are located. While it seems to me that would not be very much worse than the location which has been suggested, if the school——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment; I merely wish to say something in regard to the closing of the streets.

If the school is to be located on the blocks indicated, then the streets running through the blocks ought to be used, of course, as part of the reservation, and, indeed, there would be no further use for such streets running through those blocks.

An examination of the map of the District of Columbia convinces me that they are very small blocks; they are narrow in one direction, at least; and, although I do not know their dimensions, I do not believe those four small blocks constitute any too great an area for a high school that will meet the needs of the present and of the future. If the site proposed is selected, then, of course, the streets ought to be closed. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely want to ask the Senator if it is not true with reference to his suggestion that it would be better to have the school site located a little nearer the center of the school population or nearer the Capitol, if such a site would not be much more expensive to acquire?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. JONES. And that probably had some influence in the selection of the present site?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that was taken into consideration.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to be informed just a little further in regard to the purchase of the proposed site for the Eastern High School. According to the wording of the amendment, reference is made to "any site purchased." It does not say "any site to be purchased" or "any site which may be purchased," and I think the ordinary import of the language would be that it is a site which has already been purchased. I should like to know, in that connection, what has been done in the way of the purchase of the site, what negotiations have been had, and whether there has been any transfer made of any agreement been entered into to transfer the property to be used for the site?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. From all I have been able to gather, my impression is that an option has been taken on the property. I doubt whether there has been any transfer of it, and I think there has not been.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I say that my impression is that they have an option upon the property, but I do not think there has been any transfer of the property.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No harm would be done, then, if the appropriation were repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes; a great deal of harm would be done if the appropriation were repealed, for that would amount to saying that we did not want a school at all, and we would have to commence all over again. I see no reason why, even if there is objection to this piece of property, the appropriation should be repealed. There is a necessity for this school, and the appropriation was made to provide for it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I have heard it suggested that this property was to be acquired under condemnation proceedings. Can the Senator from Maryland tell us anything about that situation?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] made some reference to this site, and said he thought the blocks were rather small. I hold in my hand a plat of that section of the city, which shows the site referred to and also the other sites as to which bids have been submitted. The site which has been recommended consists of four blocks. The scale of this map is 500 feet to 1 inch. According to that this site is about 1,200 feet in length by 1,000 feet in width, constituting four blocks and the intersecting streets.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. If we are to buy property out there for a high school—and the cheapness of that property may have been one of the reasons that induced the recommendation in its favor, for property is cheap there compared with that in other locations which, I think, more desirable for school purposes—we ought to have four blocks. I do not believe that is too much.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not complaining of that.

Mr. NORRIS. The trouble with our schools is usually that the playgrounds surrounding them are too small, and if we are going to locate the high school there at all we ought to acquire ground enough so that there may be suitable playgrounds. I repeat that four blocks, I think, is not too much.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will suggest to the Senator that this same map shows two blocks to the south, on Nineteenth Street, a reservation, being reservation No. 13, which is probably 25,000 feet in length, and extends indefinitely, at least so far as this map shows, to the east, and upon which it is said a jail is located, and I suppose "H" means hospital.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Well, that is about a block away, or a block and a half.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is two blocks farther south, and Massachusetts Avenue runs into it. This is quite a large tract of land, constituting, I understand, about 75 acres. Of course, if this land lies well, there would be ample room for the erection thereon of a public high school, and it is not so very far away, but I do not know the location.

The difficulty I find concerning this matter, Mr. President, is that we do not know enough about it; the committee does not know enough about it to determine whether or not this is the best location. We are taking the judgment of the board. In view of the fact that there are some disputes here with relation to it, and the Government owns 75 acres very close to this site, and we ought not to buy property unless it is important that we should, I think it ought to go over until to-morrow, to let some investigation be made by the committee to determine whether or not this is desirable.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Blair, the president of the board of education, was before the committee, and this was his statement. I wish Senators would listen to it:

> In regard to the Eastern High School site, after a great deal of argument and after a very bitter fight by one of the citizens' associations, which was made here before this committee and has been strenuously continued before the commissioners and every other body since then, for the selection of the jail site, on reservation 13, for the Eastern High School, the commissioners finally, at our request, asked for bids. Bids were received for four different parcels. They have all been carefully inspected. The sites committee of the board and the superintendent spent half a day out there inspecting the sites and inspecting the ground in the eastern section of the city to see whether there was any ground available within the appropriation that was better than the sites that were offered; and we finally concluded to recommend and did recommend some time ago to the commissioners—nearly a month ago, now—a definite site. As was to be expected, as soon as a definite site was recommended there was opposition to it, which always happens; but from the statements the commissioners have made to me personally or that have been made to other members of the board, I believe the site selected is going to meet with their favor. They think, as we do, it is the best site of all.

That was the statement of the president of the board of education to the committee a few days ago. The matter is in the hands of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The question, as I understand it, is upon the amendment offered by the committee. The Senate can do what it pleases with it. We thought it was a proper thing to put in the bill, and we put it in. If the Senate thinks proper, it can take it out.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, last year a site was suggested on the Government reservation. The Senator from New Hampshire objected to it then for the reason, given by him, that it was near a jail, not far removed from a smallpox hospital, and there was no street car service there. I am told from what seems to be a reliable source that about the same conditions prevail in connection with this site. The other was a Government-owned site, and, of course, would cost nothing. This one would cost the Government money if it purchased it, if that has not already been done, and its situation, so far as contiguity to these other institutions is concerned, is not much different. I am also told that there is not only no street car line near it but that certain trash is dumped in the low ground near there and burned during the summer, and that the smoke from such burning waste matter floats over this neighborhood and will be a disadvantage; also that the area is a low piece of ground, which is a breeding place of mosquitoes, and that it is far removed from the residences of the people who desire to send their children to a high school. In other words, that it has very little to commend it, and that if a purchase is going to be made for a high school to accommodate that neighborhood it should be made several blocks nearer the center of the city.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to say briefly that I do not see how the Senate can adopt this amendment with the cloud of doubt and suspicion which rests upon it. The chairman of the committee states he has not given the matter very thorough consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I did not state that I had not given it thorough consideration. I have given it thorough consideration.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. My understanding was that he said that he did not know about this, that he had not considered the question fully. I would not misunderstand the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I say I do not know personally about the site, nor do I consider that I would be as well qualified to judge of the eligibility of the site as those who have already been intrusted with that duty.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has there been a hearing by the committee on this subject? Have the citizens of that community come before the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The money for the site was not appropriated at this session. It was appropriated last session.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Had any evidence been taken by the committee as to the necessity for closing these streets?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the chairman of the committee, if he will pardon me, any information on that subject?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes; I stated that the president of the board of education came before us and gave his views in regard to it, and we have them here now, if the Senator from Mississippi would like to see them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator from New Hampshire read it a moment ago; did he not?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then the Senator knows that there has been some hearing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, I understand that the Senator from Maryland said that he acted upon the advice of the president of the board of education.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, this matter was quite as acute a year ago as it is now, and Dr. Emmons did state his objections to several members of the committee, and I think to the subcommittee as a body. I have an impression—in that I may be somewhat wrong, however—that no other citizen of that section of the city appeared and asked for a hearing on the matter itself. Dr. Emmons was very insistent then, as he is now, that this school building shall be placed on reservation 13, owned by the Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have no interest in this matter other than a desire that the best thing may be done for the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. When we consider the statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] as to the interests which have operated and the suggestions that have been made and the influence exerted to bring about the sale of land, while there may not be any foundation, in fact, for the charge or suggestion, I really think the matter ought to be looked into thoroughly. If it is all right, if there is nothing wrong about it, if it is for the best interests of the District of Columbia and the people of that community in which the school is situated, I am in favor of it. I have no knowledge of the subject except that which comes to me from the representative of an association of citizens living there.

I want to say that I would rather act upon the judgment of the men and the women living in the community who are to be benefited by this school than the opinion of one of the commissioners or the president of the board of education. These people are to be served. They are to be taxed to maintain this school, and I think they have a right to be heard. The statement made here by Dr. Emmons, which I have read into the RECORD, has not been contradicted. I think, in the light of all that and the suggestions that common prudence demands, that the matter ought at least to go over until the truth can be discovered regarding it. The Senate owes that much to itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Simmons
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hollis	Overman	Smoot
Brandegee	James	Page	Sterling
Bryan	Johnson	Perkins	Stone
Burleigh	Jones	Poindexter	Sutherland
Camden	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Chilton	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Clapp	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Townsend
Culberson	Lippitt	Shafroth	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lodge	Sheppard	Walsh
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	White
Gallinger	Nelson	Shields	Williams
Gronna	Norris	Shively	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The question is on the pending amendment on page 47. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. THOMAS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, a great many Senators do not understand the amendment. Will the Secretary please state it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question on which the yeas and nays have been ordered will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to close public areas which may lie wholly within the boundaries of any site purchased for the Eastern High School, and the same, when so closed, shall be used as a part of said site.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I am informed by his colleague that if he were present he would vote the same way that I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DU PONT. I wish to inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DU PONT. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. Has the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to ask whether the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I will withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Bankhead	Gronna	O'Gorman	Sterling
Brady	Hitchcock	Oliver	Sutherland
Brandegee	Johnson	Page	Swanson
Burleigh	Jones	Perkins	Thompson
Burton	La Follette	Poindexter	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Townsend
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Reed	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Root	Weeks
Crawford	Lodge	Saulsbury	Williams
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Works
du Pont	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Gallinger	Norris	Smoot

NAYS—20.

Ashurst	Hughes	Robinson	Stone
Bryan	James	Shafroth	Thomas
Camden	Kenyon	Sheppard	Tillman
Hardwick	Kern	Shively	Vardaman
Hollis	Lane	Smith, Ga.	White

NOT VOTING—30.

Borah	Fall	Myers	Simmons
Bristow	Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Catron	Goff	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Clapp	Gore	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Penrose	Stephenson
Colt	McCumber	Pittman	Warren
Culberson	McLean	Pomerene
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Shields

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask my colleague, the chairman of the committee, whether the committee amendments have all been acted on?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that on page 59 there is an amendment that has not been acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 59, where after line 23 it is proposed to insert:

The examinations, inspection, rules, and regulations concerning the milk supply of the District of Columbia shall be applied alike to each State shipping milk into said District.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There are some amendments on the part of the committee that my colleague on the committee wishes to offer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

EVENING SESSION FOR BILLS ON CALENDAR.

Mr. KERN. I desire to ask, first, a unanimous-consent agreement that not later than 6 o'clock the Senate shall take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening when the calendar, under Rule VIII, shall be called for the disposition of unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am very anxious to take up the calendar, but I do not like the modification that it shall be confined to unobjected bills. Therefore I object.

Mr. KERN. I move that not later than 6 o'clock this evening the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock when it shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am not aware that a motion of that kind is in order, and therefore I make the point of order that it is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Michigan what rule of the Senate it is that prevents this action?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know of no rule that permits a motion to be made to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills. There is no doubt about its being proper to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the calendar, but a motion to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar is, in my judgment, out of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a further point of order in connection with that motion as made is that there is coupled the modification that we shall take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. The motion is in the usual form and it is very frequently made. It is that at not later than 6 o'clock this evening the Senate will take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And that then, upon a motion now made, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills.

Mr. KERN. At which hour the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think myself that that is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order, and holds that the motion is in order.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion prevails, would it prevent the Senate, when it convenes at 8 o'clock, from taking up under Rule VIII a bill by a vote of the Senate against an objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. It surely would.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I certainly renew the point of order. I do not believe it is possible for the Senate in this informal manner to bind a majority of the Senate when they meet again.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the point of order is overruled, I ask that the motion be divided; that the part fixing the hour at which we shall take a recess be stated separately and the part that then the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills be stated separately. I do not think that both can be included in one motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order, but the Chair sustains the contention of the Senator from Connecticut wherein he asks for a division of the motion. The first question is, therefore, will the Senate at not later than 6 o'clock take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.?

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The second question is, Will the Senate at 8 o'clock proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII?

Mr. JONES. I understand under that motion if any bill is objected to it will not be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. JONES. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is clearly what the motion implies. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire out of order to make a report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I especially call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is a proposition to allow the Committee on Indian Affairs to proceed with hearings. I can not object to it.

The resolution (S. Res. 521) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary to report such hearings as may be had on the pending Indian appropriation bill, such stenographer to be paid at a rate not exceeding $1 per printed page; and the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would be glad to have the attention of the Senate for a moment. During the debate on the so-called half-and-half principle, I suggested that at the proper time I would offer an amendment to the bill providing for a joint committee of the two Houses to carefully inquire into and report to Congress on that controverted question.

Mr. President, I am entirely aware of the fact that a point of order will lie against the amendment; but I want to appeal to the Senate not to make a point of order, and let us take up this matter deliberately and carefully and see if we can not adjust it to the satisfaction of all parties. For that reason I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, after line 4, insert a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. —. That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based; and that said committee be further authorized and directed to investigate the tax laws applicable to the District of Columbia, together with all questions relating to the classes and kinds of property taxable thereunder, as well as all questions relating to the basis and rates of taxation of such property, with a view to any necessary change in or revision of said laws, and that said committee shall make report of its findings and recommendations to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session. In the discharge of the duty hereby imposed said committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may deem advisable, at an expense not to exceed the sum of $5,000, and said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, reserving the right to make a point of order, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether all the information that is recited in this amendment may not easily be obtained by the respective committees on the District of Columbia of the two Houses?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not qualified to answer that question. I am not a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I do not know whether that committee is disposed to take up this great question or not. Probably the Senator, who is a member of the committee, could answer better than I can.

Mr. WORKS. So far as the Senator from California is concerned, I feel that that committee is perfectly competent to deal with the matter and take it up. I am not in favor of creating unnecessary commissions. We have enough of them already. If the Committees on the District of Columbia can ascertain all these facts, I should think it would be much better done in that way rather than to create a new commission. If I could be assured that it was necessary that such a committee should be appointed, I then would not make the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. My thought, I will say to the Senator, was that if both Houses of Congress were represented on the committee, they would be more likely to work out a plan that would be agreeable to both Houses of Congress. That was one; in fact, it was perhaps the predominant feeling I had in mind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from California will not make the point of order, because if we consider this amendment we can offer any amendment to the amendment which we may desire. I wish to say that the objection to the proposition which was made, of 40 per cent and 60 per cent, came from people who said we ought to investigate before we determined upon a ratio. It seems to me to be fair, inasmuch as those proportions were defeated, that we should have a commission of some kind, whether it consists of members of the committee or whether it consists of others it is immaterial to me; but it appears to me, in view of the opposition that was made, we ought to have a commission of some kind.

Mr. WORKS. I am not objecting to a proper investigation of this question. I entirely agree with the position of the Senator from New Hampshire that this matter should be properly investigated and this question settled once for all. I said as much when the half-and-half question was under discussion in the Senate. My only doubt about it is whether it is necessary to appoint an independent commission for the purpose, but if the Senate desires to have the matter settled in that way I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I gave notice the other day that I would offer a substitute for the pending amendment. I desire now to offer it. I have made some changes in it, which are indicated in the print I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute, on page 91, after line 4, insert:

SEC. —. That there is hereby created a commission, which shall consist of nine members, three of whom shall be Members of the Senate and appointed by the President thereof, three of whom shall be Members of the House of Representatives and appointed by the Speaker thereof, and three of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States. The latter three shall be authorities upon the subjects of taxation and public utilities, and at least one of them shall be a resident of the District of Columbia. It shall be the duty of such commission—

(a) After thorough investigation to report to the Congress, on or before the first Monday in December, 1915, a system of scientific and equitable taxation for the District of Columbia, having due regard for the principles of reciprocal justice as between the people of the District and the General Government.

(b) After an original investigation, or after conference with the Public Utilities Commission of the District, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other authorities, to report to the Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1915, as to the original cost of the public utilities in the District of Columbia, the cost of reproduction thereof, and their present value and capitalization, and also as to the cost and advisability of the public ownership of such utilities, taking into account the possibility of developing water power on the Potomac.

SEC. —. That the commission created by the preceding section shall have the power to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, to subpœna witnesses and compel their attendance, to administer oaths, to compel the production of books and papers, to employ all needful assistants and to fix their compensation, to keep a record of its proceedings, and to do all other acts and things necessary to the full discharge of the duties prescribed and imposed upon them by the preceding section.

SEC. —. That the members of said commission appointed by the President of the United States shall receive compensation at the rate of $7,500 per year, and the payment of such salaries and all other expenses shall be made upon the presentation of itemized vouchers, approved by the chairman of the commission, and the sum of $30,000, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated to defray the expenses of said commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation upon the amendment to the amendment. It is a very comprehensive proposition, and it includes matters that are now being attended to. We have a Public Utilities Commission clothed with abundant authority to do all sorts of things, so far as the public utilities of this District are concerned. They are now valuing the property, and they have, I know, one expert to whom they have been paying a hundred dollars a day and several other experts to whom they are paying probably less compensation. I do not think this commission, that really has to do with the relations between the Government and the District of Columbia as to the matter of taxation, ought to be asked to duplicate that work which is now under way.

Again, I think the membership of the commission is larger than necessary, as contemplated by the substitute, calling into the work two men from outside the District of Columbia, making it a commission of nine members with the powers that are given in that amendment. I am pretty sure that it would result in confusion worse confounded and that no result would follow. I hope the substitute may not be agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I dislike to go contrary to the express desire of my good friend, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but I think we have enough commissions, and I see no special good to come from the creation of this one. I therefore shall make the point of order against this amendment that it is legislation on a general appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator make a point of order against both propositions?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes, sir; the whole proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ends it. I have done my duty so far as that matter is concerned.

I have now another proposed amendment that is doubtless subject to a point of order, and I will say, as I said about the amendment just ruled out, that I trust no Senator will make a point of order against it. There is a balance belonging to the District of Columbia—the amount I can not state definitely. It will be increased largely by the close of the present fiscal year, and I think it ought to be disposed of. Senators on both sides of the Chamber have said to me that they thought some disposition ought to be made of it. If no action is taken, it will remain in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia without drawing interest or doing anybody any good.

There is a funded debt of $7,000,000, due jointly, or at least jointly owed, by the Government and the District of Columbia. It has seemed to me, and it has seemed to others as well, that whatever surplus funds there are at the present time or that may accrue at the end of the fiscal year ought to be applied to a portion of that debt that is due by the District of Columbia. For that reason I offer this amendment, hoping that it may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add after the numerals in line 13, page 63, the following proviso:

Provided, That any balance of revenues of the District of Columbia remaining to its credit after its share of the appropriations contained in this act has been paid, and after its share of any other appropriations to which it is required to contribute in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, has been paid, is hereby appropriated for interest and sinking fund for application on account of the District's one-half of its funded debt under the provisions of the act approved June 20, 1874, and acts amendatory thereto.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not like to object, because I have not had an opportunity to investigate it. I should like very much, if the bill is not going to be disposed of this afternoon, that the matter go over until morning.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am very desirous that the bill shall be completed this afternoon. I will say to the Senator there is no difficulty about completing it between now and 6 o'clock.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the committee considered it?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The committee did consider it, but we felt that, with a great many improvements under way and others that should be made in the District of Columbia, it would be well to wait a while and see whether the money should go to the funded debt or should be used in the city of Washington.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I personally am not ready to vote on the amendment. I do not like to make the point of order against it, because I am not familiar with it. I do not want to defeat a meritorious measure, if it should be a meritorious measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the amendment be passed over for the present.

Mr. JAMES. That need not be done, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me. I am for the House provision in the bill which applies this sum of $2,000,000 in excess of the one-half to the defrayment of the expenses of the District of Columbia. Therefore I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have again done my duty.

Mr. JAMES. I have done mine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the House provision has as much to do with this amendment as some provision in last year's almanac.

Mr. JAMES. That may be true; but if the House provision stays in the bill you will not have $2,000,000 to pay on any debt. That certainly is a little clearer than last year's almanac.

Mr. GALLINGER. But we will have a balance.

Mr. JAMES. We will take care of that when it occurs.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt you will. You tried to take care of it last year by turning it into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. All the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as a new section the following:

That section 1608 j of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended by the act of Congress approved February 23, 1905, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1608 j. That said jury shall assess, as benefits accruing by reason of said opening, extension, widening, or straightening, an amount equal to the amount of damages, as ascertained by them as hereinbefore provided, including $5 per day for the marshal and $5 per day for each juror for the services of each when actually employed, and all other expenses of such proceedings upon each lot or part of lot or parcel of land in the square or block in which said alley or minor street is to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened, and upon each lot, part of lot, or parcel of ground in the squares or blocks confronting the square in which such alley or minor street is to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened which will be benefited by such opening, extension, widening, or straightening, in the proportion that said jury may find said lots, parts of lots, or parcels of land will be benefited: Provided, however, That wherever the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under the foregoing provisions, shall institute proceedings for the widening or extension of any alley so as to convert said alley into a minor street through the square in which said alley is located, such an amount of the total amount of damages as ascertained by the jury, as hereinbefore provided, including $5 per day for the marshal and $5 per day for each juror for the services of each when actually employed, and all other expenses of such proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits upon each lot or parcel of land in the square or block in which such alley is to be converted into a minor street, and upon any and all other lots, pieces, or parcels of land which the jury may find will be benefited by the said widening or conversion of said alley into such minor streets, as the said jury may find said lots or parts of lots, pieces, or parcels of land will be benefited; and in determining the amount to be assessed against such lots or parts of lots, pieces, or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations and topographical conditions of such lots or parts of lots, pieces, or parcels of land, and the benefits and advantages they may severally receive from the said widening or conversion of such alley into such minor street."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, this may be meritorious legislation; I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to have an opinion as to that, at least a very definite opinion. The fact that it is proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] would seem to warrant the belief that it is meritorious, but it is general legislation being proposed to this appropriation bill, and on yesterday——

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator, before interposing an objection, permit me to make a brief explanation of the amendment?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I feel that it is of such consequence that the Senator would not interpose an objection merely because it was general legislation. I offer this amendment in connection with what is known as the alley problem in this city. It was only offered by myself after a conference with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

If Senators will notice the amendment down to the proviso, it is simply the law as it exists in the District to-day. Under section 1608j. it was held by the United States Supreme Court in Two hundred and fifth United States, on page 135, that it was possible, under a given state of facts, that the section itself might be held to be unconstitutional for the reason that under the old section the assessments must be upon the parcels of land in the square or block—

Upon each lot, part of lot, or parcel of ground in the squares or blocks confronting the square in which such alley or minor street is to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened.

With the statute limited, as it is, it is possible that the assessment upon the lot might amount to more than the value of the lot upon which the assessment is made. We propose by the proviso contained in this amendment to authorize the jury to make the assessment upon other lots, pieces, or parcels of land which the jury may find to be benefited.

We are anxious to take up the settlement of this alley question, and we have thought that, if some of the alleys could be widened and opened up, some of this property might be still continued as available for residential purposes. Under the bill which we passed and which was approved by the President on September 25, 1914, it will be unlawful to occupy some of these alleys for residential purposes after July 1, 1918. That will necessitate the making of arrangements for places of habitation for some of the poor people who are now living in the alley districts. If by condemnation proceedings we can open up these alleys to the width required by the act of September 25, 1914, we can assist in the solving of this problem. It is for this reason that we seek to modify the law providing for assessments.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to stand in the way, if I can stand in the way, of what the Senator from Ohio desires, but I feel constrained to make the point of order that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill. Before the Chair may rule upon it, however, and while the question is pending, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me to make the motion, I think that, as it is now half past 5 o'clock and we are to take a recess at 6 o'clock, we had better now go into executive session.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so, too.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no objection to having this matter go over until the morning. Meanwhile, I trust the Senator from Missouri will change his mind.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Is it contemplated under this proposed amendment that all the cost of widening or otherwise reforming these alleys shall be assessed against property in the vicinity, the near neighborhood, or does the general fund pay a part of that?

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. I prefer to allow the Senator from Washington to answer the question, because I have not investigated that matter.

Mr. JONES. I will say that this does not propose to take anything out of the general fund, but it provides that the damages shall be assessed for benefits upon all the property that is benefited.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not a very questionable proceeding to take it for granted that property in the neighborhod is benefited to the extent of the cost of the improvement? The usual practice, I may say, in regard to the assessment of benefits is to make the basis the actual addition to the value of the property.

Mr. JONES. No property pays any more than it is supposed to be benefited.

Mr. BURTON. But suppose that the cost be greater than the benefits?

Mr. JONES. The assumption is that the whole benefit will balance the damages. The benefit is not confined to the immediate property. That is one difficulty with the law as it is now; it requires the assessment of damages as benefits to squares facing the property opened, and the Supreme Court has held that that can not be worked out. In a case in that court it has been held that nothing more than the benefits can be assessed, and as the benefits which were assessed did not offset the damages the assessment was held invalid; but it was suggested in the decision that benefits could be assessed upon property other than that immediately facing the improvement.

Mr. BURTON. Then there would be no limit; they might go a very long distance.

Mr. JONES. Certainly; and they ought to go a very long distance in this case. This is a peculiar situation, and not like opening an ordinary street, and I am satisfied, if the Senator can have an opportunity of investigating it, he will not make any objection to the amendment. I hope that if it goes over, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri, an opportunity will be given us to explain it fully. If such an opportunity is given, I shall be very glad to endeavor to explain the matter.

Mr. BURTON. Upon the presentation of the amendment I should very much question its validity.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move——

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order now.

Mr. STONE. I am not making a point of order.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Jones	Page	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Clapp	Kern	Robinson	Townsend
Fletcher	Lane	Sheppard	Vardaman
Gallinger	Overman	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is not present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the list of absentees be called, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. WALSH answered to his name when called.

Mr. CHILTON, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. BRADY, and Mr. OLIVER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 15, 1915, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 14, 1915.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Merciful God, the helper of all who truly seek Thee, give us the hearing ear, the believing heart, that the worship of this moment may strengthen and guide our spirits through the changing scenes of this day, that we may conscientiously act our part, leaving the results to Thee who doeth all things well.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to the stricken people of Italy, visited by an earthquake with its destructive and terrifying results. May it bring the world closer together in the bonds of brotherhood and give relief to the stricken people not only in sympathy but in real help in the hour of distress.

Hear us in the name of Him who taught us brotherly love and gave to the world a Father in heaven who loves His children with an everlasting love, and all praise shall be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRITISH NAVAL GUNS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report on a privileged resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report on House resolution 698, directing the Secretary of War to send to the House of Representatives certain information.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Let us have it read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 698 (H. Rept. 1279).

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the House of Representatives the following information:

1. Is there any gun mounted in the fortifications of the United States proper larger than 12 inches in diameter? If so, where?
2. Is the range of those 12-inch guns as at present mounted more than 13,000 yards?
3. Are the British dreadnaughts of the Queen Elizabeth type being equipped with 15-inch 45-caliber guns?
4. Is the range of those 15-inch guns 21,000 yards; and is it not true that that range exceeds by over 4 miles the range of the best guns mounted in the defense of the United States proper, either on the Atlantic or Pacific coast, and including the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report also.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 698, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose the world posesses this information which this resolution asks for, and therefore it is not dangerous to vote for it?

Mr. HAY. Yes; the Secretary of War has furnished to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who introduced this resolution, the information which this resolution calls for. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the resolution and at the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I ask that he be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of the national defense.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I will yield for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This resolution calls for information that will probably be brought out in connection with the fortifications bill. The bill has not been prepared and hearings have not been held on it, and since the gentleman from Massachusetts has already been furnished with all of this information from the department is it necessary to put the department again to the trouble of submitting it in this way when the information must necessarily be brought out in the investigation that will be held in reference to fortifications?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows that while the information has been furnished to an individual that this is a resolution of the House of Representatives, and it did not seem wise to the Committee on Military Affairs to report a resolution, which is a privileged resolution which can be called up any time after seven days, with the recommendation that it lie on the table. The resolution can not hurt anybody.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if it is not a fact that almost all the information called for in the resolution has already been brought out in hearings held before the committee and from other sources? I understand that.

Mr. HAY. That is true, but that does not prevent the House from passing this resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit the reason why this resolution should not pass is because the House will not get the information that is desired here in as complete a way as it will through other channels. With the one exception of the third inquiry—

Are the British dreadnaughts of the Queen Elizabeth type being equipped with 15-inch 45-caliber guns?—

there is nothing in the resolution that will not only be gone into thoroughly in connection with the fortification hearings but which has not been gone into from year to year, and even the inquiry as to the type of guns mounted on British battleships would be brought out during the hearings with this advantage, that you get not simply the statement of the department but you get it under cross-examination, which enables you to develop all phases of the inquiry.

Mr. HAY. I understand that very well, but because of that fact it does not preclude the House from acquiring the information in this way, and it is simply a matter of policy. I see no purpose in suppressing a resolution of this kind. It seems to me the best policy is to pass the resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, nobody desires to suppress the information, but the question of policy as to how to obtain it is a perfectly proper one in considering a resolution.

Mr. HAY. But it does not preclude the gentleman from obtaining fuller information.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course it does not; but it makes unnecessary the obtaining of this information, because it will be fully covered.

Mr. HAY. It seems to me the part of wisdom to pass this resolution. I can not see any harm that it is going to do. The information, as I have already stated, has been given to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], but he wants the resolution passed.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, has not all this information been available at all times to anyone who sought it?

Mr. HAY. The Secretary of War will furnish the information to any Member of Congress who asks for it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. There is no information that can be obtained through that resolution that is not already available and practically a matter of record.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. In a moment. I presume the purpose of the gentleman from Massachusetts is to have this information published as a House document?

Mr. GARDNER. No. So far as I know, that information is not to be found in any published document. It is true that the information is contained in a private letter from the Secretary of War, addressed to me in response to some queries, but over and over again in the hearings I have seen statements made to the contrary of the facts indicated in that resolution. Therefore, in order to have it officially before Congress, so that in discussing these questions later on we may have correct premises on which to reason, I introduced this resolution, with the hope that the chairman would secure the information. I agreed not to debate the question, but was willing for the chairman just to put the thing through and get me leave to print. I think that is correct, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply desire to say this, that there is not a single inquiry here that will not be fully developed in the hearings on the fortifications bill, and I submit that it is not the business of this House every time a particular gentleman determines that the conduct of the hearings on a particular bill are not according to his way of thinking to pass a special resolution. Now, I believe a reading of the hearings on the fortifications bill in the past will show in detail matters touching the coast defense that warrant this House in the belief that the statement I make to it now—that these matters will be fully covered in the hearings—is an accurate statement, and there is no need for the present consideration of a resolution of this sort.

The matter does not belong properly to the Committee on Military Affairs, and while I make no issue on that, not having seen heretofore the resolution and having no right at this late date to make it, all the matters contained in it relate to the fortifications of the country and not to the matters within the purview of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say, that this information, while it is available to some Members of the House, is not available to all.

Mr. SHERLEY. It will be available.

Mr. HAY. Well, it is not available now. I can not see the policy of suppressing resolutions of inquiry which call for facts which can not do any harm to anybody and which will come out, as the gentleman says, anyway.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman, if he will permit, that there is the same reason for dealing with this matter that there is with a number of resolutions that the gentleman has not agreed with the gentleman from Massachusetts about as to the advisability of passing. Nobody is trying to suppress any fact. I am very glad the gentleman from Massachusetts and other gentlemen have recently wakened up to the duty incumbent upon them to read hearings and to inquire into existing facts. I do not want to suppress anything, but I see no need of duplicating matters.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I am not agreeing with all the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts because as chairman of a committee I report a resolution which, if I did not report, the gentleman would have a right to call up at any time after the resolution has been pending for seven days. I am not agreeing with the gentleman from Massachusetts as to his views with regard to what ought or ought not to be done about this or the other matter. This is simply a routine proposition, and I must confess I am somewhat surprised that gentlemen should take the attitude they have about a thing which, after all, amounts to very little and which can not in any way injure anybody, and which only gives information asked for by a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HAY. I have already done that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], in the temporary absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], asked unanimous consent that the latter gentleman have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 20814) to place Candler and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia, for the purpose of correcting a typographical error that occurred in the word "Candler." It is spelled correctly on the back of the bill, but in the bill in some way it has been spelled "Chandler." For that reason I ask for a reprint of the bill in order that the spelling may be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 20814 to correct the spelling of a name. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20189).

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The other day a question arose with reference to granting the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] 20 minutes in which to speak. He requested that he be permitted to talk when a certain item in the bill was reached. A controversy arose in regard to it, and I desire to submit to the Speaker the question as to whether or not, under the agreement, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] and myself are to yield him 10 minutes. I want to read to the Speaker what occurred:

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to renew the request for unanimous consent that I made earlier in the day, that the 20 minutes allowed me in general debate on the rivers and harbors bill may be used by me when we take up the bill under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that when the bill is taken up under the five-minute rule he may use the 20 minutes yielded to him for general debate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, but can not the gentleman indicate where his amendment is to be offered in the bill?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes; it is at the bottom of page 4, an amendment with regard to Connecticut Harbor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the gentleman talking 20 minutes when we reach that part of the bill; but I shall object to yielding 10 minutes of my time for that purpose. I will yield him 10 minutes in general debate.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman asks for 20 minutes when that amendment comes up.

Mr. MANN. This is in lieu of the time he was to have in general debate.

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

Now, I wish to know from the Speaker whether or not that 20 minutes will be taken from the time that has been allotted for general debate? I am certain that was not my understanding, but I am reading the RECORD, so that the Speaker may see the situation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in order to obviate any question about it, if possible, I ask unanimous consent that the 20 minutes allotted to the gentleman from Connecticut be not taken from the time agreed upon for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the 20 minutes which were promised to the gentleman from Connecticut shall be had by him, and that they shall not be charged up in the time agreed upon for general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for the moment, that, of course, allows me to have control of the 20 minutes in my own time when I offer an amendment under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that give the gentleman from Connecticut the right to parcel out the 20 minutes?

The SPEAKER. If it is considered as a part of the general debate, it gives him the right to parcel it out. If it is not considered a part of the general debate, but debate under the five-minute rule, he can not parcel it out.

Mr. BORLAND. As I understand it, he takes it under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. No. That was not the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that good faith would entitle the gentleman from Connecticut to have the 20 minutes to dispose of as he saw fit.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut shall have 20 minutes, to do with as he pleases. Is there objection? It is not to be charged to general debate.

Mr. ANDERSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, it does not seem to me that the gentleman from Connecticut is entitled to any special privileges in the House.

Mr. MANN. That has already been granted to him. You can not take that away from him.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is going out of Congress, and I think he is entitled to it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, an effort is being made to limit the time for general debate, and the gentleman from Connecticut, in order to secure his rights, got this granted to him, and it seems to me that good faith would require us to keep the agreement.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not dispute that, but I do not think it is wise to parcel out the time in the course of a five-minute debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state the request of the gentleman from Illinois again, so that there will be no question about it: That the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] shall have 20 minutes, to dispose of as he chooses, and that it shall not interfere with or be subtracted from the time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] and the time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the President of the United States, in his Indianapolis speech, proceeded to kick out of the rotten, rusted, and repudiated Democratic platform another plank. I realize that no considerate person ought to mention that mere "scrap of paper" in the presence of a Democrat, and I duly apologize for so doing. The President was especially severe upon those who do not agree with him in regard to his socialistic propositions to construct a merchant marine. He said of those who oppose him on this proposition:

Some of them are blind; some of them misguided; most of them are ignorant.

I will make no comment upon the propriety or the lack of self-poise indicated by those words uttered by the President when criticizing a coordinate and supposedly independent branch of the Government. I do not believe, so far as my memory serves me, that any other President has ever used such language as that in reference to another branch of the Government except Andrew Johnson. But whatever we may think of the propriety of the language, certainly it stills the tongue of those who have been, with such show of virtuous indignation, ever ready to denounce anyone who criticizes the President.

It is somewhat hard to understand, in view of the record of his party and of his own record, why the President takes such offense at any man who does not agree with him in regard to his program for securing a merchant marine. It was the Democratic Party, under the leadership of Jefferson Davis before the war, that enacted legislation that led to the destruction of our merchant marine, and since that time the Democratic Party has opposed every measure that has ever been proposed that would be of benefit toward reconstructing it. For years they advocated free ships. They insisted that that was the only remedy. We enacted a free-ship bill. It has been upon the statute books for several years. Not a single ship has come under the American flag because of it. Then they insisted that the next thing was a discriminating duty downward—the most absurd and preposterous proposition that was ever seriously urged upon the floor of this House. But they were just as insistent upon it as they were upon free ships and as they are to-day in regard to the Government going into the shipping business. We wrote that provision on the statute books. It has amounted absolutely to nothing.

Then came the European war, and they insisted that we must enact a law that would permit foreign-built ships to come under the American flag and let them be manned with foreign officers and foreign sailors. We passed that bill, and practically every ship that has come under the flag as the result of that legislation belongs to the Steel Trust, the Standard Oil Co., and to the United Fruit Co.—the three particular trusts that the Democratic Party for years has been denouncing. It has benefited no one but these trusts. Not a single additional ton of freight has been carried from our ports because of it.

It has been of advantage to those trusts that before the war were not patriotic enough to take American registry because they thought it would cost them more to run under the American flag. This law has benefited these great corporations, but it has not benefited anyone else.

A few years ago this House passed a merchant-marine bill. If it had gone upon the statute books, it would have given us several lines of modern vessels. It would have given us a far greater number of ships than we will be able to purchase with the $30,000,000 appropriation proposed in the legislation urged by the President, and these ships would have given employment to American labor, an investment to American capital. They would have been built in American yards, owned by Americans, and officered and manned by Americans. This bill late in the session went to the Senate. The majority of that body were anxious to pass it, but two Democratic Senators held up all legislation by a filibuster until this proposed shipping legislation was killed. The President evidently forgot this discreditable fact when he was so severely criticizing those who are to-day refusing to let his proposed legislation pass without discussion.

The only law that has been written upon the statute books since Benjamin Harrison left the White House that would have been of benefit to the American merchant marine was the law giving American ships the right to pass through the Panama Canal without the payment of tolls. If the Panama Canal act had remained upon the statute books unchanged, it would have been of great benefit to the American merchant marine. But the President, notwithstanding the promises made in his platform, notwithstanding the promises that he made when he was himself a candidate for President, forced the repeal of that legislation by threats, coercion, and the use of patronage, and compelled a Democratic Congress, against its judgment and against its conviction, to repeal that law. The President in his Indianapolis speech said that no great act had been written upon the statute books of this great Congress unless it represented American opinion. When did the President and the transcontinental railroads and Great Britain become the public opinion of the United States? In a few days we will be called upon to make appropriations in order that we may celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal. It should not be the heroic old Oregon that bore her country's flag in glory half way around the globe that should lead that procession; it should be a British battleship, flying a British flag. We have turned the canal over to them, and have constructed it for their benefit. Why should not Great Britain be the one to celebrate? Why should we appropriate any money for the celebration of the opening of that canal? Of what benefit is the canal to the people of the United States? We have had only the privilege of building it for others, who paid nothing toward its construction and have assumed no responsibility toward it.

Mr. Chairman, if it has reached a point in this country where a great party in convention assembled can declare in favor of a great question, then its candidates for office can go out upon the stump and seek votes because it favors that policy, and then that party can shamelessly repudiate its promises and pledges and then live and remain in office, popular government is a failure. What is the Democratic Party platform promise worth hereafter? Who will believe it? Who will believe the promise of a Democratic candidate for President again? And yet in the face of this record the President denounces as ignorant anyone on either side of this aisle who opposes his crude and socialistic policy to build up the American merchant marine.

Mr. Chairman, there are a few other remarks that the President made which I would like to refer to for a moment. He said that there was nothing the matter with business to-day but a state of mind. We are amused by the attitude of our Democratic friends upon this question, even if it does not command our admiration. First, they tell us that there is no business depression, and then they say that it is getting better, and then they add that it is due to the war, and then they declare that it exists only in the mind, and then they end up by saying that it would already have been over if the Republican Party and a few ignorant Democrats had not prevented them from enacting certain legislation.

Now, let us see briefly what is the condition of the country. And I want to refer especially to the proposition that is being so insistently urged that the present condition is due to the war, and that it has been necessary, in order to make up the expenses of the Government, that we enact a direct tax. The loss in our foreign commerce in the first year of Democratic free trade was $517,350,000. These figures I have taken from the Treasury report. They have just been made public. Is this great loss due to the war? Only three months of the war entered into that year. Take the five months immediately before the war in Europe, under the Underwood tariff law, and compare them with the five corresponding months of the preceding year, and we have demonstrated what the effect of near free trade has been upon our commerce.

For the months of April, May, June, July, and August of 1913 we sold foreign nations $218,800,000 more than we bought from them. During the corresponding period of five months under the Underwood law we bought $39,145,496 more than we sold; or, in other words, in these five months of free trade the change in commerce against this country was $259,796,000. Does not that begin to show what is the matter with the country? Over $50,000,000 a month before the European war in the change of trade against us, almost $1,500,000 a day, and yet they want you to think that it is the war that has caused this trouble. Now, let me give you a few more figures to see whether it is the war that has caused the falling off in our revenue. Take the month of October, 1913, as compared with 1914. I want to give you the figures, first, to show how our import trade has increased with the nations that are not at war, and I think it is a fair presumption that the increase would have been the same with the nations now at war if they had continued at peace. Here is the increase of our imports in October, 1914, as compared with October, 1913. With Mexico, 10 per cent. Even that country, that is at war and has practically no semblance of government, increases its sales to us 10 per cent in the month of October under this Democratic free-trade law. Japan, 15 per cent; Italy, 30 per cent; Cuba, 55 per cent; the Netherlands, 60 per cent; Australia, 90 per cent; Argentina, 400 per cent; and England, in the midst of war, increased her sales to us in October 26 per cent. In the month of October, 1914, if my information is correct, the imports into this country were the largest in the history of the Nation, with a single exception. It was larger than in 1913, the first month under the Underwood tariff law, when millions of imports had been held back to take advantage of the low rate in the new law. What has become of the revenue? We are buying the goods. The Treasury is empty. What is the reason? Because we have reduced the tariff. We have let the foreigner into our markets without pay. We have turned over to foreigners the advantage of that duty. The Treasury is empty, the people are paying it out of their own pockets, and no American citizens has bought a single product for a dollar less. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Countries that sold us in October, 1913, $66,000,000 worth of products sold us in October, 1914, $84,000,000 worth.

What a graphic story these figures tell. They demonstrate absolutely that if it had not been for the war foreign cheap-made goods under a Democratic free-trade tariff would have absolutely overwhelmed the country, and poverty and idleness and want would have been far greater than it is to-day. While our imports have increased our revenue has decreased. The falling off of the revenue is not due to lack of imports, but to lack of tariff. The advantage of the tariff is now going to the foreigner, and the American people are paying a direct tax to make up this sum that a Democratic administration has given to our foreign rivals.

Let me give you a few more figures. Let me show you how this law that was to give us the markets of the world has operated and the effect that it has had on American commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read a table showing how we have lost our foreign trade in 11 months ending in November with the different nations and with the world.

Foreign trade of United States for 11 months ending Nov. 30.

	Imports.		Exports.		Total loss to United States.
	1913	1914	1913	1914
Argentina	$21,006,243	$53,403,255	$50,242,560	$25,606,610	$57,032,962
Brazil	86,769,703	85,700,291	37,773,106	21,843,896	16,997,622
Canada	125,564,774	151,156,432	377,427,988	292,279,225	110,740,421
Cuba	120,541,100	139,903,804	67,356,312	62,071,442	24,647,574
Mexico	72,907,501	80,894,117	44,880,976	30,846,579	22,021,013

Summary of imports and exports for 11 months ending November 30.

	1913	1914	Total loss to United States.
Imports	$1,608,570,909	$1,674,619,456	$448,879,719
Exports	2,250,822,664	1,867,991,492

Total increase in imports in 1914 over 1913, $66,048,492.

The President said in his Indianapolis speech:

Do you know, gentlemen, that the ocean freight rates have gone up in some instances to ten times their ordinary figure, and that the farmers of the United States—those who raise grain and those who raise cotton, these things that are absolutely necessary to the world as well as to ourselves—can not get any profit out of the great prices that they are willing to pay for these things on the other side of the sea, because the whole profit is eaten up by the extortionate charges for ocean carriage? In the midst of this the Democrats propose a temporary measure of relief in a shipping bill.

The merchants and the farmers of this country must have ships to carry their goods, and just at the present moment there is no other way of getting them than through the instrumentality that is suggested in the shipping bill; and I hear it said in Washington on all hands that the Republicans in the United States Senate mean to talk enough to make the passage of that bill impossible.

There are some remarkable statements in those two paragraphs. It is true that ocean freight rates have gone up in some instances to ten times their ordinary figure. It is also true that within the last three years, and before the war in Europe, that they had increased, in some instances, more than ten times their ordinary figure. This was brought about by a combination of foreign steamship lines, but there was no great outcry then against this raise in freight rates by the Democratic Party. There was no proposal made then for the Government to go into the shipping business. It is strange that the Democratic Party, that has so long had these things before their eyes, could not see it until now. Every attempt that had heretofore been made to relieve the situation by securing American ships has been met by the Democratic Party with the cry of "subsidy," but now they propose a subsidy scheme far more indefensible than any that has ever been proposed by the Republican Party. The Democrats now propose to buy foreign ships, man them with foreigners, and pay them a subsidy—something that no Republican ever advocated. It is proposed now by the Democratic Party to buy a lot of these old antiquated, secondhand vessels at exorbitant prices, man them with foreigers, and let the Government pay the cost of operation. We know by experience what that will mean. It will lead to extravagance and scandal; and then, as a fitting climax to this absurd socialistic subsidy proposition, the President proposes that if the undertaking ever should prove to be profitable that then it should be abandoned and turned over to private interests.

In the quotations that I have just read the President says that the farmers of the Nation can not get any profit out of the great prices that they are willing to pay on the other side of the sea for farm products. That is rather an amusing statement, in view of the fact that to-day wheat is selling in Chicago at $1.43 a bushel. I imagine that the farmer of the Middle West is much troubled over what becomes of his wheat when he can sell it for that price in Chicago. This wheat is being sold for export. If there are no ships to deliver it, why is it bought? We all know, as a matter of fact, we are sending more wheat to Europe to-day than ever before; that we have sent more since the war than we ever did before in the same length of time.

It is a matter of common knowledge that since the war our exports have greatly increased. These are going to foreign markets, and there must be ships to carry them. It is not a question of securing ships to carry our products to foreign markets. There is a sufficient supply of tonnage. The only question to-day in regard to an American merchant marine is the same question that we have had presented to us for years, and that is whether our trade shall be carried by ourselves or by our foreign competitors. There are to-day in the Atlantic and Gulf ports of this country 105 four, five, and six masted schooners. There are 44 four-masted schooners. There are five square-rigged ships. All these vessels are suitable for the foreign trade. They are especially suited for carrying cotton and grain. They represent a carrying capacity of over 350,000 tons. If there is any lack of tonnage to carry cotton and grain to Europe, as the President says, here is tonnage already available in a far greater amount than can be purchased for the $30,000,000 that he proposes to appropriate for this purpose. The name and location of each of these vessels can be ascertained in the Department of Commerce, and I shall be glad to furnish anyone who is interested the names of these different vessels. Why spend $30,000,000 in purchasing foreign tonnage when we have this great amount of American tonnage suitable for the very trade of which the President speaks? These figures and the figures that I quoted a few moments ago show that there are plenty of ships to carry American commerce. The figures also show that our foreign commerce prior to the war in Europe was decreasing at a remarkable rate.

These figures also show that unless we amend our tariff law we will have little use for ships in the carrying trade after the war in Europe ends. These figures also especially demonstrate that the war in Europe has not been the cause of decreasing revenues and an empty Treasury, for our imports were greater in 1914 than in 1913. The failure to collect sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of government is not due to a decrease of imports, but to a decrease of the tariff.

The figures I have quoted further demonstrate that but for the war in Europe business conditions in this country to-day would be far worse than they are. The war in Europe in some respects has acted as a protective tariff. It has prevented Europe, to some extent at least, from flooding this country with foreign-made goods. It has caused many European countries to make many purchases in this country of manufactured goods that otherwise they would have purchased at home. Practically every idle mill and factory in this country that has recently started operation has done so because of orders received from Europe. This is especially true in the iron trade, of our woolen mills, and of our shoe factories. While every sane man regrets the condition in Europe to-day, yet industrially that war has been of great advantage to the United States.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. For a question.

Mr. DIES. I would like to ask my friend if he would vote for the reenactment of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. When I look at the clipping I have here and see that yesterday there were 562,700 men standing in the bread line in New York, and when I remember that there are 4,000,000 men idle to-day and looking for employment, and when I remember that the same conditions existed back in the days of Grover Cleveland, and that that condition lasted until William McKinley was elected [applause on the Republican side], and that within less than 90 days after he went into the White House 2,000,000 idle men had gone to work, I reply that I am ready and willing now to vote for a protective tariff law.

Mr. DIES. But the gentleman does not answer my question. I asked him if he would be willing to vote to reenact the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As against the present law, a thousand times yes. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. DIES. It is not a question of the present law, but whether if the Republicans had the House the gentleman would vote to reenact the Payne-Aldrich tariff law?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I can not hear what the gentleman says. Mr. Chairman, we enacted the Payne-Aldrich law, and we did it in a way that did not close a single mill or factory in this country. It did not reduce the wages of a single man in this country. It did not leave us with an empty Treasury, and yet all these results have followed every time we have enacted a Democratic tariff law, and the only answer you have to-day is that all our panic and depression and loss of trade is imaginary. Go and tell these hungry men standing in the bread line to-day in every city, and standing there last year before the war, that they are not hungry; tell them that it is their "state of mind" that is troubling them.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I can not.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will not yield. I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand me. I try to be courteous, but I want to make myself plain.

Mr. Chairman, I want to give a few concrete illustrations of the imaginary prosperity that blesses our country, and first I call attention to the case of sugar. When sugar is entirely free we will lose about $53,000,000 annually. We have already lost many millions. There is a deficit in the Treasury of about $65,000,000. Sugar is no cheaper, the Government has lost the revenue. Do you gentlemen prefer free sugar and then pay the tax out of your own pockets to run the Government? What benefit has free sugar been to the American people? The sugar industry has been largely destroyed. Only the Sugar Trust has profited thereby. It has been made a present of unearned millions.

Now, I want to read from the Farmers' Bulletin 645 just issued, a Democratic authority which ought to be good; and I want to show you what effect the Democratic law has had on the farmer.

In 1913 the value of 1 acre of the farmer's crops averaged about 1.2 per cent higher than in 1909, whereas the value of articles bought by farmers had advanced in the same time about 5.7 per cent; consequently, as a result of the greater increase in the price of what the farmer buys than what he sells, the actual purchasing power of 1 acre of the farmer's produce in 1913 was about 4.3 per cent less than in 1909.

That is the way you have benefited the farmer. Now let me show you how you have benefited the cotton farmers of the South. Certainly the cotton planter ought to rise up and call the present administration blessed:

The purchasing power of 1 acre of cotton (excluding the value of seed) in 1913 was 3 per cent less than in 1912, 5 per cent less than in 1909, and 40 per cent more than in 1899. The purchasing power of 1 acre of the 1914 cotton crop is probably about 35 per cent less than that of the 1913 crop.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Why, you on that side of the isle ought to feel very happy over that showing. Let me read you a few more.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I do not want to yield any more. I want to call attention to the coal industry from another bulletin issued by the department. It is from a Democratic official, and I ask the particular attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House.

I read from United States Geological Survey Press Bulletin, released Sunday, January 3, 1915:

According to Mr. Parker's estimate, which is based upon numerous estimates received from leading coal-mine operators and others familiar with the industry, the total coal production of the United States in 1914 was about 510,000,000 short tons, a decrease of about 60,000,000 tons compared with the record output of 1913. Practically all of this decrease was in the output of the bituminous mines. The production of Pennsylvania anthracite in 1914 was not materially different from that of the preceding year, which was 81,718,680 long tons. In 1914, however, about 1,000,000 tons (principally nut and steam sizes) went into storage, so that the quantity sent to market was about 1,000,000 tons less than in 1913.

The principal decreases in the production of bituminous coal were in the coking districts. It is estimated that in Pennsylvania alone the production of bituminous coal decreased between 20,000,000 and 25,000,000 tons and that the larger part of this decrease was in Fayette and Westmoreland Counties, which constitute the Connellsville and Lower Connellsville coking districts. The weekly reports of coke production published in the Connellsville Courier indicate that the output of coke in the two Connellsville districts was less than that of 1913 by about 6,000,000 tons, or 30 per cent, and as each ton of coke represents about 1½ tons of coal, a decrease of nearly 10,000,000 tons in the coal output is indicated in these districts alone. The proportionate decrease in the other coking districts was even greater and was particularly noticeable in Alabama.

The opinion is generally expressed that the chief effect of the war in Europe upon the coal trade of the United States was to retard or prevent the return to more normal conditions which was about to be accomplished when the war broke out. The first three months of 1914 were of unusual activity, the high rate of production of the preceding year having been carried over into the first quarter of 1914 and the weather in January and February having stimulated the demand to some extent. Then came the slump in the iron trade.

I stood here about a year ago on this floor and called attention to closed iron and steel mills. Then the Democrats denied that there had been any slump in the iron trade. Then for the first time we heard of "psychological" prosperity. But listen to this official bulletin:

Then came the slump in the iron trade, general depression in business, shutdown of coke ovens, and a period of distress throughout the coal-mining regions which has rarely been exceeded. The demand, production, and prices were all at so low an ebb when the war broke out that it is not believed to have had any direct influence on the coal trade.

That sounds like a Republican "calamity howler."

I have another official bulletin here, issued by a Democratic official in regard to the cement industry of this country, and I will read only the head line:

Geological Survey estimate shows nearly 4,000,000 barrels decrease. First decrease in history of cement industry.

For fear that my genial friends on the other side of the aisle will think I have forgotten the shingle industry [laughter] I will read an official communication upon that. This is a consular report dated November 9, 1914:

The shingle mills in the Province—

That is, over in British Columbia—

are running, most of them, full time and up to capacity, practically all of the products being exported to the United States. It is reported that the profits of the shingle mills are small at prices received at present, but are sufficient to enable the operators to keep the mills running.

I want to emphasize the fact that while practically all of the products of British Columbia mills are being exported into the United States and the British Columbia mills are running, ours are closed. No man has bought a shingle for a cent less than he did under the Payne-Aldrich law. You are simply buying them from British Columbia now; you are giving the work and wages to the Chinaman, the Hindu, and the Japanese, instead of to the American laborer. [Applause on the Republican side.] That much money is taken out of the Treasury. You have already taken more than $2,000,000 out of the Treasury and given the benefit of it to British Columbia by free lumber and free shingles, and not a foot of lumber or a single bale of shingles has been bought for a single penny less by any consumer in the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not think I am discourteous.

Mr. HOWARD. I think the gentleman is about as courteous as he knows how to be.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Even if that were true, I would not begin to match my genial friend from Georgia. [Laughter.] When it comes to that, he is a positive genius.

Mr. Chairman, I will come now to a concrete illustration of the working of free trade on the Pacific coast. There was a firm in Portland, Oreg., that was importing into this country logs of Japanese oak and cutting them into veneering. I hold in my hand a newspaper account of the history of that industry. They were employing about 100 men. They paid them $3 per day. The Underwood tariff law reduced the tariff upon hardwoods. The Japanese sawmills now cut that lumber and send it into the Pacific coast. This company has closed its mills in Oregon and has opened a mill over in Japan. They employed three-dollar-a-day American labor here, and they are employing 30-cents-a-day labor over there. They retain the same markets, they are selling to the same customers, and this article adds that each member of that firm is an enthusiastic Democrat.

I want to refer to one more industry in my country, and that is the lime industry. I refer to it as an illustration. The natural conditions of the lime industry in my State and just across in British Columbia are practically the same. It costs an American manufacturer 19 cents duty to sell a barrel of lime in British Columbia; it costs a British Columbia manufacturer 3 cents duty to sell a barrel of lime into this country. The American manufacturer employs all white labor. The British Columbia manufacturer employs all Chinese labor. Immediately after the Underwood tariff law went on the statute books a lime company was started in British Columbia, and they came over to the lime manufacturers in our State, and they did it without any hesitation, and they said, "If you will pay so much a barrel tribute we will keep out of your markets, and if you do not do it we will dump our product whenever we have a surplus into your market and drive you out." Our manufacturers refused to be blackmailed. The British Columbia manufacturers have kept their word. Our lime industry is greatly injured, most of the kilns closed, and unless we get relief within a few months it will be entirely destroyed. Who is benefited by that. Did anybody buy lime for less? It has thrown about 800 men out of employment in one county in my State. The Government has lost the duty. The foreigner alone has been benefited.

These illustrations I have given are typical. They show the working of the present tariff law. They demonstrate what is the matter with business to-day. They show why a war tax is necessary. They show the reason why we have more unemployed to-day than ever before. They show why there were more business failures last year than in any other year in the history of the Nation. They foreshadow a bond issue to meet the expenses of Government or a continuation of the direct taxes. They point to a wider and greater period of business depression than we have yet suffered when the European war ends unless we change our tariff law.

"There is nothing the matter with business except a state of the mind," says the President; the whole trouble is imaginary. An empty Treasury, depleted by Democratic extravagance and incompetency, is not an ugly fact; it is a mere optical delusion. A direct tax paid by the people to raise money to pay the expenses of Government, imposed for the first time in the Nation's history in time of peace by this administration, is not a burden upon the people; it is a perpetual delight. Taking the work and wages from the workingmen of this country and giving them to the foreigner is not an injury to American labor; to think so is mental stupidity that can not encompass the perpetual blessings of free trade. Flooding this Nation with foreign-made goods, the fruits of foreign cheap labor, does not rob the American merchant of his markets or the American laborer of his work; this is but the chimera of hysterical fancy. Silent mills, rusting machinery, smokeless factories, these are not monuments of Democratic incompetency and of the fallacies of free trade; they are but the phenomena of a mental apparition that demonstrates that business has now been made free. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The millions of unemployed to-day are not without work; they only believe they are. The thousands this morning shivering in rags, standing in the various bread lines in the great cities throughout the country waiting to be fed by the grudging hand of charity, are not cold, they are not hungry, they are not suffering; they only think they are. If those who think that they are poor and unfortunate would but have an open mind and would absorb the beauties of the "new freedom" and comprehend the altruistic attitude of this Nation toward all mankind, they would awake as from a distempered dream and find that the soup house was a palace of luxury; that they were feasting instead of starving; that the riotous god of plenty sat at the head of the table instead of the grinning skeleton of want, that had so long haunted their hungry vision. [Applause on the Republican side.] Those who suffer and are poor should remember that their poverty is not a fact, but a "condition of mind"; that they who are shivering with cold should remember that it is not because they are naked, but because they are mentally deficient. Their hunger is due not to an empty stomach, but to an empty head. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Let those to-day who are poor and needy, those who are suffering and cast down, those who are to-day tramping the highways and byways of the country looking for work, let them remember that their troubles are imaginary; that their condition is only "a condition of the mind." Let them remember these things and be comforted. Is it not strange, if the condition of the country to-day is "psychological," that the President is so earnestly urging a national employment bureau? Does he propose to give imaginary employment to the imaginary idle? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] It is not strange if whenever we have a Democratic administration that all our troubles are imaginary, that then we always have the problem of the unemployed with us.

When we look upon the facts and figures and when we see the conditions as they exist in this country to-day, and when we remember what the conditions were only a few months ago, and when we remember that history is simply repeating itself, and then when we are told by the President that these things are "psychological," and by the Secretary of State that it is due to a political conspiracy to discredit the Democratic Party—as if it could be any worse discredited than it is already—and by the Secretary of Commerce that it is due to inefficiency and lack of cheerfulness [laughter on the Republican side], we can not but answer these men possessing all wisdom in the language of Holy Writ:

Should a wise man utter vain knowledge and fill his belly with the east wind?

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

But the "east wind" mentioned by Job is a substantial diet compared with that prescribed by the President for the idle and the poor, the ragged and the hungry, the starving and the cold of this country. They should fill their stomachs with the nourishing food of imagination. The President has put the whole Nation on the faith cure. They have tried it now for many months. It has worked well. It has completely cured forever the faith of the people in the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

They say that there is a lack of confidence in the country. Is it strange that the people of the country should lose their confidence when the Democratic Party comes into power? Always when that party has been in control depression, panic, and poverty have followed. Are the people to blame for not believing that this is a mere coincidence? Can the people be expected to forget that when the Democratic Party was in power 20 years ago it wrote a free-trade Wilson tariff law upon the statute books then just as it has written a Wilson free-trade law upon the statute books during this administration? Are the people expected to forget that under the former Wilson bill our shops and factories, our mills and mines, began to close, that there were fear and uncertainty everywhere, that the country was filled with tramps and beggars and soup houses, that the balance of trade was against us, that our Treasury became empty, that bonds were issued, and that want and poverty were universal? Can the people be expected to forget that prosperity was not restored until the system of protection was restored?

Remembering these things and seeing exactly the same things happening now in exactly the same way under this Wilson law that happened under the former Wilson law, is it any wonder that the people have no confidence in business conditions? Is experience to be no guide? Shall the past teach us nothing? Are these facts of history and experience to be overcome by simply changing our minds?

Are the American people ready to believe that in imagination alone rests prosperity? We are willing to admit that no other administration has brought to this country so many imaginary blessings and so few real ones as the one we now "psychologically" enjoy and physically endure. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The learned academic doctors who direct the destiny of this Democratic administration would have you believe that the most unsubstantial things in all this dreamy world of ours are facts.

If imagination could produce prosperity, the White House, the Department of State, and the Department of Commerce are a combination that would deluge the world with "milk and honey" and grape juice. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Thousands of men in this Nation to-day are facing bankruptcy in spite of every endeavor. Thousands have already failed notwithstanding every human effort and have seen the savings of a life of toil swept away. Thousands of men have been compelled to close their mills and factories. Thousands have been compelled to reduce wages and are running their plants on short time. Millions of workmen have been forced into unwilling idleness and are now looking for work, looking for an opportunity to earn their daily bread, hungry, ragged, and cold. All these are asking for relief, pleading for help. And when they are told by these self-annointed prophets of Democracy, of free trade, and the "new freedom," with such serene certainty, with such display of absolute infallibility, with such show of impatience, with such solemn and sublime self-assurance that all this is but "psychological," that all this is but a "state of mind," but a disordered dream of a depraved mentality, then certainly these expert specialists in diagnosis of distempered delusions, these delightful dreamers and fantastic performers, these mythical producers of imaginary prosperity, these voluptuous visionaries, these men so wondrous self-wise should answer to those in suffering and distress throughout the country to-day the questions propounded by the prophet of old:

What knowest thou that I know not? What understandeth thou which is not in us?

Hast thou heard the secret of God and dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the beginning I wish to say that I regret the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has seen fit to withhold the speech he made last Saturday on the bill which is being considered. I do not want to do him any injustice, but as I recall that speech it consists of two parts, the first an apology, and, second, a threat. I may be mistaken in this, but I gathered from the tone of his speech that people who are interested in projects were not likely to forward their interests by criticizing the bill. Also, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]——

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the gentleman just there. He certainly misunderstood my words and misinterpreted my tone if he thought from anything I said or from any action of mine that I was making or intended to make any threat or apology whatever. Nothing was further from my intention.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the gentleman had put his speech in the RECORD we would have been able to determine that by reading it. That was the impression it made on my mind.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As it may come up again, I wish to state that I have not withheld the speech because I did not want anyone on the floor or elsewhere to read it. It was just simply because I had not had time to prepare some tables I wanted to insert in the RECORD.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope you will put it in the RECORD just as it was delivered.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] took 20 minutes to defend the appropriations that went to that State.

That there may be no uncertainty as to my position, I will say now I shall support this bill. I have been and am an advocate of river and harbor improvement. I have the honor to represent a district with more miles of navigable streams than any other in this United States. It has a frontage of 350 miles on the Mississippi River and is traversed by five broad streams, having nearly a thousand miles of navigable waters. The State which I have the honor to represent in part has more miles of navigable rivers than any other State in this Union. One of the most vital questions, therefore, that confronts the people of my district and State is an adequate and just treatment of our waterways. Not alone our commerce but practically all other industries of the State are affected more or less by this issue.

For each member of the committee that drafted this bill I entertain a feeling of kindness and respect. Nevertheless, I think it not only my right but my duty in this instance to call attention to the manner in which this bill has been prepared. By way of explanation it may be said the members of this committee have been confronted by a difficult task. Evidently between the demands of their own people on one side for ample and adequate appropriations for their own streams and on the other a just and laudable desire to economize they have made these appropriations with too narrow a view. They have hearkened to the clamors of their friends in their own districts and States to the exclusion of the demands—and just demands—of the people residing in States which have no representation on this committee. Possibly the result is inherent in our system of legislation in respect to bills of this kind, wherein the committee not only determines what projects shall receive assistance but makes the appropriations therefor. From whatever the cause, the evil is apparent in this bill. States which are fortunate enough to have representation on the committee have been liberally, yes, more than liberally, treated, while States which are not so fortunate as to have representation on the committee have been denied practically any relief whatever. It is both interesting and instructive to examine the make-up of this committee and the States from which the members come, their length of service, the number of miles of navigable streams or coast lines within their respective States, and the amounts of the appropriations contained in this bill for improvements thereto. Also, it is both interesting and instructive to observe how closely, nay, slavishly, the appropriations herein recommended follow the engineers' estimates in those States from which the members of the committee come and how utterly they are disregarded in most States without representation on this committee.

I know that comparisons are said to be odious, and it is sometimes difficult to differentiate between just criticisms of a measure and carping criticisms of men. In this discussion, therefore, whatever is said with reference to the bill—and in my judgment it is loaded down with favoritism shown to States in which members of the committee reside—shall be criticisms of the measure without criticizing the men, because, as I have said, the fault is possibly more that of the system than of the committee. For the purposes of criticizing, then, the system I wish to compare appropriations contained herein for States with and without representation on the committee in sections where conditions are practically the same.

For this purpose we will begin with the States of Florida and Louisiana. The rivers and harbors bill passed the last session of Congress carried a lump appropriation of $20,000,000, with authority vested in the Secretary of War to apportion this among the various States and the projects therein. Under this allotment Florida received $412,500; Louisiana received $86,000. The engineers' estimates for improvements within the State of Florida for 1916 aggregated $1,374,500. The appropriations therefor carried in the present bill for that State aggregate $1,097,500.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman has made a slight mistake there. It is slightly over $900,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman will pardon me. I hope he will not interrupt me about the figures, because they are carried in the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I just wanted to set the gentleman right.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is in the bill.

Every project in the State of Florida for which an estimate was made, except one, a corresponding appropriation is included in this measure; and two appropriations are included herein for projects for which no estimates seem to have been made by the Engineering Corps at all. Twenty-nine projects are cared for in this bill for the State of Florida, and most of the estimates and the appropriations are for identical amounts. The total appropriation for Florida was practically $1,100,000, while the State of Louisiana, with many more miles of navigable streams and heavier water-borne commerce, received but $130,500; and but few of her projects for which estimates were submitted are cared for in the appropriations herein made. Florida has representation on this committee; Louisiana has not.

Again, contrast the States of Mississippi and Arkansas, which lie side by side, separated only by the Mississippi River, and the contrast is more striking still. Every project in the State of Mississippi for which a recommendation by the engineers was made has a corresponding appropriation in this bill, and all but three in the exact figures recommended by the engineers. For one project in that State it would seem that no recommendation by the engineers was made for 1916, yet an appropriation for $110,000 appears in this bill for that improvement. In all, the State of Mississippi receives under this bill $1,034,500, notwithstanding it had been allotted under the bill passed at the last session of this Congress $865,000. While Arkansas, the State I have the honor in part to represent, with twice the number of miles of navigable streams, broader and more majestic rivers, capable of bearing on their swelling tides many times more commerce than all the streams of the State of Mississippi, has received under this bill a paltry $43,000, and most of that for improvements on rivers extending into other States which have representation on this committee. This in face of the recommendation of the engineers, which carried $1,146,000 for improvements in Arkansas in their estimates. Less than 4 per cent of the amount of estimates of the engineers is included in this bill for Arkansas, while more than 95 per cent of the engineers' estimates is carried in the bill for the improvement of projects in the State of Mississippi. Mississippi has representation upon this committee; Arkansas, unfortunately, has not.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. One point attracted my attention. The gentleman did not give the figures. How much was given Arkansas under the lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. CARAWAY. Four hundred thousand dollars, as I now recall, and when we came to distribute that, $320,000 of that was given to another State.

Mr. GARNER. That was done under the Secretary of War, and it was supposed that he would make these appropriations upon a merit basis and as the necessity of the case might demand. Whether he did so or not, of course I do not know.

Mr. CARAWAY. It may be so, but the apportionment made for projects in the State, where committeemen live and where there are no committeemen, are what I was talking about.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the $20,000,000 appropriation bill was an appropriation bill of Congress, and the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, as I understand, is from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; I understand it, too. But it did not do us any good.

Lying to the southwest of Arkansas is the great State of Texas, a State practically without navigable streams, entirely so according to a statement made on this floor by a gentleman of that State, not only not navigable, but incapable of being made so; in fact, he facetiously stated:

> These rivers had to be insured against destruction by fire while in the course of improvement from appropriations heretofore made.

Yet Texas, under this bill, receives $2,250,000. Every project for which an estimate was submitted by the engineers, except four, have corresponding appropriations in this bill, and in most cases the amounts estimated for and appropriated for are in the identical figures. This, notwithstanding the fact that out of the $20,000,000 appropriated at the last session of Congress, Texas received an allotment of $1,395,000. Texas has representation on the committee; Arkansas has not. Thus, it is seen that the States of Texas, Mississippi, and Florida, all of which combined have no more miles of navigable rivers than Arkansas, have appropriations provided for in this bill of more than $4,500,000, while Arkansas has $43,000. This, too, in the face of the fact that those States have been alloted from the last lump appropriation more than $3,000,000. And again Arkansas and Louisiana, with practically twice as many miles of navigable rivers as the combined mileage of the three States named, jointly receive less than $200,000, while these three States, with representation on the committee, received more than $4,200,000. I shall examine but one other State in this immediate section.

Take the State of Missouri, which borders Arkansas on the north, with less miles of navigable rivers, has appropriations in this bill aggregating $1,380,000, or more than $1,000,000 in excess of the combined appropriations for the States of Arkansas and Louisiana, though its mileage of navigable streams is less than one-half of those States and its water-borne commerce not half so great. But Missouri has representation upon this committee; Louisiana and Arkansas have none. But lest it may be thought that I am moved somewhat in these strictures by the unjust discrimination against my own State in this bill, I shall examine States situated in other sections and their respective appropriations. I will call attention to the South Atlantic States—Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama. These are States each of which borders on the Atlantic Ocean, and under normal conditions the volume of their commerce should be measurably the same. Three of these States, to wit, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, each has representation on this committee. Each of the remaining three, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, has not. Maryland, with her broad rivers, extended coast line, and magnificent bay, in this bill receives $45,600. Virginia, with a network of navigable rivers, its historic bay, and its great volume of commerce, receives herein $116,000. South Carolina, with its hundreds of miles of navigable rivers, the great port of Charleston, formerly the most important in the South, receives about $70,000. The aggregating appropriation for these three great States, with their long-extended coast lines, hundreds of miles of commerce-bearing rivers, and their great volume of commerce, get $231,000. Neither of these States has representation on this committee. Each of the other three South Atlantic States has; and these, combined, receive under this bill more than $3,000,000. North Carolina alone in this bill receives $1,263,000. There are 21 projects for that State appropriated for in this bill, as I said, carrying an aggregate appropriation of $1,263,000. North Carolina receives in this bill more than a million dollars in excess of the appropriations made for improvements in the three great States of Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, although their coast lines, navigable streams, and commerce, water-borne, are in excess of that of North Carolina in a ratio of four to one. Each of the other two South Atlantic States has representation on the committee and has received approximately $1,000,000.

Attention has been directed so far to Southern and Southwestern States. I wish now to show that the committee, in taking care of States which have representation on it, has not been sectional. The State of Pennsylvania, with the exception of the Ohio River, which has been treated separately in appropriation bills, is practically without navigable streams.

In passing I wish to say appropriations for the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers are not discussed in these remarks, because the Ohio River is cared for under a continuing project, and the care of the Mississippi has been declared to be a national project by the platforms of both the great parties.

The Democratic platform as to the Mississippi River is as follows:

WATERWAYS.

We renew the declaration in our last platform relating to the conservation of our natural resources and the development of our waterways. The present devastation of the lower Mississippi Valley accentuates the movement for the regulation of river flow by additional bank and levee protection below, and the diversion, storage, and control of the flood waters above, and the utilization for the beneficial purposes in the reclamation of arid and swamp lands and the development of water power instead of permitting the floods to continue, as heretofore, agents of destruction.

We hold that the control of the Mississippi River is a national problem. The preservation of the depth of its water for the purpose of navigation, the building of levees to maintain the integrity of its channel, and the prevention of the overflow of the land and its consequent devastation, resulting in the interruption of interstate commerce, the disorganization of the mail service, and the enormous loss of life and property, impose an obligation which alone can be discharged by the General Government.

To maintain an adequate depth of water the entire year, and thereby encourage water transportation, is a consummation worthy of legislative attention, and presents an issue national in its character. It calls for prompt action on the part of Congress, and the Democratic Party pledges itself to the enactment of legislation leading to that end.

We favor the cooperation of the United States and the respective States in plans for the comprehensive treatment of all waterways with a cooperative plan for channel improvement, with plans for drainage of swamp and overflowed lands, and to this end we favor the appropriation by the Federal Government of sufficient funds to make surveys of such lands, to develop plans for drainage of the same, and to supervise the work of construction.

We favor the adoption of a liberal and comprehensive plan for the development and improvement of our inland waterways with economy and efficiency, so as to permit their navigation by vessels of standard draft.

Therefore neither of these rivers is considered in these conferences.

FOR FLOOD PROTECTION.

The Mississippi River is the Nation's drainage ditch. Its flood waters, gathered from 31 States and the Dominion of Canada, constitute an overpowering force, which breaks the levees and pours its torrents over many million acres of the richest land in the Union, stopping mails, impeding commerce, and causing great loss of life and property. These floods are national in scope, and the disasters they produce seriously affect the general welfare. The States unaided can not cope with this giant problem. Hence we believe the Federal Government should assume a fair proportion of the burden of its control, so as to prevent the disasters from recurring floods.

And while it has a harbor, it has no seacoast, and yet that State under this bill will receive one and three-fourths million dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be given 15 minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Florida has charge of the time.

Mr. CARAWAY. Can the gentleman yield me a little more time?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like very much to do it, but I will say to the gentleman that I have allotted all my time to others.

Mr. CARAWAY. Has the gentleman on the Republican side any time?

Mr. SWITZER. I have trouble to get time myself.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will say that my colleague has gone into this bill pretty thoroughly and has given thorough analysis to it, and I think his speech will enlighten the House very much, indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the State of Pennsylvania under this bill will receive one and three-fourths millions of dollars, and this notwithstanding the fact that it was allotted out of the last appropriation $1,002,500. It has about one-tenth of the navigable waters of the State of Virginia and receives more than ten times the appropriation. But why two Members on the committee, if it should not receive increased appropriations?

The State of New York, with representation on this committee, will receive two and one-half millions of dollars in this bill, and this notwithstanding the fact that it has less coast line and fewer miles of navigable rivers than the sovereign State of Virginia, and this, too, notwithstanding the further fact that she had received an allotment out of the prior bill of $1,568,500. New York has representation on the committee.

Massachusetts has representation on this committee, and, with no greater coast line and about one-tenth the number of miles of waterways of the State of South Carolina, receives about one-half million dollars under this bill. South Carolina receives about one-tenth of that amount. Massachusetts has representation on the committee; South Carolina has not.

That it may not be thought the committee had favored the East at the expense of the West where representation on the committee is concerned, look at the State of California, practically without navigable streams, but with a rather long coast line, it is true, but with only three harbors of any importance, and she receives under this bill an aggregate appropriation of $919,000. Of course, California has representation on the committee.

The State of Washington receives appropriations under this bill of $1,492,500. Washington has not the coast line nor the harbors nor the miles of navigable rivers that has Virginia, yet Washington will receive practically one and one-half millions of dollars—Virginia receives $116,000. Washington has representation on this committee; Virginia has not.

These examples could be multiplied, but the conclusion is already forced upon us that the system under which these appropriations are made is unjust and indefensible. Not only in the appropriations carried in this bill has favoritism been shown to those States with representation on the committee, but from pages 38 to 51, inclusive, of this bill are enumerated numberless creeks, inlets, lakes, and horseponds which have been called to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is authorized and directed to cause preliminary surveys to be made of these waters with a view to ascertaining if in the future they should receive appropriations for their development. In some States, notably North Carolina and New York, every body of water that has not already been improved under former appropriations seems to be included among those which are to receive these preliminary surveys.

In calling attention to these glaring injustices and unjust discriminations against States without representation on the committee I have done so without intention of criticizing any member of the committee or the committee as a whole, but I have done it because I believe it to be the duty of some one to do it. I believe it necessary that the attention of Congress be directed to this condition, that States not represented on this committee in the future may receive a just consideration at its hands. I have done it without any desire to be offensive to the committee or any member thereof. When the bill is read in the Committee of the Whole my colleagues of Arkansas and myself wish to offer some amendments, and to again call attention to the recommendations of the engineers affecting projects within our State. I hope that gentlemen coming from other States, like my own, that have no representation on this committee will look with care into the make-up of the bill, and when it leaves the Committee of the Whole it may carry such recommendations and amendments that there can be then no longer just grounds upon which to found a charge of discrimination. This must be done, and the committee, in my judgment, must heed their protest or the end of river and harbor improvement is in sight.

I am appending hereto some tables and statements which I ask to be incorporated in my remarks.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] use some of his time now?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington is temporarily absent, but he stated to me before he went out that he would yield 25 minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, for the third time within 12 months river and harbor legislation is under consideration. Less than a year ago a protracted debate resulted in the passage through the House of the bill as reported by the committee with, I believe, one amendment not acceptable to the committee. This bill called for an appropriation of $43,289,000. As a member of the committee, I favored by voice and vote the bill as reported. It is unnecessary to rehearse at this time the fate of the bill passed by the House, as these facts are known to every Member of the House and probably to the great majority of the people of the country.

When the substitute bill calling for a lump-sum appropriation was returned it did not meet with the approbation of the chairman of the House committee or his associates. The distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN], stated both in the committee and on the floor that the substitute bill was not satisfactory to him, but he considered it the best that could be secured under the circumstances. I quote from the opening of his remarks:

Mr. Speaker, I do not make this motion because I like the provision which the Senate has given us as a substitute for the bill we sent them months ago. On the contrary, I do not hesitate to say I am not at all pleased with it. I make the motion to concur because I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to do so. I also make it because I am convinced it is the only thing to do if we are to have money to prosecute the work on the many great projects for river and harbor improvement now under way or to maintain in efficiency those already completed. If I were actuated by the rule-or-ruin spirit, if I were to say, as others have said—if not in words, in acts—"adopt my views or our navigable waterways will get nothing," I might perhaps take a different view; but I am convinced it is either this amendment or nothing; that we must either take what the Senate, after keeping the bill six months, has deigned to give or else cease work on the most of the projects now under way, at least until after the 4th of March next, a course of action that would result in much damage not alone to uncompleted but to completed works as well.

This proposition was not satisfactory to many Members, and I am glad to say that the majority of Republican Members of the House voted for an amendment offered by the ranking Republican member of the committee, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], substituting for the appropriation of $20,000,000 carried in the Senate bill $5,000,000, a sufficient sum for maintenance of projects for the intervening period until the present bill could be framed. The adoption of this amount would have occasioned a saving of $15,000,000 and, I submit, would have in no way been a detriment to the river and harbor work.

To-day we are again considering the merits of river and harbor legislation. Before making such comments as I feel constrained to do upon the present bill, and giving my reasons for expressing views contrary to those of my colleagues on the committee, I desire to say that after an intimate association of nearly two years with the members of this committee I find it very difficult to differ from them, owing to my high regard for them personally. As a new Member of Congress and as lowest ranking man on the committee, I feel I should give all deference possible to their more experienced judgment. The courtesy extended by every member to his colleagues is not alone the result of their personal feelings, but it also comes from the influence and example of the chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Florida. Whatever trying situations may arise or differences of opinion expressed, his uniform desire to meet in every way the views of his associates and guide them to proper conclusions is continually in evidence. [Applause.] I wish to publicly express my thanks to him for uniform courtesies and consideration extended to me personally.

This pleasant relationship between the members and the friendship of everyone toward the chairman make it doubly hard to express even a slight difference with their conclusions. I understand that for a long time, if ever, no report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has failed to receive the unanimous indorsement of the committee members. While I did not wish to appear as a dissenting member, I did ask the chairman to reserve my rights to vote for lower sums than the bill carries on various items that did not seem to me to be necessary for the proper carrying out of the work of the rivers and harbors.

Before the bill finally passes this House I hope to see it amended so that the total amount it carries will be very materially reduced. There are two distinct reasons why such action is necessary: One is that there are undeserving projects in the bill, and the other, financial conditions of the country do not warrant such large appropriations. There are certain items in the bill, although few in number, which tend to discredit the entire bill and permit the press and people of the country to raise the howl which we have heard so loudly during the past year of a "pork barrel." I felt during the discussion of the bill last year that this howl was unjustified and unfair. I am still somewhat of the same view, but nevertheless recognize, after careful study of the bill the House passed last year and after still further consideration of the pending measure, that there are items carried in this one which, from the weight of opposition to them, injure the chances of the passage of the entire bill, however meritorious and fair the remainder of it may be.

I do not intend to take the time of the House to point out these projects in extended detail. There are several of them, and in previous debates they have been extensively called to the attention of both branches of Congress. In justification, however, of my dissent on items in the committee, I will very briefly refer to three items.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to the gentleman for a question. My time is brief.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You say you object to certain items in the bill, but you will not discuss them. How are we to know what the Members' views are on those items when you do not discuss them? The Members are interested in knowing what they are.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will do me the honor of listening to me for a few moments, he will hear references made to the specific items I have in mind.

On pages 21 and 22 we find four items relative to Galveston—one for the maintenance of the harbor at Galveston, $200,000; Galveston Channel, Tex., $200,000; Galveston Channel, Tex., continuing improvement and for maintenance, $50,000; and channel from Galveston Harbor to Texas City, $50,000, making in all for that immediate vicinity $500,000.

I have no special fault to find with the item of maintenance, as Galveston is one of the most important ports in the country and a proper depth of channel ought to be maintained; but I do vigorously object to the item beginning on line 11, page 21, and extending through line 5, on page 22, calling for the construction of a sea wall at the expense of $200,000.

Permit me to call attention to the phraseology carried in the bill of last year under the last proviso, which was—

That the structure shall in all respects conform to that heretofore constructed by the county of Galveston.

This is the intention carried by the present bill, namely, to continue a sea wall beyond the point where one has been constructed by the city or county of Galveston at the expense of the Government, and to construct a cement sidewalk in connection therewith.

The only possible excuse that can be offered for such an expenditure under a river and harbor act is that at the end of the wall for which Congress will later be asked to make additional very liberal appropriations there is located a Government fort, which can now be reached in another way without especial inconvenience. No doubt the climate of Galveston is most salubrious and the moonlight nights along the shore conducive to gallantry on the part of the men in the fort toward the pretty lassies of Galveston City. It is extremely kind of Uncle Sam to show a disposition to make it easier for his employees to reach the city; likewise, it is entirely proper that the good people of Galveston should request the Government to improve the outlying section of its city by the construction of a suitable sea wall, sidewalks, and all necessary appurtenances; but I respectfully submit that it is no part of our duties as Congressmen to use a river and harbor bill, carrying appropriations supposed to be solely in the interest of navigation, as a subterfuge for such a proposition.

The fact that a most remarkable tidal wave inundated Galveston in 1900—14 years ago—is perhaps reason for the construction of suitable jetties outside the harbor, and for the construction by the city of Galveston of a sea wall for its own protection, but this is not a sufficient reason for an appropriation from the Government Treasury for the construction of a sea wall evidently intended to protect and develop unoccupied and unimproved flats.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. TREADWAY. Very briefly, because my time is very limited.

Mr. COLLIER. I wish to ask a question for information. What was the theory of the engineers in constructing that wall—to improve the harbor or to protect the city?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have endeavored to describe my understanding of the report. It was to extend the sea wall built by the city by another one to correspond with it to be built by the Government.

I now desire to call your attention to a river proposition in Texas. The item is found on page 23, lines 9 to 14, inclusive, and reads as follows:

Brazos River, Tex.: Continuing improvement from Old Washington to Waco by the construction of locks and dams heretofore authorized and commencing the construction of two additional locks and dams, $200,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance by open-channel work from Velasco to Old Washington, $10,000; in all, $210,000.

The number of the page on which this item is carried in the bill, it seems to me, is significant of the fate that ought to await it at the hands of the House when the bill comes up for amendment. The report submitted with the bill calls attention to the large amount of reduction made by the committee over the recommendation of the engineers in the aggregate amount. The paragraph to which I am referring illustrates this point. This item is carried in the engineer's recommendation at $530,000, from which a reduction was made by the committee of $320,000. Such a recommendation as this by the engineers is very liable to shake the belief of Congress in the value of their estimates and reports. Evidently it is the purpose of the engineers, as shown in this bill, to recommend the highest possible amounts which they can expend or which they think the committee will stand for. In this way, it seems to me, the value of their recommendations is very materially lessened, also the credit which the committee assumes in reducing the estimate of the engineers.

Relative to the expenditure from Velasco to Old Washington, for which the engineers asked for $30,000, permit me to quote from pages 829 and 830 of part 1 of their report:

The high banks erode readily, consequently the navigable channel is unstable, and open-river improvement difficult and expensive. A navigable channel of 4 feet exists only when the river is at a stage of about 4 feet, or possibly four months per year in intermittent periods.

The original project for this improvement was adopted June 3, 1896, and contemplated the removal of snags and overhanging trees and dredging troublesome shoals between Velasco and Richmond only. The sum of $5,000 was expended on this project.

In the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, the improvement from Richmond to Old Washington was undertaken. In the act of March 3, 1905, this improvement was continued from Velasco to Old Washington. The project on which these appropriations were based (see Report of the Chief of Engineers, 1901, p. 1974) contemplated the improvement of the river by open-channel work between the mouth and Old Washington, at a cost of $225,000.

Amount expended on work of existing project up to June 30, 1914, was $377,566.31.

No advantage has been taken of the improvement above Columbia principally on account of the fact that the characteristics of flow of the river are such that the periods during which the river can be navigated are indefinite as to time and duration.

The operations during the year consisted in the removing of obstructions by snagging and the cutting of trees on banks between Mile 99 and Mile 236 with U. S. snag boat Waco. No work was done in the nature of jetty construction or repairs, and the work of that nature that has been done has either been obliterated or is of no further use. Expenditures during the year, $19,661.94.

Over this section of the Brazos River the depth is such that navigation can take place during a 6-foot stage of the river by boats having considerable power. No commerce of any note has developed, nor can any be expected until the Brazos River is improved from its mouth up to Waco, or until the territory about the lower portion is given over more to agriculture than it is now, though the country is getting settled.

The improvement has so far caused no effect on freight rates, and no effect is looked for until the river is improved throughout.

Some freight traffic has been developed during the year between the mouth of the river and Columbia, one boat making regular trips each 10 days, which reports having carried about 1,080 tons of general cargo, valued at about $81,000.

The item for which the engineers asked $500,000, and for which $200,000 is allowed in the bill, is from Old Washington to Waco. The report of the engineers to the committee is as follows:

Amount estimated by the engineers to complete the project is indefinite; total appropriation to December 1, 1914, $1,150,000; remarks, no commerce has yet developed.

I beg to quote from page 831 of the report of the Chief of Engineers upon this project:

The river has ordinarily such a small discharge that open-river navigation is impracticable.

In the river and harbor act of March 3, 1905, an examination of this section was ordered and a provisional appropriation for its improvement was made. As a result of this authorization a report was submitted, which is published in House Document No. 705, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session. This project contemplated securing a navigable depth of 4 feet for four months and 3½ feet for six months of the year by constructing eight locks and dams and 103 miles of open-channel work at a total estimated cost of $2,915,000; these locks to be 170 feet long and 55 feet wide, except Lock No. 8, which is 143 feet long and 55 feet wide, with from 0 to 4½ feet over the lower miter sills at low water.

It seems to me serious complaint can be made against the original adoption of this project which contemplated a navigable depth of 4 feet for four months, 3½ feet for six months, and evidently no depth at all for the other two months. The original estimate of the cost was $2,915,000, which now the engineers increase to an indefinite amount. The original plan called for the construction, in order to secure this shallow depth of water, of eight locks and dams with 103 miles of open-channel work.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How does the gentleman account for the engineers changing their project from two and a quarter million dollars cost now to an indefinite cost, after having been at work on that proposition for 14 years?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would refer the gentleman to the Chief of Engineers for an answer to that question.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does not the gentleman suppose that that project has been worked at long enough to enable them to know that they never can bring that project to a successful conclusion?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; that is my conclusion; at least, it could not be completed at anywhere near the cost originally estimated by the engineers.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Can the gentleman tell why they cut out the Trinity River, which, at least, is on an equality in merit with the Brazos River, and gave the Brazos a lot last year and hardly gave the Trinity anything?

Mr. TREADWAY. As to asking why we differentiated between the two, I do not think it is up to me to offer an explanation along that line.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But the committee undoubtedly has the information that caused them to differentiate between those two projects, has it not?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would prefer that information should come from the gentlemen who are favoring the Brazos appropriation, which I am not.

This I should translate as meaning that an artificial river should be dug at the expense of the Government and prayers be offered that sufficient rain might fall to give a depth of 4 feet when the people were praying hard and 3½ feet when they were less earnest.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. After being completely tired out with 10 months of prayer for rain, rest must be taken and the task given up as hopeless to secure any water at all for the vacation period of 2 months.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman says he will suggest that prayers be offered. Does the gentleman think that prayers will bring rain in that country? [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I was translating in my own mind the effect of the description in the report given by the engineers.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will say to the gentleman that we have been praying for rain in all that western part of Texas for many years, to my knowledge, and we have not gotten any yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. His prayers probably did not reach the Lord. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. How about the prayers of other people?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, let me remind the gentleman from Texas that, according to the Bible, only "the prayers of the righteous availeth much." [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. It is natural that the friends of navigation on the Brazos River should argue that, in order to have any return whatever for the million dollars the Government has already spent there, that an indefinite sum, as recommended by the engineers, should be continually asked for. This is different financial training from any my business has taught me. Probably there is no Member of this House who has had business experience at all, or who has made any financial investments, who has not made mistakes and reached a point where a decision must be made whether he will continue to expend good money in order to protect that which he has already wasted in some bad venture. That is the question which we, as Congressmen, are now confronted with relative to the Brazos River.

A grievous error was made when any appropriation was ever passed to commence such excuse for a navigable project as this. Let us manfully acknowledge that error now, regard the money expended as lost, and cease appropriating Government money in the hope of artificially constructing a river over a hundred miles or more in length. This item should never have been in a rivers and harbors bill. I might add, it is a significant fact that the other greatly criticized item, namely, the Trinity River, where there actually is some water, was not given an appropriation in this bill, whereas the Brazos River carries an appropriation of $210,000.

One other specific item I am obliged to refer to is on page 14, line 23—another fatal number—where we find an appropriation of $100,000 for St. Lucie Inlet, Fla. I again ask the indulgence of the House while I quote from the report of the Chief of Engineers, pages 598 and 599:

St. Lucie Inlet is located on the east coast of Florida, about 260 miles south of Jacksonville and about 100 miles north of Miami, Fla. The inlet resulted from an artificial cut, 30 feet wide and 5 feet deep, made by residents in the vicinity in 1892, across a narrow strip of land separating the ocean from the Indian River. The inlet has widened until it is now half a mile in width. A narrow, shifting channel, having an available depth of about 6 feet, meanders through the inlet. Inside the inlet a harbor of considerable area, but of very limited depths—suitable, in fact, only for light-draft yachts—is formed by the St. Lucie and Indian Rivers. There are no well-defined limits to this harbor, and therefore no attempt is made to give its actual area. A draft of 5 feet can be carried into the entrance of the harbor. The tidal range, both on the bar at the entrance and inside the harbor, is about 2 feet.

The project provides for excavating a cut of 18 feet depth and of such width as is possible across the obstructing rock bar at the entrance to the inlet, at an estimated cost of about $300,000, with a view to securing later a channel, protected by jetties, if necessary, 18 feet deep and at least 200 feet wide, from the ocean to Sewalls Point, at an estimated cost of $900,000.

The maximum draft that could be carried through to the inlet on June 30, 1914, was 5 feet. There is no water-borne commerce at this locality at the present time.

With such a description as this report gives, it is fair to assume that when later a channel is actually secured the item of cost of $900,000 can very readily be enlarged also to an indefinite amount, as has been done in the project to which I have just referred.

Fortunately the Government so far has only expended $72.92 on the development of St. Lucie Inlet. Allow me to suggest that it would be money well expended should we, as Members, take up a collection and reimburse the Government for that amount in order that the $100,000 unexpended balance might be returned intact to the Treasury and the $200,000 carried in this bill might be stricken therefrom.

I notice that no reference is made in the Engineer's Report to the winter colony which has been built up by rich northern people near the mouth of St. Lucie River other than to say that the artificial inlet was made by residents in the vicinity, and that light-draft yachts are not an unknown quantity in that section. Would it be entirely improbable that these public-spirited citizens, in order to secure an easy access for their larger yachts, would be very willing to have the Government increase their artificial inlet to a depth of 18 feet? Also would it be critical of the judgment of the Chief of Engineers and his able staff to suggest the possibility that in this case their recommendation was about as shallow as the water of St. Lucie Inlet?

It so happens that I have spent very many pleasant and happy days in the sunshine and beauty of the Indian River, and perhaps know more about the possibility of commerce there than would be advantageous for me to repeat were I to discuss the merits of this and a few other of the east coast of Florida items. Let me further state that no new projects are carried in the present bill. Although adopted by Congress, we ought to consider the St. Lucie Inlet as a new project as the inlet itself is new, and fortunately up to the present time, as above stated, only $72.92 of the Government's money has been expended there.

These three items represent an expenditure of $510,000, and are to my mind the worst ones in the bill. There are several others which are far from meritorious, but I will leave to other Members specific criticism of them.

As stated before, my second reason for reducing the amount of the bill is the existing financial condition of the country.

We carry in the bill the following items in excess of $1,000,000:

Hudson River, N. Y.	$1,500,000
Delaware River, Philadelphia to the sea	1,500,000
Ohio River	3,184,000
Mississippi River	6,935,000
Missouri River	1,200,000
Columbia River	1,250,000
Total	15,569,000

So far as the immediate importance of caring for the commerce of the country is concerned, there is no question in my mind but that the appropriation for the Hudson River and the Delaware River to Philadelphia are the two of greatest importance, but in order that all projects of this magnitude may be placed upon the same plane I do not intend to suggest a different treatment for these items from the other very large ones in the country. I am thoroughly convinced that the pressing need of the projects enumerated would not be materially injured by reducing these items one-third, making a saving in the appropriation of $5,190,000.

The bill carries the following items of $250,000 and over:

Staten Island Sound	$500,000
Inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort	600,000
Harbor at Savannah, Ga	375,000
St. Johns River, Fla	370,000
Southwest Pass, Mississippi River	400,000
Port Aransas, Tex	400,000
Sabine Pass, Tex	500,000
Houston Ship Channel, Tex	250,000
Cumberland River below Nashville, Tenn	445,000
Tennessee River	287,000
Harbor Beach, Mich., harbor of refuge	362,380
St. Marys River, Mich	500,000
Indiana River	300,000
Harbor at Chicago	374,000
Humboldt Harbor and Bay, Cal	375,000
Columbia and lower Willamette River below Portland	600,000
Total	6,638,380

In my judgment these should be arbitrarily reduced by 50 per cent, making an additional saving of $3,319,000. This would make a reduction of the large items in the bill of $9,019,000.

Items of less than $250,000 amount to almost $9,000,000. By an equitable process of reduction in these items another million dollars can readily be taken from the bill, making a total reduction which I would recommend of $10,000,000 from the bill as reported by the committee.

Doubtless I will be asked why last year I advocated a bill carrying $43,000,000 and this year criticize a bill carrying $34,000,000, and suggesting extensive reductions. The answer is a very simple one. The financial conditions of the country have been so seriously affected during the past year that expenditures which would have been proper at that time can in no way be justified now.

Statistics of the loss of Government income through the failure of the Underwood tariff bill; the increase of importations into the country, with corresponding loss of employment to our citizens; the impossibility of thousands of deserving persons to secure employment and the means of support for themselves and families; the false claim that these conditions have been brought about by the foreign war; the extravagant and reckless expenditures of the party to-day in control of Congress and the Government; the unnecessary assessment of an additional tax of $100,000,000 upon the people of the country at a time when they are in the poorest condition to pay such an assessment—all these features have combined to change the condition in a little over a year's time from one of prosperity to one of deep depression.

President Wilson has just described this condition in his Indianapolis speech as a "state of mind." May I be allowed to inquire whether the Democratic governor of Massachusetts considered the conditions as a "state of mind" when in his inaugural address on Thursday last he recommended an immediate emergency appropriation of at least $50,000 to provide work for many of the unemployed in our State, and prevent, to a certain extent, the overcrowding of the public institutions and the hardship thousands of the people are now enduring?

I take it that the method a man would apply to himself—namely, if earning a good livelihood or having a large income he can afford big expenditures and luxuries, whereas if the livelihood or income is diminished, his expenses must be correspondingly curtailed—would apply to Government affairs.

I believe this can profitably be done to-day in acting upon the bill before us. The business conditions of the country are seriously depressed, and however worthy many of the projects in this bill are, I advocate, in view of this condition, cutting the appropriations to the point where work under process will not be seriously handicapped or possible loss for maintenance arise. The principle herein advocated was in part recognized by the unanimous vote of the committee not to adopt in the present bill any new projects, but I would go further in reducing the total of the present bill than my colleagues were disposed to do.

In brief, I advocate voting against such projects as this House find not to be meritorious, notwithstanding the fact that large expenditures have already been made upon many of them; I advocate the reduction by one-third of all projects calling for over $1,000,000; I advocate the reduction by one-half of all projects calling for an appropriation from $250,000 to $1,000,000; and I advocate various reductions amounting to $1,000,000 in the smaller appropriations. In other words, I advocate a reduction of $10,000,000 from the amount the bill carries.

Again, it would seem to me possible to bring about a more equitable adjustment of the appropriations either in accordance with the population or the interests of commerce in the respective States. In spite of the fact that the greatest ports of the country, excepting Galveston, are in the North, in spite of the larger interests of commerce and the great material wealth being centered there, as in the bill of last year, and as in the apportionment by the War Department of the bill which was finally passed, we find the southern section of the country receiving considerably more than one-half the amount carried in the bill. As a matter of reference I will file the allotment to each section:

Amounts appropriated.

In what way can this situation be explained other than that the control of this House and the greater portion of its vote is favorable to southern interests? I say this in no spirit of criticism of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as it never has been my pleasure to serve with a body of gentlemen less disposed to exercise political power or show a spirit of local favoritism.

It is a source of naturally great disappointment to me that certain projects of interest to the citizens of my State are not within the range of possibility at the present time.

The port of Boston, from the amount of commerce handled therefrom, is entitled to every convenience of shipping and support from the Government for its navigation that can be rightfully granted. The project for a channel depth of 35 feet having now been practically completed, the people of that port and of the State look for early favorable consideration at the hands of Congress for an increased depth to 40 feet.

Great interest is taken in Middlesex County in the possibility of improving navigation upon the Merrimac River as far as Lowell. A very enthusiastic delegation of Lowell citizens recently appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and presented their reasons for favoring a suitable appropriation for this undertaking. It is hoped that in the near future a favorable report will be presented by the Board of Engineers, so that this project can be properly brought before Congress for action.

The people in western Massachusetts, whom I have the honor in part to represent, are thoroughly aroused to the needs and benefits of a channel 12 feet in depth on the Connecticut River as far as Holyoke. When the last river and harbor bill was under consideration, it was then expected that before the present time the amendment to the general dam act would have become law. Had this been accomplished, I would have made, and would have had the assistance of the Members from Connecticut and Massachusetts, a strenuous effort to secure a suitable appropriation for this long-delayed and greatly needed improvement.

I took up the question of Connecticut River navigation in considerable detail at the last session, and in hopes that results may be accomplished during the Sixty-fourth Congress I will postpone further comment upon the merits of this project until conditions are such that it can be actively considered by Congress. Massachusetts is back of these three projects, and we all hope the day is not far distant when they will be favorably acted upon.

The improvement of rivers and harbors of this country is a subject of great concern to thousands—yes, millions—of its people. We ought carefully to endeavor to differentiate between projects that will bring suitable return to our citizens and those which may bring criticism and unfavorable comments to those who vote therefor.

The brief opportunity I have had to study legislation of this character leads me to believe that we have gone too far in the adoption of a policy establishing artificial channels over great reaches of country at tremendous expense. We have also been too liberal in endeavoring to secure navigation on shallow and narrow rivers where there is a minimum of population to be benefited with a maximum of expense.

Perhaps no actual line of demarcation can be drawn, but I have tried briefly to point out certain directions in which I feel convinced large savings can be made in the present bill without detriment to the general cause of river and harbor improvement. If the Treasury was not depleted and if business conditions were good, I should favor this bill, with the exception of certain items to which I have referred and a few others of a similar character, but under present conditions in the country it seems to me to be the duty of Members of this House to vote for a material reduction in the aggregate amounts carried in the bill. With certain items eliminated and with a reduction in the total, the criticism that has been aroused against river and harbor legislation in general will be quieted and Members of Congress will be praised for passing a meritorious bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, how does the division of time stand now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] has 45 minutes remaining; the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with my colleague on the committee, the Representative from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], in his recommendation for a cut on all projects that do not lie within the dominion of New England. The scheme that he has mapped out will not touch a single project in the State of Massachusetts, but, of course, it will include the Mississippi River, the Columbia River, the Missouri River, the Ohio River, the Delaware River, and others that carry each more than a million dollars of appropriation by this bill.

But I have not time to pursue that matter further. I rose chiefly to discuss the 14-page contribution—that is, part of a 14-page contribution—to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD made on the 14th day of last month by the Representative from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. He again voiced his opposition to the improvement of the rivers throughout the country by Government expenditures for the reason that there was shown by statistics to be a declining commerce on the rivers in recent years, and he grounded his objection to further expenditures by the Government on the Ohio River on this same proposition—that there was shown to be a declining commerce upon the Ohio River in recent years; and in order to support this contention he compared the commerce of the stream in the year 1912 with that in the year 1905, quoting the figures of 1912 at 8,618,396 tons for the year and the figures for 1905 at 13,163,656 tons, or showing a decline for the year 1912 below that of 1905 of more than 4,500,000 tons.

This would be significant possibly to those who look only to the present commerce upon these streams when voting for appropriations to improve our rivers, but I have arisen to challenge the accuracy of the figures which the gentleman uses in his comparison.

Upon an examination of the report of the Chief of Engineers on rivers and harbors for the year 1912 I find that the commerce the gentleman refers to for the year 1912 represents only the commerce for nine months of that year, from the 1st of April to the 31st of December. Of course, if the gentleman had taken the commerce for six months or three months and compared it with that of 1905 he would have gotten a still greater decrease in commerce. But this is not all the misinformation that is to be gleaned from this comparison made by the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Is not this statement the only information given us by the engineer's report on which we are asked to depend?

Mr. SWITZER. I suppose the gentleman got his information as to the amount of commerce for 1912 from the report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1913. On page 2537 is the statement that this is the commerce only from April 1 to December 31. What excuse is there for the gentleman to represent that to be the commerce for the whole year? And if he had read on page 2540 of that same report he would have seen the reason given for not reporting the commerce for January, February, and March of that year. The statistics taken on this river up to that time were under the act of 1891, and these had been investigated by the Board of Army Engineers and found to contain many inaccuracies and were entirely misleading, and they adopted a new method for the year 1912, but it was not put into operation until the 1st day of April of that year.

But, as I said a while ago, this is not all the misleading information to be gleaned from that comparison made by the gentleman in his 14-page contribution of last month to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The gentleman gave figures for 1905 which he represented as being the commerce of that year. In 1906–7 a board of special engineers created under the act of 1905 gave those figures a special investigation as did also the Board of Army Engineers for Rivers and Harbors which reviewed their work, and they found that these figures of 13,163,656 tons for that year contained many duplications, and in their opinion the commerce for that year was only about 9,350,000 tons, and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, Brig. Gen. McKenzie, stated that, in his opinion, the commerce was approximately 9,000,000 tons annually at that time.

This information is contained in House Document No. 392, first session Sixtieth Congress, which I have no doubt the gentleman has carefully read, as he certainly would not be asking for a further investigation of a proposition which has already been investigated at great length and fully reported on by the very highest authority, without at least ascertaining in what respect the investigators had failed to report information which would be of additional value to Congress.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SWITZER. Not right now. Wait until I get through with these figures and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Now, if the gentleman had compared the full commerce for the year 1912 with the actual commerce for the year 1905 he would probably have found an increase in commerce of over 1,000,000 tons in place of a decrease of 4,500,000, and if he had taken the year 1913, a tonnage of 9,814,123, and compared the commerce for that year, obtained under this new method, which is as nearly accurate as you can probably obtain, he would have found that there was an increase in 1913 over the actual commerce of 1905 of over 800,000 tons. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Texas if he wishes to interrogate me.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to know if the gentleman will not admit that the commerce on all the western rivers has declined immensely since 1880?

Mr. SWITZER. I think I have shown by the highest authority obtainable that the commerce on the Ohio River has increased in recent years over 1,000,000 tons, as compared with the year used by the gentleman from Wisconsin in his comparison. Of course it is impossible to say just what the commerce of the stream was prior to April 1, 1912. The special board of engineers found that the 13,163,636 tons for 1905 probably did not represent more than 9,000,000 tons, and prior to that time the commerce on this stream, taken in this grossly inaccurate way, amounted to only 6,000,000, 7,000,000, or 8,000,000 tons annually. I contend that, compared with the commerce from 1890 up to 1905, there is an increase in recent years of 2,000,000 to 4,000,000 tons a year.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Did not the gentleman hear the chairman of the committee [Mr. SPARKMAN] state here day before yesterday that they still duplicated, triplicated, and quadrupled the tonnage on all these rivers?

Mr. SWITZER. I did not yield to allow the gentleman to criticize the chairman of the committee in my time. I am not responsible for what the chairman stated. I do not suppose the chairman of the committee had in mind the Ohio River at the time he was talking. I do not know that the chairman knows that this new method of compiling the statistics of the tonnage of the Ohio River was put into effect in 1912, for the reason that the method theretofore used led to great inaccuracies and was grossly misleading. I do not know anything about that.

The gentleman, to fortify his untenable position, publishes in his congressional article an excerpt from a letter said to have been written by some one at Madison, Ind., who states that—

> There is no business on the Ohio River to justify the building of the locks and dams.

And speaking as an expert, he says—

> New dams will make no change in shipping or passenger travel. Dredge boats would be sufficient to keep the Ohio River open for all commerce.

We have no assurance that this unknown writer has any more knowledge about the Ohio River than that possessed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The expert board of special engineers which was appointed in 1905, and to which I have heretofore referred, were required by the act under which they were created to examine the river from the mouth of Green River, Ky., to Cairo, a distance of 190 miles, "with a view to determining whether an increased depth can be maintained by the use of dredges." They made a careful and thorough investigation of the river, and the sum and substance of their report on this proposition, which can be found on pages 36, 37, 38, and 39 of the House document heretofore referred to, is that the dredging method to maintain a 9 or 6 foot depth in low water is absolutely impracticable, and they feared it would result in draining off the water in the succession of pools made by the bars, thus lowering the low-water slope of the river.

On page 40 of this House document the board of special engineers specifically states:

> It is believed by the board that the probable demands of traffic present and prospective can not be provided for by any other plan of improvement not having locks and dams or having a less number of locks and dams than those proposed by the board.

This view is concurred in by Brig. Gen. McKenzie in his report, to be found in the same document.

Here is the opinion of boards of the highest expert authority upon a dredging proposition that can be found in this or any other country, and yet the gentleman from Wisconsin refuses to rely upon it and asks this intelligent legislative body to accept the opinion of an anonymous writer, so far as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD discloses.

I submit that the sinuosity of the river and its resultant sand and gravel bars, forming deep pools of water, is the very life of the stream during extreme low-water intervals.

The Madison "expert" would cut a channel through these bars of the river and drain the successive pools to a lower water slope during dry periods and render the river less navigable.

But it is quite likely the Madison gentleman is no expert at all, but simply some man with a grouch, one of the chronic kickers to be found in every community, who opposes every public-spirited movement, or, like the gentleman from Wisconsin, he objects to making a dependable public utility out of a great natural waterway like the Ohio River.

To bolster up the views of his Madison adviser the gentleman prints in his congressional article an excerpt from the comment of some newspaper edited at Memphis, Tenn. It is a shameful waste of Government paper and ink to dignify such ill-considered observations with a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Having full access to all the data, facts, findings, and conclusions resulting from a scientific investigation made by experts of the highest authority at a cost to the Government of thousands of dollars, the gentleman from Wisconsin rejects or ignores a volume of information contained in the 138-page report heretofore referred to, and seeks in its stead the sporadic vaporings of some chronic kicker as a basis on which to predicate his argument for an expensive and useless investigation of a proposition that has been already thoroughly looked into and reported on by the most competent authority and acted on by Congress.

What is there further to investigate in this matter? The reports of the Government engineers show every fact needed to be known about the river—the width, depth, and velocity of its varying currents, the topography of its bed and banks, the nature of the soils and stratums of earth through and over which it flows.

The number, location, and cost of the locks and dams to obtain the permanent channel of 9 feet in low-water periods is known. A large number of these locks and dams have been constructed, and actual demonstration discloses that they perform the work for which they were intended with the mathematical precision anticipated by their designers.

I believe I have shown by the highest authority obtainable that the annual tonnage traffic of the Ohio since April 1, 1912, is substantially larger than the annual tonnage prior to that time. Four to five millions of people are annually transported on this stream.

A recent compilation by the Census Bureau in my possession shows that at the time of the taking of the census for 1910 3,580,717 people resided in the counties bordering on the Ohio, and that about one-half of these lived in the cities on its banks. Among these are the great industrial centers at Pittsburgh, East Liverpool, Steubenville, Wheeling, Parkersburg, Huntington, Ashland, Ironton, Portsmouth, Jeffersonville, Louisville, Madison, Evansville, and Cairo.

Its tributaries tap the immense coal fields of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama.

The great Pittsburgh and Wheeling iron district and the East Liverpool pottery district lie upon the upper reaches of the stream and at its source. The Allegheny, carrying an annual tonnage of two to four millions, and the Monongahela, carrying a tonnage of ten to fourteen millions, are water feeders at its source.

The tonnage poured into this river from its numerous improved tributaries and the millions and millions of tons of freight initiated annually on the very banks of the stream insure increased traffic when canalized.

The traffic of the Allegheny has trebled and that of the Monongahela has doubled since their canalization by locks and dams; and the improved Monongahela, not over 100 miles in length, last year floated more than 14,000,000 tons. It would seem that the canalized Monongahela is a success as a carrier of freight, and I have no doubt but that the complete canalization of the Ohio will result in an increased river traffic at reduced rates and a reduction of freight rates from Pittsburgh to the Gulf, Panama, and the Pacific coast, which will fully justify the proposed governmental expenditure upon this river.

In response to the crying demand for economy in Government expenditures going up throughout the land, augmented by the prospective continuance of the present unsatisfactory condition of the national revenues for at least several months to come, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has thought it best to report a bill carrying the lowest appropriation possible under which the work on existing waterway projects can be prosecuted economically and the efficiency of our improved rivers and harbors be maintained during the 15-month period immediately following March 4 next.

No appropriation for any new project has been provided for, and the appropriations for work in progress on existing projects have been cut to the bone.

The report submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shows that the War Department originally estimated that approximately $49,000,000 could be profitably expended on the existing waterway projects during the period for which we are making provision.

It will be further observed from the report that the estimate has been pared down to $34,138,580—a cut of nearly fifteen millions.

This was accomplished only after careful consideration had been given to the report on each specified project submitted by the War Department, and after obtaining from the Government engineers the lowest estimate which would allow the existing improvement work to proceed economically until the first session of the next Congress, when we hope that the condition of the National Treasury will have so much improved that our waterways can receive more liberal treatment at the hands of Congress.

The committee has favorably reported practically the whole of every estimate for maintenance recommended by the Government engineers.

In arriving at the amounts in the items carried by the bill for the various projects the committee took into consideration not only the urgent necessity for the speedy completion of the project, but also the magnitude of the undertaking and its importance in the interests of commerce.

The largest cash item carried in the bill is that of five millions for the lower Mississippi; that portion of the stream extending from the mouth of the Ohio to the passes at the outlet of the river.

This is a project of great magnitude and will require the appropriation by future Congresses of millions of dollars to accomplish the object of the present undertaking.

The improvement work in progress in the lower Mississippi is of vital importance to the people who till the three and one-half million acres of land under cultivation in the Delta, as their very existence and future prosperity depends upon a more adequate protection from a repetition of the terrible devastations wrought by the tremendous river floods of the past. The reclamation and development of the 15,000,000 acres of untillable land in the Delta, because of its swampy condition, due to the unchecked inundations from the river, is also of the utmost importance to the people of this region.

This land, when adequately protected from the floods of the river and properly drained, is unsurpassed for fertility by any other on the globe.

On a large part of it two and three crops can be grown a year. Millions of bushels of corn and potatoes can be produced annually, and it is said that this present untillable part of the Delta is capable of producing 10,000,000 bales of cotton in a single year. This great prospective agricultural development in a district near the very heart of the Nation, readily accessible to the great centers of population of the Central States and the Atlantic seaboard, in many instances connected by both water and rail, is of the utmost importance to the people of this part of the Nation, especially during periods when they are worried by reason of the high cost of living.

The importance of regulating and controlling the flow of the Mississippi River has been recognized time and again during past decades by expressions in the national platforms of the two great political parties. The Mississippi River was specifically referred to in both the Republican and the Democratic national platforms of 1912, and each party was pledged, if successful, to hasten the enactment of legislation for the regulation and control of the flow of the river, not only in the interest of commerce, but for the purpose of protecting the Delta from the repeated great overflows of the past.

The next large item appearing in the bill is that of $2,500,000 cash and a $2,500,000 authorization for the Ohio River. The present project for canalizing the Ohio, adopted by Congress in 1910, is also one of great commercial interest directly to millions of people, as well as of great magnitude in its undertaking. The plan adopted purposes securing a permanent channel not less than 9 feet deep by constructing 53 locks and dams from Pittsburgh to Cairo, a distance of 967 miles, at the cost of about $64,000,000, within 12 years from the time of the adoption of the project in March, 1910. Fifteen of these locks and dams have already been constructed and 18 are in process of construction, leaving 20 as yet untouched, although practically all sites for dams have been procured. The scheme utilized to a considerable extent the benefits derived from the expenditure of something over $16,000,000 upon the stream prior to the adoption of the present project. There has been appropriated for the existing scheme, including the allotment made by the War Department out of the rivers and harbors bill passed in October last, the sum of $18,600,000. It will be observed that the completion of the proposed improvement will require future appropriations to the amount of $46,000,000. As it will require from three to four years to construct any one of the dams remaining untouched, it will be necessary to begin work upon a half dozen of these each year during the next three or four years if the canalization of the stream is to be completed within the 12 years referred to. Necessarily there will have to be large appropriations made for each of the next three or four years. The War Department recommended $6,000,000 as a sum that could be expended profitably on the project during the next 15-months' period, but after a reexamination of their estimate, with a view to make it as low as possible and economically prosecute the work, the Government engineers recommended $5,000,000 to go in the present bill.

The Government engineers originally estimated $6,000,000 for the lower Mississippi, but subsequently reduced it to $5,000,000, which is recommended by your committee to be expended on the lower Mississippi, along with $2,000,000 for the upper courses of the stream.

One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars is appropriated by the bill for the improvement of the Missouri River, a stream directly important to not only a large number of people residing in the State of Missouri, but also to a considerable number residing in the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, and South Dakota.

Two million two hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars go to the improvement of the Hudson River and numerous rivers and creeks in the vicinity of the city of New York, which is of the utmost importance to the immense population of that vicinity.

One million five hundred thousand dollars is given the Delaware River, to be used thereon from Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, to the sea.

Eight hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars for the Tennessee River, an important interstate stream; and $1,850,000 is given the Columbia River, an important interstate stream on the Pacific coast.

Physiographically grouped, approximately three and three-quarter millions of dollars go to the rivers and harbors on the Pacific slope and coast; three millions to the Great Lakes, their connecting links, and tributary streams; $650,500 to the rivers and harbors of New England; six and one-quarter millions to the rivers and harbors on the remainder of the Atlantic slope and coast, exclusive of the State of Florida; four and a quarter millions to the streams and harbors of the Gulf coast and rivers flowing into the Gulf, excepting the Mississippi system; and to the Mississippi River system sixteen millions.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is designated by the bill for 172 new surveys and incidental expenses, and ten thousand is given the harbor at Kahului, Hawaii, and ten thousand to the harbor of San Juan, P. R.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I also ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON] be permitted to extend his remarks. He is not able to be present on the floor on account of illness.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire for just a brief period of time to call attention to the provision in the bill relating to St. Lucie Inlet, which has been quite vigorously attacked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a member of the committee, and which was recently attacked by an article in the New York Herald. I want to call the attention of the committee to that article, under the heading of "Strange items in new pork-barrel bill. For St. Lucie Inlet, Fla., $100,000. The Army Engineers say there is no water-borne commerce in this locality. St. Lucie has a population of 32 persons."

Without meaning to be harsh, that is absolutely untrue and as false as anything that ever emanated from the lips of Ananias. I presume that this extremely wise correspondent, when he said the population was 32 persons, referred to the little hamlet of St. Lucie, established by the late Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania, which is some 30 miles north of St. Lucie Inlet. It has no connection with St. Lucie Inlet on the face of the earth, and is located on the Indian River at least 30 miles above and north of this inlet. That statement by this gentleman is about as correct as any other statement that has been made by the opponents of this appropriation with reference to this inlet.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question.

Mr. FREAR. Did the gentleman hear the remarks by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a member of the committee, on that proposition?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I heard some statements made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I do not know where he got his information, but if he refers to or attempts to belittle this inlet, his information is just as correct as is the other statement.

It is true that this inlet originally was opened by the citizens of that progressive locality. If gentlemen understand, the Indian River lies along the coast of Florida, and there is a narrow strip of land between the river and the Atlantic Ocean. St. Lucie River and the Indian River come together at what is known as Sewalls Point. Directly in front of Sewalls Point was where this inlet was opened up by the citizens of that vicinity.

Originally there was an inlet known as Gilberts Bar, 3 or 4 miles below, which on account of neglect had filled up, and the citizens of the community opened up this inlet in front of Sewalls Point. I want to call the attention of the committee to what the conditions were at that time, and I read from a report of Capt. Spaulding, the then district officer, in House Document 1312, Sixtieth Congress, second session:

> It is fair to assume that with water transportation afforded direct from St. Lucie Inlet to New York the rate would not exceed the present rate from Havana of 50 cents per box, which would represent an annual saving of $162,000 on the shipments of oranges and pineapples alone upon the basis of the estimate for 1907. It is estimated that 24,000 barrels of fish were shipped to New York in 1907, upon which $192,000 was paid for freight. The incoming freight for the same period is estimated at 39,000 tons, upon which $413,400 was paid for transportation charges. This makes a total of $1,584,900 paid for freight by the section which would be tributary to the commerce of St. Lucie Inlet if the inlet were available for coastwise vessels. The freight charges on first-class goods from New York to Jacksonville is 67 cents and from Jacksonville to Stuart is $1.02 per hundred pounds. It is estimated that such a reduction in freight charges as might reasonably be expected in case shipments could be made direct by water to and from New York would mean a saving of about $514,000 annually to the commercial interests of this section.

This was in 1908. So it was originally opened by the citizens of the community, who paid for it.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. For a question.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman is familiar with the fact, will he tell the committee how much water area of Indian River and vicinity would be served by this inlet?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hardly know. Indian River is at least 160 miles long.

Mr. MOORE. There is no other way of getting to it from the ocean?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; not between Jacksonville and Miami.

Mr. MOORE. Then 160 miles at least would be served by this inlet?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely; and probably 30 miles more up the St. Lucie.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. TREADWAY. For the sake of accuracy, would it not be well for the gentleman to state that there is an inlet at Titusville and one at Jupiter? The gentleman said there was none between Jacksonville and Miami.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I meant there was none which would carry a vessel of any kind that the Army engineers would approve. I introduced the original bill for a survey for the inlet after I came here. We had hearings before the Board of Engineers, and finally, in 1908, I prevailed on the Board of Engineers to send a committee to the vicinity itself, and three members of the Board of Engineers went there. They had hearings; they interviewed the people of that community; and then recommended, as a result of one of the most thorough and painstaking and careful investigations ever made, an appropriation of $1,460,000, and a channel with 18 feet over the bar was recommended by them. They did that for two reasons: Because the hearings showed that to cut this inlet to that depth would result in a saving to the people of that vicinity of at least $600,000 annually in freight, and would result in a large saving of life and property as a harbor of refuge; because from Jacksonville to Key West, a distance of between 500 and 600 miles, there was not a single open point on the coast which could accommodate a vessel drawing as much as 12 feet of water.

Those were the two reasons which actuated the district officer, the division officer, and the Board of Engineers, and the Chief of Engineers, and every one of them agreed in the recommendation that this improvement ought to be made in the interest of navigation and in the interest of the people who live in that vast territory.

I want to call to the gentleman's attention some of the products of that community. He has attempted to belittle it; and the New York Herald, or the correspondent of it, delving into the mire of modern yellow journalism, undertakes to belittle one of the greatest sections of my State. I want to say to him that the Army officers—not the people who live there, but the sworn officers of the Government—recommend this; and I think it comes with ill grace from any Member of this House to stand upon this floor and impugn the integrity of the sworn officers of this Government, who are officers of our Army, and who ought to be and who are the most honorable men in all the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, here is what Capt. Spalding says:

> It is fair to assume that with water transportation afforded direct from St. Lucie Inlet to New York the rate would not exceed the present rate from Habana of 50 cents per box, which would represent an annual saving of $162,000 on the shipments of oranges and pineapples alone upon the basis of the estimate for 1907. It is estimated that 24,000 barrels of fish were shipped to New York in 1907, upon which $192,000 was paid for freight. The incoming freight for the same period is estimated at 39,000 tons, upon which $413,400 was paid for transportation charges. This makes a total of $1,584,900 paid for freight by the section which would be tributary to the commerce of St. Lucie Inlet if the inlet were available for coastwise vessels.

And he goes on to say it would mean a saving of about $514,000 annually to the commercial interests of this section, and yet a community that pays a million and a half of freight is too insignificant, according to the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], to warrant the Government in undertaking the improvement.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that that is a dangerous and a treacherous coast. I want to say that the great vessels which leave New York and go to Cuba and to Galveston and on down the coast go within sight of this inlet. I have stood upon the front veranda of the little hotel at the inlet and I have seen these great steamers go by in plain view, when you could almost distinguish who stood upon the deck of the vessel itself. The Army Engineers, every one of them—the Board of Engineers, the chief, and all of them—have agreed together that this point is the place along all of that coast where a harbor of refuge should be built in order to save human life and property and also to take care of the great commercial interests of the section. There are millions and millions of feet of lumber lying only 15 or 20 miles back of this inlet. There are millions of tons of phosphate which would go out of this inlet to Germany and the other countries of the world, and I have but recently been informed that a cross State railroad has been organized in view of this contemplated improvement, which will open up the phosphate beds of southern Florida and go through this mighty tract of timber, which has never been touched with the ax or any other implement.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will an 18-foot channel there accommodate these great ocean liners?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It will accommodate vessels that are large enough to do the traffic of the port, and it will accommodate nearly all of the vessels that pass there, because the Ward ships and the Clyde ships and all those coastwise steamers can go into any harbor where there is 18 feet of water over the bar. They draw only about 13 to 14 and 15 feet, most of them.

Mr. Chairman, I am amazed that any gentleman should protest against this improvement. All along that whole coast there are inlets sufficient to let the fish pass into the river and out into the ocean, but this is the inlet which the Army Engineers, after examining all of them from Jacksonville to Key West, have finally decided should be improved and could be improved with less money and could be made more effective than all of the rest. I sincerely trust that this provision in the bill will remain. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the other day the President of the United States made a speech at Indianapolis, in which he said:

> The trouble with the Republican Party is that it has not had a new idea for 30 years. I am not speaking as a politician; I am speaking as an historian. I have looked for new ideas in the records, and I have not found any proceeding from the Republican ranks.

Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States prides himself upon having been a writer of history. Think what a chasm he would meet with if he were to endeavor to write the history of the United States down to date! For 30 years during the busiest period of our country he would find nothing done and no new ideas expressed. Certainly the President will not find during the last 30 years much that the Democratic Party has done or many Democratic ideas which have been advanced which that party has not finally repudiated. Suppose the President were to start to write the history of the United States for the last 30 years. See what he would omit:

The firm establishment of the single gold standard of money [applause on the Republican side]; the burying too deep for resurrection of Bryan's free coinage of silver and the double standard of money [applause on the Republican side]; the setting of Cuba free and the establishing of the independent Cuban Government, but with certain rights retained to the United States necessary for our welfare [applause on the Republican side]; the establishing of a Philippine policy, to the great benefit of the Filipinos and to the great credit of the United States [applause on the Republican side]; the ending of the old Bulwer-Clayton treaty, and the constructing, owning, and operating of the Panama Canal by the United States Government itself by direct labor [applause on the Republican side]; the complete regulation and control of railway rates, railway shipments, and safety appliances by means of full power conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission [applause on the Republican side]; the protection of foods and drugs from adulteration and misbrandings by the pure-food law [applause on the Republican side]; the reclamation of arid and waste lands by irrigation; the moral cleaning up through the white-slave law; the tremendous aid given to commerce, to enterprise, to business, and to labor through the creation of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Bureau of Standards, Mines, and so forth [applause on the Republican side]; the development of the Department of Agriculture until it has become one of the mightiest forces for good in the country; the creation of the Bureau of Corporations, which caused and developed into the new Federal Trade Commission; the policy that America should have final power in and control of the North Pacific Ocean and the acquirement of the Hawaiian Islands and other strategic points [applause on the Republican side]; the postal savings bank and, in reality, the parcel post; the Aldrich Monetary Commission, which prepared and proposed all that is good in the Federal reserve bank law; the Federal Trade Commission was first proposed nationally in the last Republican platform and is the direct outgrowth of the Bureau of Corporations, which I had the honor to first suggest [applause on the Republican side]; the quarantine laws and Public Health Service, which are our guaranty against disastrous prolonged epidemics; the overthrow by Speaker Reed, a Republican House, and the courts of the theory of constructive absence from the legislative body, a theory which was defended by the Democratic Party to the last final ditch, and which had done more to hinder progress and paralyze legislation than anything else [applause on the Republican side]; the peace treaties; the advance of the peace ideas; the actual building of a great Navy and the organization of the Army into an efficient and effective preparation for conflict; the conservation of natural resources [applause on the Republican side]; the reservation from selfish exploitation of the water powers, forests, mineral products, great scenic effects, and so forth [applause on the Republican side]; the creation of new national forests in the East; all of these would be missed by the President as an historian if he were writing a history of the last 30 years. He can find no new ideas and nothing done, but I would like some day for some gentleman on the other side of the aisle to rise and tell what the Democratic Party has done within the last 30 years, and what it has proposed which it has not repudiated. [Applause on the Republican side.] The President would miss, too, the creation of a tariff board with a view to remove tariff questions of detail out of politics into the sphere of common business sense as far as it is possible. There are many other things to which I might call attention, but will not now take the time for that purpose. Having reached the point of a tariff board, I quote from the President's speech at Indianapolis on this subject, with the heading, "For scientific handling of tariff":

That kind of science I do not care to know anything about, except enough to stop it. But if by scientific treatment of the tariff they mean adjustment to the actual trade conditions of America and the world, then I am with them; and I want to call their attention, for though they voted for it they apparently have not noticed it, to the fact that the bill which creates the new trade commission does that very thing. We were at pains to see that it was put in there. That commission is authorized and empowered to inquire into and report to Congress not only upon all the conditions of trade in this country, but upon the conditions of trade, the cost of manufacture, the cost of transportation—all the things that enter into the question of the tariff—in foreign countries as well as in the United States, and into all those questions of foreign combinations which affect international trade between Europe and the United States. It has the full powers which will guide Congress in the scientific treatment of questions of international trade. Being by profession a schoolmaster, I am glad to point that out to the class of uninstructed Republicans, though I have not always taught in the primary grade.

In fact, the President claims that he sneaked something into a law that was not understood by Congress. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] In this House when a gentleman rises and says that he sneaked something into a law as a joker without the other side suspecting it, he would lose cast as an honorable legislator and man. [Applause on the Republican side.] And it is because of this fact that I rise to defend the President in the accusation which he brought against himself. [Applause on the Republican side.] I regret that the President does not have that fine sense of legislative honor which would have prevented him from making such a claim for himself. [Applause on the Repulican side.] The law creating the Department of Commerce and Labor included in it a provision including a Bureau of Manufactures:

It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary, to foster, promote, and develop the various manufacturing industries of the United States, and markets for the same at home and abroad, domestic and foreign, by gathering, compiling, publishing, and supplying all available and useful information containing such industries and such markets.

Unfortunately, a Democratic House abolished this bureau, so that when the trade commission bill came before the Congress some of us thought it might be desirable to incorporate into the new bill some of the authority which had been granted formerly in the Bureau of Corporations abolished by a Democratic House. The Bureau of Corporations was created in a bill creating a Department of Commerce and Labor. That bureau was given this authority:

The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation. It shall also be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the gentleman passes from the Bureau of Manufactures, will not the gentleman state that the powers conferred on the Bureau of Labor and the Bureau of Manufactures were conferred on the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce, which had very extensive powers to make investigations, which the gentleman says were abolished when the Bureau of Manufactures was abolished?

Mr. MANN. Evidently the President does not so think, or he would not have called attention to the fact that he had the power to make investigations of these various conditions through the new bureau in the Department of Commerce, though I suspect the President did not know we had abolished the Bureau of Manufactures or created a new one.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I had in mind was that the gentleman stated that a Democratic Congress had abolished the Bureau of Manufactures, that had certain powers, and I thought it proper the record show that those and more extensive powers along similar lines were vested in the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce which a Democratic Congress had created.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman means is for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to show he makes the statement—which, however, is not correct. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] There could be no broader powers conferred than were conferred by the Congress in creating the Bureau of Manufactures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How much more time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. MANN. I would like to be yielded 10 minutes more.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the Federal Trade Commission bill was before the House, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which had reported the bill, said:

The Interstate Trade Commission—

It was then called the "Interstate Trade Commission"— will have plenary power to investigate under the acts now existing as to the Bureau of Corporations. It can obtain any sort of information it may find necessary under that section.

Referring to the section of the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor which provided for the Bureau of Corporations and which contained the broadest power possible, Mr. STEVENS again said that the exporters asked to have this power extended as to all corporations doing business with foreign countries. The bill itself as introduced into the House, in section 3, contained this language:

That upon the organization of the commission and the election of its chairman all the existing powers, authority, and duties of the Bureau of Corporations and of the Commissioner of Corporations conferred upon them by the act entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, and all amendments thereto, and also those conferred upon them by resolutions of the United States Senate passed on March 1, 1913, on May 27, 1913, and on June 18, 1913, shall be vested in the commission.

This section would give to the Federal Trade Commission under the bill as introduced the broadest powers which could be conferred by any legislative body. But as the Senate passed the bill they left that provision out and inserted as section 3 of the Senate bill this provision:

The commission shall have power, among others—
(a) To investigate from time to time, and as often as the commission may deem advisable, the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce relating to or in any way affecting the commerce in which such corporation under inquiry is engaged.

The Senate provision left out the broad power which had been included in the House bill to gather and compile useful information concerning all these corporations.

And when the bill went to conference, after consultation with the Republican leader on the floor of the House, Mr. STEVENS, the Republican member of the conference committee, insisted upon including this language in the conference report, and it was put in, and under that the President now claims in part the power of a tariff commission. [Applause on the Republican side.] Put one over on us?

The Senate provision also contained this language:

The commission is hereby directed to investigate, as expeditiously as may be, trade conditions in foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of buyers, dealers, or traders may injuriously affect the export trade of the United States, and to report to Congress thereon from time to time.

This Senate provision, it will be noted, provided for only one investigation to be made, as expeditiously as possible, of trade conditions affecting the export trade of the United States, not the import trade, and not permitting investigations to be made from time to time. But the conferees inserted "To investigate from time to time trade conditions in and with foreign countries," the "with foreign countries" being inserted in conference and "other conditions" being inserted in conference, and the words "export trade" being stricken out and the words "foreign trade" being inserted, meaning both export and import trade, and tariff relates to import trade. And it added "shall report to Congress with such recommendations as it deems advisable." And these changes under which the President claims he has the power of a tariff commission were inserted on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], the Republican member of the conference committee. [Applause on the Republican side.] Put one over on us? We did not know what was being done? But, after all, we did it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The distinguished gentleman from Maryland, one of the able and distinguished judges of the bench of this city, Judge Covington, was one of the conferees of the House in this conference. From the beginning of the consideration of the Trade Commission bill until the conference report had been adopted he and Mr. STEVENS, the Republican member, frequently consulted with me in regard to this bill, which, as we understood, was to be treated as a nonpartisan proposition. Judge Covington, if he were asked—though I have not asked him—will say that these provisions which the President says he has sneaked into a bill which the Republicans voted for without knowing it were put into the bill after consultation with the Republican floor leader by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS]. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, what I want to know is whether the President, having the power which he thought he had obtained by sneak, will exercise it? Will you give him the money to make a tariff investigation as to facts, and will he do it? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I undertook to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, in the course of his remarks a few moments ago, but in his wisdom he saw proper, owing, no doubt, to his limited time, not to yield. But I want to remind him, inasmuch as he has recounted many of the achievements accomplished by his party during the last 30 years, that he doubtless overlooked in his haste and in his zeal that which to him and his party stands uppermost in all this great program of constructive legislation for the past quarter of a century. A famous Republican Senator at the other end of the Capitol [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], loyal to his party, standing as one of the foremost legislative figures in all the country, with many years of distinguished service here and in his native State, proclaimed from his place on the floor of the Senate that when a certain Republican President—Mr. Roosevelt—a gentleman of some standing at one time in the Republican Party—yea, even sublimated standing—entered the White House, he found 149 trusts, as I recall, as the especial creatures of Republican legislation, capitalized to the extent of about $3,000,000,000, but that after seven and one-half years of loyal service to his party and its backers, carrying out the behests of syndicated interests, he left to himself and his party a monument higher than all the other achievements and accomplishments combined—over 1,000 trusts, capitalized at $32,000,000,000, or about one-fourth of the total wealth of the United States, and a great percentage of that water, besides!

So I submit that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in his zeal, in his haste, failed to call attention to this glorious performance, and certainly this should not be overlooked in making an appraisal of the great constructive record of his party.

The President, Mr. Chairman, in his great speech at Indianapolis, spoke not so much as the President of the United States as he would in sending to the Congress a state paper, but it was an utterance of Woodrow Wilson; and that speech, sir, so full of truth and historical statement, has given much discomfiture, not so much to the great rank and file of the Republican Party, by no means responsible for its record, as to its foremost leaders, chargeable with the perfidy of its legislative history. There has been given to them no rest since that deliverance, and there will be none in the months to come. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon at a quarter to 5 was enacted in this House a scene, a little parliamentary tragedy, as it were, and not so little when the consequences are known.

While the rules of the House forbade any funeral sermon yesterday at the obsequies, it is perhaps in order to-day to say something at an inquest over the remains.

Yesterday was Calendar Wednesday. The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] is chairman, had the call of the day. Yesterday was the second Calendar Wednesday of this session occupied by this committee. The rules of the House provide that one committee can not occupy but two days, except for unfinished business.

At a quarter to 5 yesterday the apple-barrel bill, for the benefit of the trade in the East and South, was passed. The next bill on the calendar was H. R. 11178, the apple-box bill, for the benefit of the West. Instead of calling up this bill and thus making it the unfinished business, entitling it to consideration for the balance of the day and on next Wednesday, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], the chairman of the committee, surrendered his committee's right to Calendar Wednesday, deserted the apple-box bill, and moved to adjourn. All he had to do to secure the promised consideration of the apple-box bill on yesterday and next Wednesday was to say, "I call up H. R. 11178." This would have insured consideration of the bill until the bill should be disposed of. Instead of doing this he chloroformed further consideration of the bill by the parliamentary legerdemain of moving to adjourn.

Immediately after the passage of the apple-barrel bill the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday shows the following proceedings:

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. MANN. Oh, no; let us stay here a while longer.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House do now adjourn.
The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.
Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays. There are many appropriation bills yet undisposed of. It is not 5 o'clock yet.

The yeas and nays were taken, and the House adjourned, by a vote of 155 yeas to 75 nays, at 5.15 o'clock.

Thus was the standard apple box killed and interred in the parliamentary cemetery, alongside of the rural-credit bill. This was done without any consideration of the bill, without giving any information to the House of what was taking place, without the consoling words of its friends either at its deathbed or grave; for a motion to adjourn, the method of its asphyxiation, admits of no debate.

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corse to the rampart we hurried.

The passage of this bill was particularly desired by those interested in the apple industry in the West and Northwest. It has received practically the unanimous approval of all branches of the apple trade and industry which uses the box instead of the barrel; it has been approved by representatives of fruit growers, fruit jobbers, horticultural societies, boards of trade, granges, commission merchants, apple shippers, and exporters from all parts of the United States, but more especially from such bodies in the western half of the United States. The defeat of this bill may be another example of the "team work" we lately hear extolled so much, for sitting near Chairman ASHBROOK was Majority Leader UNDERWOOD, instigating the motion to adjourn. Mr. UNDERWOOD plumes himself before his constituents in senatorial campaigns with free cotton ties and cotton bagging. He doubtless saw no campaign habiliments or material for Alabama in the apple box.

This bill was largely drafted by Charles E. Whisler, of Medford, Oreg. It was introduced by the gentleman from California, Judge RAKER, who, together with my colleague, Mr. HAWLEY, was indefatigable in urging its consideration and passage by this House. Its suppression will be a great disappointment to my constituents, who feel that the bill was at least entitled to the consideration of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I represent the famous Hood River apple section of Oregon. It is the Oregon apple which has made famous in European countries our export apple trade, and it is the Hood River apple which has made famous the Oregon apple.

Mr. Chairman, had the Hood River apple grown in the Garden of Eden man might not have fallen, for one bite, one taste of its lusciousness, would have made Eve forget all about the forbidden fruit, and caused her to cease longing for that proscribed article of diet. [Applause.]

The interest of Hood River County alone in this bill may be seen when I tell you that last year there were shipped from this one Oregon county 1,500 cars of apples. Over 1,000,000 boxes were used in the trade in this county alone.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to protest most vigorously against the sidetracking of this bill yesterday.

They that have done this deed are honorable.
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not
That made them do it; they are wise and honorable
And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.

I have just one word to say by way of admonition, and not by way of threat. It is this: That the apple-barrel bill which we western Members helped to pass in the House yesterday has not yet passed the Senate. [Applause.]

Let me add, Mr. Chairman, that the apple-barrel bill, which we western and northwestern Members helped to pass on this floor by helping to maintain a quorum, has not yet passed the Senate.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me a few minutes in which to make a reply to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] two minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, in reply to the charges made by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. SINNOTT], that as the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures I attempted to reach an agreement with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], a Republican member of the committee, as to the time for the debate on the apple-box bill. Mr. DILLON, my colleague on that committee, was very bitterly opposed to the bill and proposed to fight it. I say this without any reflection upon the gentleman from South Dakota. He is conscientious in his opposition, I may say, upon the ground that the bill is permissive and not mandatory.

As gentlemen in this House know, three hours and a half were used in debate upon the standard apple-barrel bill on Calendar Wednesday of last week. It was my desire to move the previous question on that bill yesterday when the House met. If that had been done, it was my intention to call up the apple-box bill. But gentlemen insisted that more time be given upon the barrel bill, and you know the result. Five roll calls followed, and there was a filibuster all afternoon.

Now, gentlemen, there are but five or six more Calendar Wednesdays during this session, and, in my judgment, it was an imposition upon the other committees of this House to devote three Calendar Wednesdays to two bills of this character. It was not done for the purpose of stifling the apple-box bill. I made an honest effort to reach an agreement to take up the bill last night, but could not do it, and I did not think it wise to call up that bill and devote another full day to it. Therefore I made the motion to adjourn, with the concurrence of the majority leader, Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] will hardly bear analysis. At a quarter to 5 he moved to adjourn the House. He could have called up the apple-box bill and at any time moved the previous question upon it. It was a House Calendar bill. He had it within his control to move the previous question at any time and pass the bill yesterday if he had wanted to, although there was no reason why the bill could not have gone over, if necessary, until another Calendar Wednesday. He still had the power at any time to close debate and shut off amendments.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman is well aware of the fact that I was very solicitous to move the previous question on the standard-barrel bill yesterday, and it was largely through the gentleman's solicitation that I refrained.

Mr. MANN. Give me time to answer it. I know what the proposition is. The gentleman yesterday proposed to move the previous question upon the apple bill after he and the friends of the bill had discussed it, without giving the opponents of the bill time to discuss it. I was a friend of the apple-barrel bill and wanted to see it passed, and I could see, and I think anybody with half an eye could see, that the previous question under the circumstances would not have carried. It was in the interest of saving time yesterday that I suggested that we agree upon time and at the end of that time suggest the moving of the previous question. The gentleman would have been hoisted out of his saddle if he had moved the previous question yesterday and had had a vote upon it when he suggested it. I was on his side. The whole subject had been discussed in the discussion of the apple-barrel bill, and the House would have voted on the apple-box bill if the gentleman had called it up and moved the previous question on it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield me half a minute?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want to state further, in reply to the charges of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that I had a conference with the author of the bill, Judge RAKER, of California, and proposed to him that I would call up the bill and have a short debate upon it if he would consent that I should then move the previous question, and the gentleman from California objected to that, fearing that it would defeat his bill, for which he has worked so hard. The gentleman from Illinois knows quite well that I came across to his desk, and he heard the conversation between myself and my good friend from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON], and that I made an honest effort to get that bill up without consuming another Calendar Wednesday, which undoubtedly would have followed if I had called the bill up at that time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it was Judge RAKER that prevented the bill coming up?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Judge RAKER objected to my calling the bill up if I moved the previous question to close debate before it had been properly discussed in the House.

Mr. MANN. Some day I will ask that Judge RAKER be given an hour in which to address the House on this subject. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, about an hour ago the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] criticized the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as a whole, and myself in particular, for what he thought was an unfairness to the State of Arkansas. He was in the Chamber a moment ago and when I began speaking I thought he was here. What he said naturally grieved me very much. Arkansas is my neighbor, and my good neighbor. I would be greatly distressed if the people there were under the impression that I had in any way been unfair to them in not cooperating in making the proper appropriations for the maintenance and preservation of river and harbor work in that State.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and myself are both particularly interested in one common purpose, and that is to secure appropriations for the prevention of floods on the Mississippi River. He represents the great St. Francis Basin and I represent the Yazoo Basin, and we have both worked side by side to further the interests of that great project, and he has himself rendered most valuable aid in that behalf. I would dislike particularly to have my trotting mate kick out of the traces.

Mr. BARTLETT. You believe in team work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for the suggestion. I believe in team work.

Mr. HOWARD. But you want to be the captain?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, not to make an invidious comparison—because I realize that comparisons are both odorous and odious—but simply to show to the gentleman that his State has not been neglected in these matters I wish to call his attention to a few figures.

In the bill which is now before the House the projects in the State of Mississippi do not get, as he thought, $1,000,000. The fact is they get, according to the figures furnished me by the Clerk, $452,000. The streams which are provided for in the State of Mississippi last year floated a tonnage of 3,300,000 tons, in round figures. The streams in the State of Arkansas, not simply those provided for but all of them, floated last year 955,000 tons, or a little less than 1,000,000 tons.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman realize that for the streams in the State of Mississippi there have been large appropriations for several years, and therefore they are more open to commerce than the streams in the State which I have the honor in part to represent?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will answer that by saying that heretofore the appropriations for streams in Arkansas have been $7,995,000, and in Mississippi $4,174,000, or just a little more than 50 per cent of what has gone to the State of Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman does not intend to say that there has been actually appropriated and expended on the rivers in Arkansas $7,000,000?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; and I mean to say that there has been actually appropriated and expendel on the rivers in Arkansas up to date $7,995,011, and in the State of Mississippi $4,174,668, or just a little more than 50 per cent of what has been spend in Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the gentleman including in the figures for Arkansas the Mississippi River?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; nor am I including them in Mississippi. Of course the State of Arkansas has received its proportion along that 300-mile front, along the St. Francis Basin. It has received its full proportion of the funds appropriated for flood protection on the Mississippi River, and so has the State of Mississippi, but it has received relatively no more than the State of Arkansas. So that we see that whereas Arkansas has received practically twice as much heretofore as the State of Mississippi there has been developed there a tonnage of less than 1,000,000 tons, and that of a value of only $4 a ton, whereas in Mississippi we have developed more than 3,250,000 tons of a value of $10 a ton.

Now, as I said before, I do not mean to say that the State of Arkansas is not entitled to the appropriations asked for.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Not right now, because the gentleman does not live in Arkansas and this is none of his quarrel.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to ask the gentleman about the tonnage on the Mississippi River as well as the other.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Mississippi River is not in this controversy. The care of the Mississippi River belongs to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and myself both.

Now, let us turn to the Ouachita River, which is in Louisiana and Arkansas both. We have provided so far three locks and dams for that river, which flows in Arkansas and in Louisiana, more in Louisiana than in Arkansas, and we have given Arkansas two of the locks that have been completed and to Louisiana only one. So in this bill we thought that in fairness to the Government, as we did not have the money to give all we would like to give, we would give what money we did appropriate to build another lock in Louisiana, so that Louisiana would have two as well as Arkansas. It was not with any intention of being unfair to the State of Arkansas, and I hope my friend will acquit me at least of any such intention, because I succeeded a Member from Arkansas [Mr. McCulloch] on the committee, and I have always endeavored to the best of my ability to represent fairly the interests of those streams in Arkansas which, in my judgment, deserved Federal aid.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want the gentleman from Mississippi to get the impression that I am criticizing him. I especially disclaimed any intention of doing it, and I want to say again that there is no intention to criticize him, nor to criticize either the committee as a whole or any individual member of it; but I wish to ask the gentleman if I understood him correctly a minute ago to say that this bill carried for the projects in Mississippi only $400,000?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Only $452,000, I understand.

Mr. CARAWAY. I refer the gentleman to pages 19 and 20——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; the gentleman would credit the State of Mississippi with the appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, which is not in the State of Mississippi, but is in Louisiana. It is no more for the benefit of Mississippi than for the benefit of Arkansas. It is not in the State of Mississippi, but in Louisiana.

Now, I want to make a few remarks which ought to be unnecessary, just to repeat what has been said here time and again as to river and harbor appropriations. We can not measure the value of appropriations unless we have some standard of value by which to measure them. Take the Panama Canal. It is estimated by the experts that that canal will float a tonnage of 10,500,000 tons annually, foreign and domestic. It was estimated that there would go through the canal American tonnage of 1,250,000 tons. The question whether or not that tonnage should pay toll or be free was the cause of considerable discussion in this House and throughout the country. The transcontinental railroads combined carry from coast to coast 3,000,000 tons annually. Keep those figures in your minds.

All the railroads combined carry 3,000,000 tons from coast to coast. The Panama Canal is estimated to float ten and one-half million tons, a million and a quarter being American tonnage. The rivers appropriated for in this bill, not counting the rivers connecting the Great Lakes, floated last year 204,000,000 tons, and all of it American tonnage.

Think of that. The Panama Canal, one million and a quarter of American tonnage, and the rivers appropriated for in this bill last year floated 204,000,000 tons. These are figures that are difficult to get before the public, for the reason that I never saw a newspaper that would publish them. It is entirely uninteresting. If I should get up here and denounce the members of the committee as grafters and say it was a pork-barrel bill and that we were robbing the Treasury and plundering the Government, I have no doubt I could get headlines to-morrow morning.

Of course that includes duplicates. A ton of freight floating down the Monongahela River and down the Ohio River and into the Mississippi River is credited three times, because all three rivers carry it, just as a ton of freight carried from here to St. Louis would be estimated in the tonnage of every railroad that handled the freight.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Should not the tonnage be estimated in ton-miles rather than in gross tonnage?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is estimated also in ton-miles. It was first estimated as gross tons. You have to get one before you can get the other. You would have to get the number of tons and the mileage before you could get the cost of the ton-mile.

Mr. STAFFORD. But all of these freights are estimated by ton-miles and not by gross tonnage.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. You can not get one without having the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. In using it for comparison we use the ton-mile.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That depends upon the comparison.

Mr. SPARKMAN. They give it both ways—the gross tonnage and the ton-mile.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman get his figures as to the American tonnage going through the Panama Canal, and where does he get his figures in relation to the tonnage from coast to coast?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I get them out of the hearings by Prof. Emory Johnson.

Mr. MANN. That shows how easily a man may be mistaken. The first three months of the operation of the Panama Canal a million tons went through, and nearly all was American tonnage. Of course, that statement in regard to the tonnage from coast to coast is not correct.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I get my statistics from Prof. Emory Johnson, who was selected by President Taft as an expert for the purpose of reporting to Congress. But assuming that there is a million tons a month going through the Panama Canal, that would make 12,000,000 tons during the year. The tonnage floating on the rivers appropriated for in this bill last year was 204,000,000 tons. So it matters but very little whether the gentleman from Illinois is correct or Prof. Emory Johnson.

The total tonnage on the rivers connected with the Great Lakes and the harbors and all the rivers provided for in this bill is approximately 1,000,000,000 tons. That being true, Mr. Chairman, it does occur to me that the criticisms of the bill as a whole—any wholesale criticism of the policy—the denunciation which has been indulged in must appear to be ill-timed. Criticisms directed to a particular item, of course, are always in order and, in my opinion, are helpful. I think it is a good thing to have somebody about who is going to criticize you unmercifully. Rather than have no criticism at all, it is better to have some one criticize even unfairly. I further believe that any item that can not be justified ought to be stricken from the bill.

I take great satisfaction in the fact, and I repeat it with pride, that up to date—and I have served 12 years in this House—of all the assaults made on the bill in either Chamber nobody has ever criticized one of the items in the State of Mississippi. The first criticism I ever saw directed to an item in the State of Mississippi is that which was made by a newspaper correspondent the other day in one of the New York papers.

To show how unfair that was, he took the Pascagoula and Dog River, Miss., project, which is in fact really a harbor, but which floated last year more than a million tons, and he mentioned the appropriation, and then devoted all his criticism to Dog River. Dog River is a short stream emptying into Pascagoula River. It serves really to demark the limitations of the harbor project more than anything else.

Another criticism is of the Engineer Corps. The criticism directed against the Board of Engineers is unfair. The board was created when Senator BURTON was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and, I think, wisely created, and this additional burden was put upon them. They were not only to report on the engineering features as to whether the project could be carried out and how much it would cost, but they were required to give their opinion as to whether or not it was a worthy one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works hereinafter named:

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I just want to continue what I was about to say when interrupted with the taking up of the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule. The Board of Engineers in the performance of their duties have, since their creation, acted on a great many projects. The general effect of that has been to prevent the adoption of many projects that perhaps would otherwise have been adopted but for the board. That is the general tendency, and, in fact, that was the purpose of its creation, because when a project comes before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with an unfavorable report it is practically impossible to get it inserted in the bill, and so far as I recollect it is impossible to get it inserted in the bill in the House of Representatives through the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. During the last 10 years the Board of Engineers has turned down and made unfavorable report upon two projects out of every three that have been presented to them, and I will insert in the RECORD at this point a tabulated statement showing the figures for each year from the year 1902 to the year 1913, inclusive; and that ratio obtained in nearly every year with one exception, that exception being the bill for 1907. In that bill there were 200 surveys authorized, and the Board of Engineers reported favorably upon 108 of them. I make this statement to show that the Board of Engineers, far from being under the dominance of Congressmen, and far from being an instrumentality by which the process may be facilitated of getting projects provided for that otherwise could not be, has acted entirely in the opposite direction, and the result has been positively the other way. The table to which I refer is as follows:

Authority for investigation.	Number of investigations ordered.	Number reported on to June 30, 1914.	Number favorable.	Number unfavorable.	Per cent of favorable reports.
Act of—					Per cent.
June 13, 1902	170	170	52	118	30.6

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether or not he advocats in any way to accept the recommendations of the board when they have reported sometimes favorably upon propositions? I criticized several items in the bill on which they reported favorably.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, yes. We have always done that. The committee has never made it a rule to accept everything that the Board of Engineers reports favorably upon. There have been many projects reported on favorably that are now in the committee room that have never been taken up by the committee and inserted in the bill. The process simply gives a man his day in court in respect to his project, puts it on the docket, but it does not mean that he will get a favorable verdict from the committee and has never meant that. Every member of the committee no doubt has voted against some projects that were incorporated in the bill, but so far as I am concerned, after having labored with the committee for many months, knowing they were just as earnest and honest as I was and just as sincere and patriotic in their endeavors to arrive at the right conclusion in respect to a bill containing three or four hundred items, because there were a few of them, a half dozen, that I thought could just as well wait or probably ought not to be taken up, I have never for that reason opposed the bill, but I have been willing to yield my judgment and support the bill as a whole.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if in his long experience on that committee it has ever appropriated money for any improvement not recommended by the Board of Engineers?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that in my opinion—I may be mistaken, for one or two may have slipped by without my knowing it—I do not believe the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has ever reported favorably an item that has not had the approval of the Board of Engineers. They have sometimes added them on at the other end of the Capitol and the conferees have yielded, and in that way they have gotten into the bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. That has been my understanding of the action of the committee.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 9, page 1, insert:

"Provided, That before the payment of any moneys for projects hereinafter specifically mentioned a board consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Labor, and Secretary of Commerce, to be known as the national board of waterways, shall by written report to the Secretary of the Treasury approve the public necessity for any expenditure on each individual project, and that such expenditure is to serve a public use in aid of navigation: Provided further, That said board may make or cause to be made independent examinations of the character of any and all projects and may call upon the Army Engineers or employ the service of such other experts as may be necessary in determining the surrounding conditions, general character, and public use which such project is intended to serve."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, a similar amendment to this was offered last year. It may be that the amendment will not have much consideration, possibly no more than did the criticisms of the bill last year. Nor do I contend that this amendment is complete in its character, as would be desirable if we were to submit these propositions to some high-class board, as is proposed; but I have offered an amendment to work to, and it is with that purpose it is introduced. There are Members of this House and many people outside of this House and outside of Congress who have not the sublime confidence in the judgment of the Army engineers, of these officers who are simply appointees and subordinates, that is possessed by members of the committee. From reports that have been published by them from the approvals that have been given by the engineers to various projects, I believe some of those criticisms are warranted and that the creation of a board such as this proposes would give additional protection to the Government against wasteful expenditures. Our rivers and harbors ought to be improved, no one will question that, and improved as fast as the necessities of the Government require, but appropriations have more than doubled during the past 10 years and the attempted justification is largely based upon opinions and approvals of Army engineers urging that various projects ought to be enacted into law.

The chairman of the committee the other day presented a matter which is interesting in this connection when he said that $250,000,000 yet remain to be appropriated on projects that had been approved and on which work has been begun. In addition to that obligation $100,000,000 more, in round numbers, has been approved for new projects that have not yet been begun. Accepting his own statement, and I am satisfied he is right—and let me say in passing I am satisfied any statement he makes is right, in his judgment—but 172 surveys are asked for in this bill, almost an unprecedented number in times like these. Approximately 40 per cent will be accepted, and, judging from the average, they will amount to $70,000,000 if the average is preserved. That will make an indebtedness of $420,000,000 which we will be facing when these surveys have been passed providing the various projects approved by the Army engineers are once begun. Believing it is a very large future expenditure of public moneys and rapidly growing in future obligations, I have offered this amendment in the belief that it affords another bulwark against assaults that are being made on the Treasury, assaults by people who may conscientiously believe their projects are right but which may not be of public benefit, if we are going to pursue the ordinary rules of reasoning.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, at the end of line 9, insert:

"Provided, That if the President shall, upon investigation, ascertain and determine that any project or projects hereinafter provided for are not of material value to the public he may, in his discretion, withhold such specific appropriation until further action by Congress."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to say that I will accept the judgment of the President whether he be of my party or any other party, with the assistance which he has at his command, to determine the value of any project contained in this bill. He is placed to-day in the position of having to veto an entire rivers and harbors bill of $34,000,000 that we have here, and which may be added to in another body. If he is able to ascertain that some of these projects are not of material benefit to the public, provided this amendment or one of similar tenor is placed in the bill, it enables him to determine what should be expended for waterways at this particular time, for on him and his administration rests the responsibility. And, let me say, after what we have heard here to-day of extravagant expenditures by this Government necessitating a war-tax, it is wise for us to call a halt. Ten years ago these bills averaged about $20,000,000. Now, in these days of economy, we have raised the amount to $34,000,000, and that does not count the amount contained in the sundry civil bill. It does not require any further argument to present the point, and I do not intend to take any unnecessary time, now or hereafter, except to suggest the point of every amendment. It requires no further time to explain what this means beyond the statement that we voluntarily give to the President a supervision of items, with power to withhold payment until Congress shall again act, and for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is new legislation and changes existing law; that is clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment, and this is the last amendment I have on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, at end of line 9, insert:

"Provided, That one-half of each separate appropriation hereinafter specifically named shall be available whenever there shall be contributed by any State, county, city, or locality or localities an amount equal to one-half of such appropriation, which amount so raised shall be placed to the order of the Secretary of War and shall be expended by him pursuant to the report of the United States engineers on such project: Provided further, That the remaining half of each appropriation hereinafter provided shall be retained in the Treasury, subject to the order of the Secretary of War, and to be used by him whenever needed in the completion of the project for which such appropriation is made."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, these amendments were offered before, no point of order being made against them, and I was not aware that any point of this character would be sustained. However, the point has been withheld, and I will for the present briefly explain what the effect of this amendment would be in my judgment. Under the present system, as we all know, when the people in a district have what they believe is a commendable project, no matter how it may be instigated, they bring it to Congress and press the Rivers and Harbors Committee from that time on until their project is included in the bill. That is for the survey. Then, after the survey has been made and the project approved, an effort is made to force it into the bill. We have the spectacle to-day of Members on the floor showing that their particular district is not receiving a fair share of appropriations. No question of comparative importance of commerce or the necessities are presented, but after the project has been once improved it becomes a matter——

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. In a moment. It becomes a matter for the committee to determine. Now, in foreign countries, as many of you know—and I will not discuss it at any length, except to say that contributions are required in many countries for such amounts as the legislative body desires to fix. In some countries—notably in England—it is practically owned and controlled by the local municipality. No Government work is performed nor are contributions made by the Government ordinarily. In other countries the rule of contribution is invoked.

If you provide that the locality itself shall contribute one-half of the appropriation asked for, you will remove one-half of the items that are in this bill. It is the right way of compelling those who are expecting to get special advantage from a project to pay for the benefit. It is the same principle pursued when the Government insists upon contributions in exchange for highway appropriations, namely, that contribution shall be made locally. As long as we have insisted on it in California, in Texas, in the State of Washington, and in other States, I do not see why it is not proper to have it imposed in all cases. In the case of the Cumberland River it was stricken out because the engineers were advised they had no right to demand one-half contribution for a $4,500,000 project.

Think of the Mussel Shoals project that is before us in this bill here to-day, without any contribution. A project that is largely for a water-power company, as will be shown when we reach that item, I hope, by other Members, if not by myself, and this Government is asked to put $18,700,000 in the project.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman states the Mussel Shoals proposition in this bill is without any provision for local contribution. What authority has he for that?

Mr. FREAR. The statement that appears in the bill itself.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What is that?

Mr. FREAR. The statement appears, and if the gentleman will permit me to make an explanation——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. FREAR. The bill provides for $150,000. After repeated surveys have been made by the Army engineers they have given tentative contracts on the published bids and submitted to the Rivers and Harbors Committee a proposition for an $18,700,000 appropriation. Now, $150,000 is proposed here, and an endeavor is made to hedge it in, with no legal obligation on the part of the Government. There can be no question that it is the first step in the adoption of that project.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman understands that is the survey for a great project.

Mr. FREAR. I understand that thoroughly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The statement, then, that there is to be no local contribution is apt to be, without the gentleman so intending it, perhaps misleading. We are making no appropriation here for the Muscle Shoals. There is a great project contemplated there, a water-power project with navigation incidental or navigation with water-power incidental, according to the point of view with which you look at it, but at any rate it would probably cost $18,000,000 or $20,000,000. That is a great project. The gentleman is perhaps aware that local interests do propose tentatively to make very large contributions toward that. This is simply a survey looking into the matter, so that we can have a report, and then Congress can be called upon to act intelligently in view of the report. Whether it will be a local contribution, or whether the Government will do it all or none of it, is a matter we will have to ascertain later on. But there is no appropriation in here directly for that work. It is simply for survey.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the other side of the amendment just for a moment to answer the gentleman briefly in regard to this project. I realize that in the framing of the bill an apparent effort has been made to prevent an appropriation at this time, but if there is a new project in this bill, one that is unjustified and indefensible, it is the $150,000 item for Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee, which has been recommended by the Army engineers. They have made their surveys, they have made their statement, and the only purpose for which they ask this $150,000, as I now recall it, is for additional borings to determine what the additional expense is to be. But of that, $8,700,000——

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. You are entirely—and I say it with great respect and perfect kindness——

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman please answer in his own time?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will when the question in reference to that subject comes up.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And I am going to ask that all this discussion be deferred until that time.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer briefly the remark of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. The project is for $18,700,000. Of that, $8,700,000 is for navigation at Muscle Shoals to meet the necessities of 6,000 tons of commerce, and in addition to that there is $1,750,000 for easements for that waterway. These facts are contained in the engineers' report, which is indorsed, generally speaking, by members of the committee, as I understand it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How do you get that understanding?

Mr. FREAR. From the request of the committee, contained in the document itself, that these engineers go ahead. What would be the object otherwise of asking for $150,000 for a survey for this private water-power company? What would be the justification?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Why would we ask for surveys if we are already in favor of it? The gentleman certainly does not speak for me.

Mr. FREAR. I speak only for what the report says. I do not know the gentleman's personal views.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I do not understand why they provide $150,000 here to get a survey, when you say the estimate has already been made that it would cost $18,700,000.

Mr. FREAR. I would refer the gentleman to the report, that contains 80 pages.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How do the engineers make the report or estimate of what it will cost without having made a survey? And if they had made a survey, and had made a report of 70 or 80 pages, why do they want $150,000 with which to make the survey?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to say, in that connection, it is true the engineers have gone over that matter quite thoroughly, but not as thoroughly as they desire to go over it, and they have presented tentatively a project to cost in the neighborhood of $18,000,000, a greater part of which—in fact all, eventually—is to be borne by private parties who want to take hold of it for the purpose of developing water power. But in their report the engineers suggest a detailed examination for the purpose of determining more definitely plans for the work to be undertaken; and it is for the purpose of furnishing that information that this provision, at the request and recommendation of the engineers, is placed in the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has rather vague ideas of the purpose and function of local contributions. There are a great many cases in which local contribution is possible without involving any danger of excess appropriations. There are cases where the local authorities are about to do some work, as I understand they are on the Thames River, in Connecticut, and at other places, where the Federal Government, for purposes of navigation, can do its work at the same time, and the amount raised by the local authorities and by the Federal Government can be expended upon a joint engineering project.

But that is not, in strictness, local cooperation. Each is simply doing the portion that it ought to do. What the Federal Government ought to do, and what it undertakes to do, is to improve rivers and harbors for purposes of navigation. That is its exclusive function, and it is not bound, and in my judgment it ought not to be bound, to match the money that happens to be raised locally. I can very readily see how the danger might be that localities, under the impulse of a real estate boom, or in rivalry with other cities, or for other reasons, might raise the amount locally and insist on some general right under the gentleman's idea that the Federal Government should come to their aid with another sum to improve some river or inlet that had no navigation possibilities at all but had much real estate possibilities. The gentleman has never realized that danger.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. In a moment. When it comes to real cases for the improvement of navigation, in which the Government and the country at large are interested—and those are the only kind that we ought to discuss here on this floor—the Government ought to assume the initiative and compel the completion of the work, whether the local authorities cooperate with it or not. It is a question of the needs of navigation at that point. And I want to say to the gentleman that whatever may be the case with respect to certain harbors where the local authorities may do a certain amount of work jointly with the Government authorities, if the improvement of inland rivers is ever accomplished, it can never be by local contributions, because the localities along the river that can and will contribute are not the particular localities where the work needs to be done to improve and to maintain the channel.

Now, it is possible that there might be an imaginable case where a river of some length and some volume could be improved by local cooperation; but I undertake to say that local offers of cooperation would come from every motive on earth except the motive of increasing navigation. I think the gentleman is radically wrong in his ideas of local cooperation.

Before the gentleman came to Congress we had a provision, added in another body to a rivers and harbors bill, creating a board to investigate the subject of local cooperation, and the unanimous report of that board was that local cooperation would do more harm in most cases than it would do good. It was only in isolated cases, where there was some work for the local authorities to do and some for the Federal authorities to do, that the work could be done jointly. I would think that it was in such cases simply that local cooperation could be expected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Does the gentleman think it is right to compel the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] or the people of his district to make a contribution of one-half? Does the gentleman believe it is right on the Sacramento River to compel the people there to contribute one-half? Does the gentleman think it right down in Texas to require that the people pay one-half and more, and yet allow the gentleman from Kansas City to get the benefit of a $20,000,000 project on the Missouri River without expense?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. FREAR. And does the gentleman believe that principle is not a better safeguard—although no principle, of course, is a perfect safeguard—in the administration of these matters?

Mr. BORLAND. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that the offers that the gentleman speaks of are offers from local authorities. I have no quarrel with the local authorities who offer a proposition of that kind, even in the case of work that the Government would undertake without the cooperation of local authorities. However, I do not believe that the Government ought to undertake a dollar's worth of work with local cooperation that it would not undertake without it. Such offer gives them no claim. But I have no quarrel with them for putting up their share if they want to.

The only dollar of Federal money ever expended in Kansas City for the improvement of the river was under a plan of local cooperation. It was this way: We had taxed our people $600,000 for flood protection. The Federal Government had appropriated $105,000 to maintain the channel, and we combined the $600,000 derived from the taxing power with the $106,000 supplied by the Government and made a joint engineering proposition. That is what we did. Never a dollar has been expended of Federal money inside the limits of Kansas City except that $105,000, but the money that is expended on the Missouri River is expended outside of Kansas City. For what purpose? To see that navigation is carried on in the river. Now, if we were to distribute that money down the stream on the 400 miles between Kansas City and St. Louis at places where the people would be willing locally to contribute and to cooperate, we would never get navigation. I can assure the gentleman of that. If he comes out there I will take him down the river and show him why it is true. For that reason we can not compel Clay County or Ray County or Carroll County to contribute, and yet that may be the very place where the river needs improvement most.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I just want to say, as a member of the committee who has been most insistent on local contributions, that to compel it in all cases would be as bad as not to have it at all, and therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to inquire on what ground the gentleman makes his point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. On the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the Chair knows, that rule does not apply to a river and harbor bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman wants to argue it, I will withdraw it.

Mr. STAFFORD. On a former amendment the Chair ruled, hastily, I think, and without due consideration, that the amendment was not in order. Now, it is a firmly established precedent——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In order to save time I will withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order because it is a change of existing law.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to save time and have a vote on it.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order for the reason that the law now gives Congress the right to make appropriations for river and harbor improvements. The amendment proposed is not only a limitation upon these appropriations, but it gives authority to the Secretary of War to say how much money shall be appropriated for river and harbor work. Congress has never had the idea that that duty should be conferred on the Secretary of War, and there is no present authority of law for any such provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if there is anything firmly established in the precedents of this House, it is that a river and harbor appropriation bill is not one of the general appropriation bills to which Rule XXI applies. If any citation of precedents is needed, I direct the attention of the Chair to Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, paragraphs 3893 to 3903, in which, on every occasion when the point has been presented, great parliamentarians, like former Speaker Carlisle, of Kentucky, and former Senator Hopkins, of Illinois, presiding, have held invariably that the only question for consideration on an amendment to a river and harbor appropriation bill is whether it is germane. The point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is that it is new legislation. May I direct the attention of the Chairman to the citation found in paragraph 3897 of the Precedents, as follows:

The river and harbor bill not being one of the general appropriation bills, the rule relating to legislation on such bills does not apply to it.

On February 7, 1907, the river and harbor appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, when Mr. J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, offered an amendment providing legislation to establish a board of inspection for river and harbor work.

Mr. DAVID E. FINLEY, of South Carolina, made the point of order that the amendment proposed legislation.

The Chairman said:

But the gentleman must recollect that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of clause 2, Rule XXI. Legislation is proper on a river and harbor bill, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The Chairman who made that ruling was one of the best parliamentarians that ever occupied the chair, former Representative Frank D. Currier, of New Hampshire.

Again, in section 3899, is a very exhaustive opinion delivered by former Speaker Carlisle, and in paragraph 3900 the same distinguished parliamentarian referred to the entire history of this proposition and held the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. May the amendment be reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, at the end of line 9, insert:

"Provided, That one-half of each separate appropriation hereinafter specifically named shall be available whenever there shall be contributed by any State, county, city, or locality or localities, an amount equal to one-half of each appropriation, which amount so raised shall be placed to the order of the Secretary of War and shall be expended by him pursuant to the report of the United States engineers on such project: Provided further, That the remaining half of each appropriation hereinafter provided shall be retained in the Treasury, subject to the order of the Secretary of War, and to be used by him whenever needed in the completion of the project for which such appropriation is made."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, under the ruling of the Chair I desire to reoffer, without discussion, the second amendment, which provided that the President of the United States should have the right to disregard any item if he choose and to strike it from the bill before approving it. I would like to have that read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again.

Mr. STAFFORD. That can only be offered by unanimous consent. It has already been passed upon by the Chair and ruled out. No appeal was taken, and the time for taking an appeal has passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand this is not a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment be offered again.

Mr. FREAR. In view of the expression of the House, I do not think it would be wise, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor at Portland, Me.: Completing improvement, $105,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That no expenditure for any project shall be made until the Secretary of the Treasury shall be advised by the Board of Army Engineers that suitable public wharves and terminals have been provided by local interests, sufficient in character to afford ample accommodations for all traffic upon said waterways, and that such public wharves and terminals, subject to general supervision and care of the local authorities, will be kept open at all reasonable hours for the free use of any and all persons desiring to use the same."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, so as to remove any apprehension I desire to say that I do not intend to offer amendments unless they have some specific relation to what we have before us. The discussion in both Houses recently has developed the fact that some of our harbors are controlled largely by railroad terminals—that is, that the railroad companies have a controlling interest in those terminals—and where that occurs it would seem that we should protect the Government, so far as the general use is concerned, by passing some such amendment as this.

To show that it is not entirely improper in the case at hand I wish to call attention to some things that have been said by the Commissioner of Commerce about the harbor in Portland. Portland asks for $105,000 in this bill. There was available on October 14, $207,602, and appropriations made have reached $1,877,727 for this harbor. The Commissioner of Commerce, in volume 3, page 47, of this report, makes this statement about Portland Harbor, and I offer this because it was said when discussing the last bill that I was not making comments and criticisms on rivers and harbors located in Northern States. I have endeavored to play no favorites, but tried to be fair, and, whether criticisms have been deserved or not, that has been my purpose. The Commissioner of Commerce has this to say:

About one-half of the commercial water front of Portland is owned by railroads. No portion of it is owned by the State. That portion not owned by railroads is in the hands of individuals and private corporations. None of the wharves are either public or open.

That is the statement which is the last I have any information of in reference to this harbor. Without a public wharf and understanding that this money is for the benefit of railroad terminals, I urge, Mr. Chairman, that public wharves be established before another dollar is appropriated.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that the River and Harbor Committee, making appropriations for all new projects, require that a condition shall be made for the appropriation that terminals and wharves be owned by the public for public use?

Mr. FREAR. I regret to say that I am unable to say what the practice of the committee is, although I know that in some cases they do insist on that.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that the only place where they appropriate money without the public wharf is in old places like Portland, Me., where private interests got hold of it before they began the profligate waste of the public money? Now, does not the gentleman think that they ought to administer the same requirements at Portland, Me., in their expenditure for that harbor that they do where they are going to expend money on a new project?

Mr. FREAR. I can say only that it is a just condition to impose upon any harbor and any people.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say in response to the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Texas, that every member of the committee, and, I take it, the entire House, is in complete sympathy with all efforts to relieve the people, wherever improvements are being made, from all private monopolies in the matter of terminals. But this can not all be done in a day. We have the subject under consideration now and have had for some time. A few years ago, I think, in the bill of 1912, we inserted a provision calling for an investigation and a report on the subject of terminals, whether private or public, and requiring suggestions as to remedies. This investigation was had, and quite a comprehensive report was made.

The Rivers and Harbors Committee in the preparation of its bills is trying to meet the situation as it arises without laying down as yet any hard and fast rule. As I said, we can not do it in one day or in one bill; it would be manifestly unwise to undertake it. If Congress should establish a hard and fast rule, and say that no appropriation should be made at any place until ample terminal facilities are acquired by the public, or some one in the interest of the public, it would, in many instances, work a hardship besides a discrimination.

The harbor at Portland, Me., is an important one. I have been there and looked it over. There are, I believe, two important railroads running in there. True, they own, I believe, a great deal of the land on the water front, but I am advised that the people are alive to the situation, and propose to correct the evil, in so far as it may be an evil, and in a little while it will no doubt be done. The same thing is being done by the people all over the country, and I think I risk nothing in saying that in a few years there will not be a Government improved harbor in the country where there will not be ample terminal facilities owned by the public or some one in the interest of the public.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. What has been the amount of appropriation for Government work at this harbor?

Mr. SPARKMAN. One million eight hundred thousand dollars to date.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Texas, I want to say that the people of Portland are alive to the situation and the matter of cooperating with the National Government in helping out the needs of the harbor. It was an issue in the last municipal election. Undoubtedly in the near future the city of Portland will be ready to help out any wise and well-considered means of improvements required in that great harbor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any doubt about the correctness of what the gentleman from Maine says—that the people are alive to the situation and that they are going to meet it. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

Mr. FREAR. To that, Mr. Chairman, I shall object, because I want to make a motion to strike out, and I would like three minutes to discuss the motion.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will make my request 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, we have heard the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the fact that all the terminal facilities are owned by individuals or railroads in Portland, Me., where the Government has appropriated already more than a million of dollars to improve that harbor. It is said by the proponents of this bill that every dollar that is put into the harbor in the way of Government improvement necessarily increases the value of private property and that of the railroads. He says this is a bad state of affairs and they have been trying to correct it. He says they all recognize that it ought to be corrected, and they are working toward it. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the most rapid way to work toward that end is to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin prohibiting any appropriation going to any harbor in the United States until provision is made to serve the public by public ownership of terminal facilities, so that every dollar that goes in does not increase the hold of some private concern that has a monopoly on the facilities of that place. Here are $105,000 proposed to go to the harbor at Portland. I do not know anything at all about what the terminal facilities there are, but certainly it will increase the value of that private property just in proportion as it increases the facilities there for commerce and attracts commerce to that place. But we stand here and let the United States Treasury and its money be used to increase the value of private property at Portland, Me., when individuals already have a monopoly of the terminals. Let the people complete it. We will come to the rescue of the people of Portland and give them such appropriations of the public funds as it is proper they should have after Portland has provided public terminals that all agree are best. I insist that this amendment ought to be passed. It is admitted by the membership of this committee that the terminals ought to be public and not monopolized by private interest.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, we do not admit that. I say it ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. It is admitted by the membership of the committee not that this amendment ought to be in at this particular point but that the things that we are trying to reach by this amendment ought to be done, and can you do it better than in this way? If you can do it better in any other way than this and more quickly, then let us do it; and if not, let us do it in this way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 1 and 2 on page 2, referring to the harbor at Portland, Me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out both lines, which read as follows: "Harbor at Portland, Me.: Completing improvements, $105,000."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the House has the right to determine for itself what action it shall take as to two respective harbors standing side by side, in one of which there are requirements that local improvements be had and in the other of which it says that the railroad can have complete control and that no public wharves need be built. I further realize that in all of the years that we have been spending $1,877,000 in this harbor not one wharf has been opened to the public, and it has been for private interests unless some one wants to pay wharf charges. This brings up the whole question of what the Government is doing with money when it appropriates for such purpose, and what justification there is for appropriations for private interests, and surely it is for that, according to the report of the Commissioner of Commerce. If that be so, with $105,000 in the bill and $207,602 part of the allotment on hand since last October, I do not think in these times of depression and war tax that for a purpose of that kind it is wise for us to expend $105,000. Therefore I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment and the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to pass without some reference to Portland Harbor, Me. This sum of $105,000 is for the completion of a project which was adopted in 1912, which provides for enlarging deep-water anchorage opposite the eastern end of the city, for excavating rock and other materials so as to give a channel 14 feet deep at mean low tide. The entire project was to cost $460,000, and this appropriation is to complete it.

This is one of the most important harbors in the country. It had a tonnage in 1913 of 3,339,538 tons, with a valuation of $128,506,579, and the number of passengers carried during the same year was 1,480,422. This appropriation completes a very important project for that harbor. There is absolutely nothing in the statement that the appropriation will be used for the benefit of private interests. While it is true there ought to be public terminals there, as there will be in every harbor of the country, if the intentions of the River and Harbor Committee shall be ultimately realized, still the commerce there is carried on by the public, and it is for the benefit of the public.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not time limited on this matter?

Mr. MOORE. I think the gentleman has some time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has yet a minute.

Mr. MOORE. This money is not to be expended on terminals or wharf improvements, as I understand it.

Mr. SMALL. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE. It is to be expended solely for the improvement of the harbor in the interest of navigation.

Mr. SMALL. Yes. And in completion of a project adopted two years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to keep the gentleman from talking, but time on this amendment and the paragraph were limited.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the time on this paragraph and all amendments thereto has now expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 234. Joint resolution directing the selection of a site for the erection of a statue in Washington, D. C., to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5168) for the relief of the King Theological Hall and authorizing the conveyance of real estate to the Howard University and other grantees.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.: For maintenance, $75,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 4 and 5, page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, strike out all of lines 4 and 5, which read as follows: "Harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.: For maintenance, $75,000."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to several items in the bill for which comparatively large appropriations are to be made for the results to be attained and to state conditions surrounding them, leaving it for the committee to pass upon without any unnecessary discussion. I call attention to the condition at Point Judith, where appropriations so far have reached $2,515,541. The harbor of refuge has, or did have, to its credit an unexpended balance of $153,590 on July 1, 1914. From the report the low-water covered area has been considerably reduced by shoaling in the western part, as the engineers report and also the result of the improvements have been to create a harbor of refuge with a depth from 16.5 to 31 feet, fairly suitable for sailing vessels and steamers, although the holding ground is poor, not well suited for tows of barges on account of the narrow entrance and the lack of room for maneuvering vessels in it, and the fact that the central part of the area is obstructed by a dangerous reef. Further, it is stated in the engineers' report that it is not known that freight rates have been affected. I note right in that connection that the entrance to Point Judith Pond has been abandoned after the Government spent considerable money at that point, and in view of the fact that they have spent over $2,500,000 at this other point with questionable results apparently as shown by the engineers' report, and had $113,000 on hand for use at the time of the last report, I say, in these times of depression I would suggest it is well to avoid any unnecessary payments, and so I move to strike out the item of $75,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this item is for continuing work at Point Judith, and it ought to be said in fairness to those who have asked for its consideration in this bill that perhaps the greatest commerce along the New England coast passes this point. All Sound steamers pass this way. All business coming south from Boston or going north from New York pass Point Judith. It has been estimated there is as much as 50,000,000 tons of commerce a year going by the point. It is one of the dangerous points along the coast, where shelter is sometimes badly needed, and it does not seem to be the kind of item to strike out of the bill. It stands for much in the way of saving life and property.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I desire to say that on the 1st day of November last there were $49,000 on hand available for work there. They will have used that $49,000 very soon, or perhaps they have by this time. This $75,000 is for the purpose of repairing damages done to the breakwater by the storm of March 1 and 2 of last year, and it is claimed that it will all be needed for that purpose. The work should not be permitted to deteriorate, and wherever damage has been done to a breakwater it should be, of course, repaired. This appropriation is recommended for that purpose. I hope the provision will not be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Providence River and Harbor, R. I.: That the second proviso in the paragraph of the river and harbor act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the improvement of Providence River and Harbor, R. I., be modified in accordance with recommendation in the report in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 9, Sixty-third Congress, second session, to read as follows: "Provided further, That no work in the harbor proper north of Fields Point shall be done until the Secretary of War is satisfied that the State and the city have completed their proposed expenditures in the combined Providence and Pawtucket Harbors up to at least $2,000,000 for public terminals or other permanent public harbor improvements, or shall have given to the Secretary of War assurance satisfactory to him that the expenditure of the $2,000,000 aforesaid will be completed within a time satisfactory to him and not later than three years from the passage of this amendment."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, at the end of line 22, insert the following: "Nor shall any moneys heretofore appropriated be expended on this contract until further authority to use the same is granted by Congress."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I realize there are improvements that have been approved by the Secretary of War at Providence Harbor covering, I think, a mile and three-quarters, or something of that kind; but there is a very large harbor at that point extending down a number of miles. We have already expended at this point $2,766,353. There was available on June 30 $695,772, to which this amendment would attach, subject to any balance now at hand. The present project is 30 feet for a length of 27 miles. The Commissioner of Corporations said about this item that the number of wharves at Providence belonging to private parties include railroad and other corporations. The city owns a small wharf below the Pond Street Bridge, which is run for a lumber wharf; and it also has a small wharf just above Sassafras Point, which is used by the various city departments. There are no open piers in Providence, and the New Haven Railroad owns the main wharf. Now I understand there has been a change, and that the city of Providence intends to give better terminal facilities than have been afforded in the past; but there is a long distance in this harbor where expenditures can be made at this time without awaiting for the fulfillment of conditions. Apart from that, I think, in view of the fact there is no immediate necessity shown for this, that when only 7 per cent of the work now has been completed, according to the engineers' report, and it has had no effect on freight rates, as shown by the engineers' report on page 120, we may postpone this improvement until conditions are fulfilled.

It might be well, therefore, to withhold this amount of money on hand, which reaches far more than half a million dollars.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Considering the gentleman's own proposition for a division of the expenses of dredging rivers and harbors, does he not think he imposes an unnecessary hardship on a community that is willing to give $2,000,000?

Mr. FREAR. I am glad the gentleman brings up that question, because that presents a point that does not seem to be made clear. We are saying here that when we give a harbor to a city that all the city has to do is to provide a wharf. Why, they should contribute toward dredging the harbor, as Philadelphia is doing, or, in my judgment, they should bear part of the expense when improvements are being made so largely for the interests of that locality.

Mr. MOORE. I will say that the city and State have contributed as much to the improvement of that river as the Government has, in one form and another.

Mr. FREAR. Boston has done the same, and so have other places.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman must know that that would be impossible on a river like the Mississippi River, that traverses many States, or on the Missouri River.

Mr. FREAR. You ask here for construction of wharves and nothing for contribution.

Mr. MOORE. A very large business was contemplated at this port by reason of certain railroads coming into the city of Providence, and there is no reason why the people should not be prepared for that business.

Mr. FREAR. Undoubtedly so. The New Haven Railroad controlled all the terminals there.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The amount appropriated by the State of Rhode Island and the city of Providence is $2,410,755, and I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. FREAR. I would ask the gentleman to take his own time, because I want to make the point clear, Mr. Chairman, that it is a contribution to the harbor itself, not to the wharves, that I believe should be imposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pawcatuck River, R. I.: For maintenance, $1,000.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point, under the unanimous-consent agreement in the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I just want two minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Not in my time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. No.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if the harbor facilities in Providence Harbor and largely throughout New England have been monopolized by the New Haven Railroad, it has been due to the alliance of the New Haven Railroad largely with the Republican Party and the control of the legislatures of New England by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. The reports are full of the exposures of the insidious methods of the New Haven Railroad, and it is only a short while ago that we were treated to an exposition of the wrecking of that railroad by the directors and those having in charge that great property, so that those who were in receipt of an income are to-day in receipt of nothing.

I had the honor of introducing a resolution in this House to bring about a special investigation of the conditions up there, and I will say that my purpose to a very large extent was to show the rotten condition of affairs between politicians, Republican, if you please, and the notoriously rotten railroad. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I must not be considered in any sense of criticizing the present management of the New Haven Co. They are doing their best to manage the property as a railroad, and have no dreams of infinite expansion.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after line 24, insert the following:

"Harbor at Bridgeport, Conn.: For completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 898, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $111,300.

"Unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for improvement of the harbor at Bridgeport, Conn., is hereby made available for continuing improvement of said harbor in accordance with the report submitted in said House Document No. 898, Sixty-third Congress, second session."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish in a way to notice the pitiful condition the district which I represent is in. It should have a man of some ability and a man of some influence to present its case to this body, because there is not a State in the Union, in my opinion, that has been so mutilated by action in Congress as the little State that I am from and try to represent, in part, on this floor.

You collect from our people, Mr. Chairman, annually $4,000,000, and upward. And in mentioning that amount I have in my mind a line or two from the nursery rhymes of long ago:

Who used to share in what was mine,
Or take it all, did he incline,
'Cause I was eight and he was nine?
My brother.

And that is the condition of the State of Connecticut. It is eight and the sister States are nine, and under forms of law they have collected that toll and spent it, and spent it as they deemed best, Connecticut not being considered. We have received some of it in a way, Mr. Chairman. Out of the little over $4,175,000 collected at our gate we received in 1913 $380,000. We received in 1912 $215,000, and in 1910 $504,000. I am going to show you, Mr. Chairman, what two other States about the same in population and the same in wealth, or practically the same, the great State of Washington and the great State of Oregon, receive. Together they amount to about one and a half as compared with Connecticut. Just think of this! This report is furnished to me by the chief of the Treasury Department, covering a period of the three years mentioned. They received for the fiscal year 1913 $7,095,000. Poor little Connecticut received $380,000. For the fiscal year 1912 these two Northwestern States received $2,855,000. That was the first year of the Democratic control of the lower House in 16 years. Poor Connecticut had tossed into her lap $215,000. In 1911 Washington and Oregon received $4,656,000. But they did give Connecticut that year $504,000, but giving those two States more than nine times as much as Connecticut for that year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Washington and Oregon received out of the Government in 1913 $2,000,000 more than both of those States paid into the Treasury by customs and internal-revenue receipts, over $2,032,756 more than the total payments by the States of Washington and Oregon in that year.

Now, I ask in all fairness who is going to pay toward the civil and miscellaneous list? It does not amount to so much. It is only $170,000,000. It was kind of our associates in Congress to take that from other States and not a dollar from Washington or Oregon. Who is going to pay toward the cost of running the military, maintaining the upkeep, and so forth, of the Army, which is $160,000,000? Not Washington or Oregon. Who is going to pay toward the support of the Indians that our friends from Washington and Oregon are so considerate about and so exercised over? Are they? Not a dollar. Over twenty million goes to them out of the other States. Who is going to pay for the soldiers' pensions of over $170,000,000? Not a dollar from those two States. They left it to such weaklings as Connecticut, and for 20 years—20 years, I repeat, Mr. Chairman—Connecticut has been strangled and literally garroted financially by act of Congress. There are men who put on a mask and a dark hat and in the night season chase a citizen up a dark alley and strip him of his possessions. It is somewhat doubtful which act is the worst. [Laughter.]

Let us see. Florida and Texas were thoughtful at that time. They were very kind to themselves. Let us see what they have done for themselves. They were represented on the same committee all those three years, you know, gentlemen. Why, in 1913 those two States—I learned from figures furnished by the Treasury Department, by the chief assistant—Florida and Texas, were like two brothers in love where the Treasury is concerned [laughter]; they received $7,671,000. In 1912 Florida and Texas became a little delicate, and received only $1,585,000. In 1911 they received $5,125,490.

Now let me say, gentlemen, that when you appropriated to Texas and Florida in 1913 that sum of $7,671,000, at the end of the fiscal year there was an unexpended balance on hand to the credit of those States of $2,266,000. I repeat, when that appropriation of $7,671,000 was made in 1913 they had on hand from the preceding year $2,266,000.

But Florida and Texas are not as capable, not as competent, in handling public money as the great States of Washington and Oregon, because they can not spend it with the same method. For instance, in the year 1911 Washington and Oregon had a balance of $2,498,000, and for the fiscal year 1912 they would not allow themselves so much; they had only $1,450,000 unexpended. But notwithstanding they—Washington and Oregon—were clever in spending the money and getting rid of it, ready for another appropriation, in 1913 they had $4,973,000 on hand.

They were getting money faster than they could spend it.

Now, I will submit in all fairness to my associate, to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], that when he got on the floor, if he wanted to be fair, he should have stated that in dividing the gathered shekels Connecticut was bled and bled. He did not do it. I stated a moment ago that Washington and Oregon in that year—1913—had exceeded their total receipts by over $2,000,000. It is $2,032,756. But Texas and Florida, a little bit modest, would not ask for appropriations to exceed their payments. They allowed $682,339 to remain in the Treasury toward paying the military expenses, the expenses for pensions, Indians, and the civil and miscellaneous lists. They did leave a little over half a million dollars, and they should be given credit for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. DONOVAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman mean to indicate that Washington and Oregon are getting too much or Connecticut too little? Which is the complaint?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would say to the gentleman from Washington, who is one of the most capable Members here, that if he has any doubt in his own mind as to the reasons and the whys and wherefores——

Mr. BRYAN. Now, if Washington is getting too much, would you consider that a compliment to the Washington delegation? Or does the gentleman think not getting enough would be a compliment? How do you account for it?

Mr. DONOVAN. It is on the line that "He was 9 and I was 8"—brute strength. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would be pleased to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I did not hear the gentleman's criticism of my statement just now. I understand the gentleman referred to me. I did not hear what he said.

Mr. DONOVAN. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that I said that when the gentleman had the floor he called attention to the condition of Arkansas and Mississippi in the race for Treasury receipts, and the race was about equal, with Mississippi a little ahead. But the gentleman forgot to state that Connecticut was left at the tail of the line. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. To start with, Connecticut is at the head of both those States—Mississippi and Arkansas.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am giving the figures that are furnished and submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. I will withdraw my amendment if the gentleman's statement is borne out. I have the figures here. The gentleman can take them at his leisure, and if the Treasury figures are in the condition he states I will withdraw my amendment and allow my little State to suffer.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. DONOVAN. I refuse to yield to the gentleman from Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Thank you; I have not asked you to yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, I thank you. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, to return to the concrete proposition as to why the amendment is offered, it is this: Bridgeport has physically two harbors, two entrances, with three or four little tributaries; and Bridgeport, as you know, is a manufacturing city. Our poor people, our workers, our citizens—in fact, all our inhabitants—have to depend upon manufacturing for a means of living. We are good in that, because the wares that we manufacture are better made and more cheaply sold than those made or sold anywhere else, and they give the public results that they do not get anywhere else. [Applause.] If it were not so we could not have a market. But we are at a great disadvantage. We are far from the base of supplies. We have to come into competition with like manufacturers all over the United States. We have there in that little place, of over 100,000 inhabitants, more workers than any other place in our State. I have the figures here which I will put in the RECORD. There are 25,775 workers, and the value of their products is $65,608,806, according to the 1909 census.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DONOVAN. No; I have not the time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I want to give the figures that the gentleman called for.

Mr. DONOVAN. Let us have them. I have only 20 minutes. I am not a member of the committee. Your committee parceled out the time entirely to yourselves. I am only a will-'o-the-wisp here, and you ought not to take the time from me.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman has 20 minutes, and I had only 16.

Mr. DONOVAN. But you people have been filling your pockets out of the Treasury down in Mississippi for 16 years, and are still trying to get more appropriations.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The report of the Chief of Engineers is that the appropriations for the State of Mississippi about which the gentleman complains have been $4,174,608, and for the State of Connecticut $6,068,809.

Mr. DONOVAN. I hope the gentleman's figures are correct, for his own sake; for if they are not I am afraid he and I in our future home will occupy adjoining apartments when we get there. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Connecticut is 50 years older than Mississippi.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, coming back to the concrete situation, the figures which I stated are absolutely true, for they come from the War Department. The date of the letter is December 29, and the signature is that of John C. Scofield, assistant and chief clerk. This letter says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 29, 1913.

Hon. JEREMIAH DONOVAN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In compliance with your request of several days ago for information as to the appropriations available for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the States of Florida and Texas, there is herewith transmitted a statement showing the balances of appropriations available on June 30, 1909, for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the States named, the amounts appropriated and expended during the fiscal years 1910 to 1913, inclusive, and the balances remaining available on June 30, 1913.

Trusting the statement conveys the information desired, I am,
Yours, very respectfully,

JOHN C. SCOFIELD,
Assistant and Chief Clerk.

I am not talking through my hat like that gentleman is.

Now back to the concrete situation. Our little place has to depend upon manufacturing. It is necessary that we should have all the advantages possible in order to carry on our business. We can not depend upon the sun and the soil to work for us 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 30 days in the month, but we must get a living for our people with the hammer and the forge and manual labor and the sweat of the brow. Now, one of our harbors has only one little channel 100 feet wide. We want it widened to 200 feet, because in stormy weather boats can not pass, and in trying to do so they get up on the banks. The Board of Army Engineers recommend this. It is a continuation of the 1899 project. The district engineer recommends it. It is the project of 1899 with the modifications of 1907 and 1909. Another appropriation for lowering a portion of the channel amounts to about $3,100, and another improvement of the channel amounts to $19,800. Taking off some of the corners and straightening the crookedness of another part of the channel amounts to $28,000. Widening the turn at the breakwater amounts to $58,000. The total amount is $173,000, but we have about $60,000 left, so it requires an appropriation of only $113,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you collect from us in Connecticut over $4,000,000 annually. It is our money, raised by our hands and our brains. Now, in all decency will you not allow us that improvement that these unbiased, unprejudiced engineers have recommended? The Senate committee recommended it and so reported. Are you going to allow appropriations that take up the total receipts of some States and deny a portion of the receipts of other States to them for a harbor appropriation that is sorely needed? It can not be done very well in a private way. The private owner abutting on that river may have 50 feet. He may have 75 feet, but if his neighbor does not do his share the money is wasted. From this little city of Bridgeport itself the Government collects annually about half a million dollars.

My friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] was not satisfied with getting $7,095,000 for Washington and her sister State, and almost the last act of the last administration, passed and signed and completed the performance, after giving these two States $7,095,000 for harbors, was to add $750,000 for public buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Connecticut be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, has not the gentleman from Connecticut the right to proceed by moving to strike out the last word?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington, whose State, as I have just said, received three-quarters of a million on the last day of the last year of the last administration for public buildings—Mr. Chairman, there is not in my district to-day a public building with a roof on, except one. There are two in the process of cellar digging; but my distinguished friend from Washington, the ranking member of the minority on Rivers and Harbors, has in his State public buildings costing three-quarters of a million dollars. What is going to satisfy that crew? How much greed are they going to show, and is Congress to support, and then kick the little State of Connecticut, as it were, out of doors? Ah, Mr. Chairman, the child that gave the dog the bit of food and the dog that bit that hand is just as cruel and just as unfeeling as this committee is when they toss into the wastebasket the appropriations for the little State of Connecticut, which has been so generous and given up to its country and to the Federal Government for the last 20 years, receiving nothing in return.

I appeal to you, gentlemen, for justice. Let that little Arcadian village, that busy-bee place in Connecticut, have at least what you would give for removing the snags and hyacinth grass from the rivers that are lacking in commerce, let alone water. [Laughter.] I thank you, gentlemen. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not examined this project very thoroughly, and can not at this time say whether it is a good or a bad one, but it is a new project, and unless we intend to open the door for new projects we can not afford to vote in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut. The House understands the situation and knows that we have not taken on any new projects in this bill. The House also understands why we have not done so. The matter was discussed fully and considered in the full committee, and it was determined that no new projects should be included in the bill as presented, no matter how meritorious they might be. There are more than a hundred new projects, the most of them meritorious, that ought to be taken care of whenever a bill is framed with new projects. If we were to let in this project there would be no place to draw the line, and we should consider them all, a thing manifestly impossible now. We can not do all this work at once. We will, I hope, have another bill next winter, when new projects, along with this one, may be considered. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to quote the engineer against the chairman, who calls it a new project. The engineer says:

> For the reasons stated, I believe that the further modification and revision of the project as described in this report is now justifiable.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That language does not change the status of the matter at all. It is a new project; that is, one not heretofore adopted. It is in the same condition as a hundred other similar projects that have been left out, not because, perhaps, of any lack of merit, but because we thought the bill at this time could not stand new projects. The project may have merit. I have not examined it carefully. It came in too late for the bill of 1914. I believe it was included in the Senate amendments, but the bill was finally defeated, and it went out with all other new projects.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DONOVAN) there were—ayes 50, noes 53.

Mr. DONOVAN. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DONOVAN and others) there were—ayes 67, noes 48.

So the committee determined to rise.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 5168. An act for the relief of the King Theological Hall and authorizing the conveyance of real estate to the Howard University and other grantees.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 13815. An act to increase the limit of cost for the construction of a public building at Marlin, Tex.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m. Is there objection?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut and Mr. DONOVAN objected.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 15, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $722,683, required by the Panama Canal for continuing the construction on the Panama Canal Zone of barracks, quarters, storehouses, etc., necessary for the mobile army and Coast Artillery troops to be stationed there (H. Doc. No. 1487), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LENROOT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20851) to reserve lands to the Territory of Alaska for educational uses, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1280), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARDY, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20282) to provide for the appointment of 11 supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, in lieu of 10, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1281), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20281) to provide for the appointment of certain assistant inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, at ports where they are actually performing duty, but to which they are at present detailed, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1282), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5823) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin W. Clark, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1915.

Right Rev. Julius W. Atwood, D. D., bishop of Arizona, offered the following prayer:

Direct, O Lord, the Members of this Senate with Thy most gracious favor and further them with Thy continual help, that in all their works begun, continued, and ended in Thee they may do Thy holy will and realize the truth of all Thy Son's life and teaching, that in serving the State and the Nation they also serve their Father and their God. Listen to us as we join in the words Thy dear Son taught us to pray: Our Father, who art in heaven. Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory. Forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes in order that I may correct a misstatement that has gone into the RECORD.

It has just come to my knowledge that on the day before yesterday in the Senate, during my unavoidable absence from the Chamber, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made an incorrect statement about the status of House bill 16673, the water-power bill. Of course, I know the Senator from Idaho would not knowingly make a misstatement about any matter, material or immaterial, but, nevertheless, he was mistaken in the statement which he made.

He stated that at that time the bill was still in the Committee on Public Lands and had not been reported out. That was not correct. The bill was reported favorably with amendments on Monday of this week, and is now on the Senate calendar and was when the Senator from Idaho was speaking. The committee took final action on the bill about the middle of last week. It took several days to prepare and write the report, and the bill was reported on Monday last.

Of course, I know it had not long been reported—only a few days—when the Senator from Idaho inadvertently made that statement, but I do not want the statement that the bill is still in the hands of the committee and not reported out to go into the RECORD without being corrected.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I have not looked at the RECORD, but my recollection of the remarks of the Senator from Idaho is that he stated the bill had not been reported at the time the President made his speech at Indianapolis.

Mr. MYERS. And also at the time he was speaking.

Mr. JONES. I do not think so, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, I do not want to attribute to the Senator from Idaho anything he did not say, but the RECORD reports him as saying what I have indicated; and I want to make it plain that the bill was reported out on Monday of this week.

Mr. JONES. Of course, the Senator does not pretend to state that the report had been made when the President made his speech at Indianapolis.

Mr. MYERS. I do not. I mean just what I have said, and I am stating the facts correctly. The power bill is now out of committee and on the calendar and has been all of this week. At the same time the Senator from Idaho made some criticism, I have learned, of the bill and of the President for his approval of it and stated that some western Senators were opposed to the measure. I will not contend about those things at this time nor enter into any controversy about them; it is not necessary. There will be a proper time for that. It is true that some western Senators, both Democrats and Republicans, are opposed to the bill, but it is sufficient to say at this time that the bill was ordered favorably reported by a large majority of the Public Lands Committee, there being both Democrats and Republicans on the committee supporting the motion; and it has a number of warm supporters among western Senators, both Democrats and Republicans.

When the bill may come before the Senate for consideration and final disposition it will be earnestly supported and championed, and its merits will be well presented to the Senate by a number of Senators, both Democrats and Republicans. It will be well cared for. As to the fact that the President gives it his support, those of us who are in favor of the bill consider it as one of the evidences of its merits that it has the hearty approval of both the President and the Secretary of the Interior. I have no apprehension about the final disposition of the bill. The only thing about which I am solicitous is to get it before the Senate for its consideration and final disposition, and when that shall be done I am satisfied as to what the result will be. The measure possesses much merit and has strong support, both in and out of Congress.

CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO. (H. DOC. NO. 1489).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year ended December 31, 1914, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR & RAILWAY CO. (H. DOC. NO. 1490).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1914, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the credentials of LEE S. OVERMAN, chosen by the electors of the State of North Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5168. An act for the relief of the King Theological Hall, and authorizing the conveyance of real estate to the Howard University and other grantees; and

H. R. 5195. An act for the relief of the Atlantic Canning Co.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a petition, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not understand the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks for the reading of a petition. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read it.

The petition was read, as follows:

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, representing 1,200 women, assembled this January 14, 1915, in a day of prayer for the furtherance of prohibition in our loved land, most earnestly petition both Houses of Congress to grant us prohibition for the District of Columbia and national constitutional prohibition for our loved Nation.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Manchester, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate interstate shipment of convict-made goods, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a petition of the Excelsior No Surrender Royal Orange Lodge, of Lewiston, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Sylvan Grove and Andale, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Frankfort, Kans., remonstrating against the exclusion of anti-Catholic publications from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, Kans., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the Humane Society of Lowell, Mass., remonstrating against the sale of American horses to any foreign country for the purposes of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Saginaw, Detroit, Benton Harbor, Lansing, Unionville, and Montague, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SHIPMENTS OF HORSES FOR EUROPEAN WAR.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if it is proper at this time, I desire to present a letter from one of my constituents touching upon a subject that has appealed to me very much since the war in Europe, and it seems to me that it is one that should appeal to every human being—the horrible destruction of horses that are required in artillery and for various uses in the war. The article goes on to say, and I echo it with a great deal of gusto, that while we have prohibited the sale of submarines, we have placed no embargo on these poor brutes which are being bought by thousands in our land and shipped to Europe, where the greater part of them are helpless and crippled, writhing in pain and agony on the battle field. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WOODBURY, N. J., January 4, 1915.

To the Hon. J. E. MARTINE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Shall American horses be shipped for slaughter on European battle fields?

The United States Government has prevented the sale to European belligerents of American submarines, but permits the sale of American horses, thereby laying itself open to the charge of violation of our spirit of honest neutrality.

It is said that over 50,000 American horses have already been purchased for this purpose. The great majority of these will die from wounds, exhaustion, shell fire, starvation, injuries, and ill treatment.

In permitting this traffic, which means so much excessive cruelty to our horses, are we true to any principle of humanity? Are we fair as neutrals?

If we are to violate our duty as neutrals, we might better send arms and ammunition rather than ship these living sacrifices to the god of war.

As one strongly interested in humanitarian work among horses, I protest against this inhuman traffic and beg that you will use your influence that action shall be taken which shall stop these foreign shipment of horses until the war is at an end.

Very respectfully, yours, SEBYL T. JONES.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this connection I will state that my attention has been called to a statement to the effect that the horses we are shipping from this country to the European nations survive, on the average, only a few days—two or three weeks at the longest—after they have been impressed into service. Does the Senator know anything about that?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can only say that I think, mayhap, it is in common with the experience we had in our own war. I remember the agents bought a great many poor, miserable cripples and palmed them off on the Government. I have no doubt that is true; but still the fact is true that superb specimens of that brute creation are bought and carried over and lined up in battle and shot down, maimed and crippled, and that they die writhing in pain and agony. God knows my heart goes out for them.

Mr. GALLINGER. So does mine.

SERVICE ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Michigan in reference to the so-called seamen's bill. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Concurrent resolution adopted by the Michigan State Legislature.

Whereas there is pending before Congress Senate bill No. 136, intended, through drastic regulations, to protect passengers upon boats plying on the ocean and the Great Lakes which if enacted would virtually put out of business all passenger-boat lines operating upon the said Great Lakes; and

Whereas the passenger season on the Great Lakes is only for three months in midsummer, and steamers are passing and repassing each other at very short intervals, so that assistance is always near at hand in the case of any accident, the risk of casualties being reduced to a minimum, and is entirely different from the dangers on the ocean; and

Whereas millions of passengers have been carried and no loss of life has occurred on any of the passenger boats plying on said lakes during the last 10 years; and

Whereas whatever loss of life has occurred in that time on these lakes has been upon freight carriers which operate late in the season, and the bulk of such loss occurring during that part of the season and at a time when passenger and excursion boats are laid up for the winter; and

Whereas many millions of dollars are invested in said passenger and excursion boats, built under Government regulations, inspection, and supervision, which under the proposed bill would become almost a total loss and many thousands of persons be thrown out of employment; and

Whereas if under these conditions Congress should insist on enacting the proposed legislation, we feel that the excursion and passenger steamers of the Great Lakes should be exempted from the provisions of the bill: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Michigan respectfully asks the Congress of the United States to refuse to enact the proposed measure enumerated above as applied to the Great Lakes and for the reasons contained in the preamble hereof; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the clerk of the house of representatives to each of the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States, and they are hereby respectfully requested to oppose by all honorable means the enactment of this proposed legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] regarding excursion boats in the Lake service I wish to have printed in the RECORD and will ask to have read from the desk an extract from a report made by the board of education of Chicago, which instituted an investigation regarding this excursion service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

REPORT OF THE CHICAGO SCHOOL CENSUS OF 1914 AND ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

[Pages 31 and 33.]

LAKE BOAT EXCURSION DANGERS.

In June and July the department, at the suggestion of Dean Walter T. Sumner, of the school management committee, approved by the superintendent of schools, conducted an investigation of conditions on the lake excursion boats, so extensively patronized by school children during the summer months. Investigators covered these boats for the purpose of making known to parents and the public the conditions found.

It was ascertained that during the summer of 1914 many of these excursion boats were merely floating saloons and that the rule prohibiting sale of liquor to minors was not enforced. The discipline on most of the boats was lax; unescorted young girls were subject to indignities; immoral women and licentious men patronized the boats, and moral conditions were bad, and anyone with "the price" could rent a stateroom. The Government is now following up the investigation. Slot machines, paddle and wheel games gave children their first lesson in gambling; bars were opened before the 3-mile limit was reached; minors were found drunk; men took indecent liberties with women; and rowdyism was rampant on "big days," especially the Fourth of July. While the majority of passengers conduct themselves properly, there is a vicious and degenerate minority, including a clique of young men who infest the boats, looking upon unescorted young girls as "legitimate prey."

It was found that the boats only carried lifeboats and life rafts to save the lives of 30 per cent of their passengers, and this means that a boat licensed to a capacity of 2,000 to 3,000 passengers during the excursion period—May 15 to October 15—would be able to provide lifeboats and life rafts for less than one-third on board if the boat was crowded to its capacity. These boats are crowded to the rail on holidays and week-end trips. Life preservers are plentiful, but life preservers are not adequate protection for small children. The crews are small, and unless there is amended national legislation to compel excursion boats to increase their lifeboat equipment personal safety on an overcrowded Lake Michigan excursion boat is a risk in which humanity must depend upon fate as to whether it would be numbered among the "one-third saved" or the two-thirds that would be dependent upon life preservers. Among the latter would doubtless be many children with only a circle of cork around them to float their frightened souls to rescue.

It was found that the majority of excursion boats encouraged the gambling spirit among children and that money was accepted from a 6-year-old child to play the paddle game. In this investigation of the conditions on the excursion boats our officers found that the Christopher Columbus maintained the best discipline on board among its passengers. No slot machines nor gambling devices of any kind were found on board; six boat patrolmen maintained order, and the moral conditions during the period named were the best of any boat under surveillance. The City of South Haven maintains several patrolmen, but, unfortunately, permits games of chance that are patronized by school children. Parents should not permit their children to go on any excursion boat unescorted.

I recommend that the lake excursions of the vacation schools be abandoned until every boat is better equipped with adequate lifesaving facilities. The bars on these boats should either be better regulated or eliminated.

Every public place, including amusement parks and theaters, as well as bathing beaches, should be strongly policed by special officers, as well as regular police officers, to make "safety first" apply to the moral protection of women and children. Juvenile delinquency is not a sequel of school life, but a sequel of the life of the school child outside of school hours, and the court records will corroborate this statement.

WILLIAM A. WALLACE.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12229) for the relief of William A. Wallace, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 916) thereon.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 519, authorizing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to employ an additional clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the Table Calendar.

By Mr. STERLING:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 226) providing for the appointment of a joint select committee to investigate and report as to the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, and as to the necessity of any change or revision in the tax laws applicable to said District; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. OWEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ASHURST submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the support and civilization of Seminole Indians of Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 to pay Hon. William P. Jackson for expenses incurred by him in the proceedings involving the validity of his credentials and his right to a seat in the United States Senate, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a legislative reference division in the Library of Congress, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DAMS OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RAILROADS AND RAILROAD SECURITIES.

Mr. OLIVER. I have here a pamphlet entitled "The Problem of the Railroads and Railroad Securities of the United States is the People's Problem." I think it worthy of being published as a public document, but suggest that the application be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pamphlet will be referred to the Committee on Printing with the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

SUPPLY OF ANILINE DYESTUFFS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 520, submitted yesterday by Mr. POMERENE, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as fully as possible as to the facts relating to the supply of dyestuffs for American textile and other industries, the sources of such supply, the extent and nature of the supply, the movement of prices, the available materials for the manufacture of such supplies in this country, the possibilities, if any, as to the stoppage of such supply by reason of the existing European war, and any and all such other facts as will bring the existing conditions in the aniline color industry fully to the knowledge of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. At the suggestion of another Senator, I ask that the resolution may lie over without prejudice until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

NATIONAL SECURITY COMMISSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution I introduced on the 7th of December last may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) providing for a national security commission, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be called the National Security Commission, consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States. Said commission shall make full investigation, by subcommittee or otherwise, into the question of the preparedness of the United States for war, defensive or offensive. Said commission shall report to the Congress its findings and shall make such recommendations as in its judgment may seem proper.

For the purpose of said investigation said commission is authorized to send for persons and papers, to make all necessary travel, either in the United States or any foreign country, and to administer oaths. Such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That not more than one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives appointed on said commission shall be a member either of the Committee on Military Affairs or of the Committee on Naval Affairs of their respective bodies.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, some time since my eye was caught by a letter published in a New York newspaper in regard to this resolution which I have ventured to lay before the Senate. The writer appeared to be one of those persons who feel a deep anxiety for the maintenance of the military force known as the police, who protect their lives and property, but who regard with indifference, if not hostility, the Army and Navy, which are designed to protect the country. The writer's argument is not of importance, but he alluded to the resolution which I have introduced, and one objection to it was that its author was a party man. I think the writer evidently belongs to that class of our citizens who make noises and utter cries like an independent, but who always vote steadily and constantly against the party which they profess to support. It is true that I am a party man. I think it is well to be a party man, and I have for a long time consoled myself when objections to me are made such as the one I have quoted by thinking of what was said many years go by one of the greatest men in history, and who was at the same time one of the best and wisest. On July 16, 1852, Abraham Lincoln said:

A free people in times of peace and quiet, when pressed by no common danger, naturally divide into parties. At such times the man who is of neither party is not, can not be, of any consequence. Mr. Clay, therefore, was of a party.

Following this opinion expressed by Abraham Lincoln, I have been, as I have just said, a party man. But it does not follow, because I am a party man, that I treat all subjects which come before the country or before Congress from a party standpoint. There are many measures presented to the Senate which are in no sense party questions and upon which, as we all know, Senators vote without reference to their party affiliations. There are also certain great questions into which, in most cases certainly, party considerations are not allowed to enter, and with me the national defense is one, and always has been one, of those questions. Nothing was further from my thoughts or my desires than to make the subject involved in my resolution a party question or seek to gain from it party advantage.

The resolution itself shows, indeed, on its face that no partisan advantage is sought, for it provides that three members of the commission shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House, three by the Vice President, and three by the President of the United States. With such an appointing power, can it be imagined by anyone that I am trying to create a partisan commission which would work in the interest of the Republican Party and against the Democratic Party? If I were I should not seek to have the members of the commission appointed in just that way. For all that has been well and wisely done for our national defense no party as such can take the whole credit, and for what has been left undone no party as such is to blame. Nor is the blame for our deficiencies to be placed upon any administration. Administrations of both parties have as a rule sought, sometimes tepidly and sometimes vigorously, to do what was best for the Army and Navy, and Secretaries of War and Secretaries of the Navy, with scarcely an exception, have labored, some of course with much more ability and efficiency than others, to do all that was best for the forces committed to their charge. The deficiencies in our means of national defense, embodied in the Army and Navy, are almost wholly due to Congress. The responsibility for our military and naval service has been divided among half a dozen committees of the House and Senate. There has never been any comprehensive plan adopted for dealing with our national defenses as a whole or even for dealing with our Army and Navy as separate and complete entities. The result, of course, is a total lack of unity of plan, and Congress has never been willing to follow the advice of the military and naval boards, who were alone competent to set forth comprehensive, intelligent, and far-reaching systems, or to establish what we most need—a council of national defense in which both the executive and legislative branches should be represented. Congress has scattered the appropriations for the two services through half a dozen appropriation bills. It has failed entirely to unite our naval and semi-naval services under one head, so that we have three or four little navies in addition to the large Navy. Congress has sacrificed expenditure for national defense to expenditures fraught with local popularity, often needless, rarely imperative. It has turned a deaf ear to the recommendation of one Secretary after another, both in the War and Navy Departments, that we should cease wasting money on useless navy yards and stations and stop scattering our soldiers among widely separated posts at points where there was no need of troops. The appropriations have been haphazard, with the result that, although there are many excellent features in the two services, both the Army and Navy are unbalanced—that is, they are strong at one point and weak at another—and one branch or several branches in each of the two services are not properly proportioned to the other branches. It seemed to me that it was extremely important that we should have an inquiry by a commission representing both branches of Congress as well as the Executive, which should be able to examine into the entire question and report upon the entire subject.

I observe that Capt. Winterhalter, before the House committee on December 14, made the following statement:

I do not know what the people want. Put the question to the people and let them decide it.

That is precisely what I desire. I wish the people to have the condition of our national defenses clearly and honestly presented to them, and then decide what they wish to have done. But in order that the people of the United States may understand what the conditions are upon which they are asked to decide they must have those conditions laid before them in a comprehensible manner. It is idle to suppose that a correct public opinion can be formed from the information contained in the examination of Army and Navy officers before half a dozen committees. It is utterly impossible for the average man to examine those hundreds of pages of questions and answers and deduce therefrom a clear idea of what is needed and of what he himself as an American citizen desires. An immense mass of information on the subject of the national defense has been printed in the newspapers, but, as a rule, each article relates to some particular point or to some special branch of one of the two services, and there is no unity or coherence in the result. If the people are to pass intelligently upon this question—and I am sure that they feel a very deep interest in it—they should have the facts presented to them in a clear and condensed form and as the result of an examination conducted by men in whose ability, honesty, and good judgment they have entire confidence. They would then know what the condition was, and they would read it all in comparatively few pages. This is what I should like to see done, and I desire now to give more fully the grounds and reasons for my earnest hope that Congress will take the necessary steps to present to the people of the country all the facts in regard to our national defense in such a manner as to enable the country to reach a decision, a decision which I am sure the people of the United States are more than willing to make when they have once been informed upon the subject.

In the last annual report of the Secretary of War the Secretary makes a statement upon the general question of national defense which seems to me as remarkable for the courage with which facts are faced as it is for the clearness, the strength, and the power with which those facts are stated. I make no apology to the Senate for asking their attention while I read to them the passages to which I refer:

It would be premature to attempt now to draw the ultimate lessons from the war in Europe. It is an imperative duty, however, to heed so much of what it brings home to us as is incontrovertible and not to be changed by any event, leaving for later and more detailed and comprehensive consideration what its later developments and final conclusions may indicate.

For orderly treatment certain preliminary considerations may be usefully adverted to. It is, of course, not necessary to dwell on the blessings of peace and the horrors of war. Everyone desires peace, just as everyone desires health, contentment, affection, sufficient means for comfortable existence, and other similarly beneficent things. But peace and the other states of being just mentioned are not always or even often solely within one's own control. Those who are thoughtful and have courage face the facts of life, take lessons from experience, and strive by wise conduct to attain the desirable things, and by prevision and precaution to protect and defend them when obtained. It may truthfully be said that eternal vigilance is the price which must be paid in order to obtain the desirable things of life and to defend them.

In collective affairs the interests of the group are confided to the Government, and it thereupon is charged with the duty to preserve and defend these things. The Government must exercise for the Nation the precautionary, defensive, and preservative measures necessary to that end. All governments must therefore have force—physical force—i. e., military force, for these purposes. The question for each nation when this matter is under consideration is, How much force should it have and of what should that force consist?

In the early history of our Nation there was a natural, almost inevitable, abhorrence of military force, because it connoted military despotism. Most, if not all, of the early settlers in this country came from nations where a few powerful persons tyrannically imposed their will upon the people by means of military power. The consequence was that the oppressed who fled to this country necessarily connected military force with despotism and had a dread thereof. Of course all this has long since passed into history. No reasonable person in this country to-day has the slightest shadow of fear of military despotism nor of any interference whatever by military force in the conduct of civil affairs. The military and the civil are just as completely and permanently separated in this country as the church and the state are; the subjection of the military to the civil is settled and unchangeable. The only reason for adverting to the obsolete condition is to anticipate the action of those who will cite from the works of the founders of the Republic excerpts showing a dread of military ascendancy in our Government. Undoubtedly at the time such sentiments were expressed there was a very real dread. At the present time such expressions are entirely inapplicable and do not furnish even a presentable pretext for opposing proper military preparation.

It also seems proper, in passing, to refer to the frame of mind of those who use the word "militarism" as the embodiment of the doctrine of brute force and loosely apply it to any organized preparation of military force, and therefore deprecate any adequate military preparation because it is a step in the direction of the contemned "militarism." It is perfectly apparent to anyone who approaches the matter with an unprejudiced mind that what constitutes undesirable militarism as distinguished from a necessary, proper, and adequate preparation of the military resources of the Nation depends upon the position in which each nation finds itself, and varies with every nation and with different conditions in each nation at different times. Every nation must have adequate force to protect itself from domestic insurrections, to enforce its laws, and to repel invasions; that is, every nation that has similar characteristics to those of a self-respecting man. (The Constitution obliges the United States to protect each State against invasion.) If it prepares and maintains more military force than is necessary for the purposes just named, then it is subject to the conviction, in the public opinion of the world, of having embraced "militarism," unless it intends aggression for a cause which the public opinion of the world conceives to be a righteous one. To the extent, however, that it confines its military preparedness to the purposes first mentioned there is neither warrant nor justification in characterizing such action as "militarism." Those who would thus characterize it do so because they have reached the conclusion that a nation to-day can properly dispense with a prepared military force, and therefore they apply the word to any preparation or organization of the military resources of the nation. Not being able to conceive how a reasonable, prudent, patriotic man can reach such a conclusion, I can not conceive any arguments or statements that would alter such a state of mind. It disregards all known facts, flies in the face of all experience, and must rest upon faith in that which has not yet been made manifest.

Equally useless, in my view, is the discussion frequently indulged in as to whether military preparation tends or does not tend to avoid war. I term such discussion "useless" because, so far as we are concerned, whatever conclusion might be reached thereon would not affect our duty. Since it is not in mind to suggest any military preparation of the Nation's resources beyond that absolutely essential under existing conditions, the question of whether more extensive preparation for the purpose of avoiding war would have that effect or not is futile. Unless this Nation has reached the conclusion that it has no need for the preparation of its military resources for the purposes I have above enumerated, then we must earnestly address ourselves to the question of such proper preparation. I have reached no such conclusion, and in fact am of the firm conviction that no reasonable, prudent man who faces facts could reach such a conclusion. Unless and until the Congress of the United States, representing the people of the country, places on record the conclusion of the people to the contrary, my duty is, I think, entirely clear; and that duty is to set forth the facts and the necessities growing out of the facts, and suggestions as to the ways and means of fulfilling such necessities.

Whatever the future may hold in the way of agreements between nations, followed by actual disarmament thereof, of international courts of arbitration, and other greatly to be desired measures to lessen or prevent conflict between nation and nation, we all know that at present these conditions are not existing. We can and will eagerly adapt ourselves to each beneficent development along these lines; but to merely enfeeble ourselves in the meantime would, in my view, be unthinkable folly. By neglecting and refusing to provide ourselves with the necessary means of self-protection and self-defense we could not hasten or in any way favorably influence the ultimate results we desire in these respects.

What, then, does this Nation need in the way of military preparedness? Of course I am not attempting to lay down a counsel of perfection—that is, an extensive scheme which is ideal in its completeness. Such a scheme might well be considered and studied and adopted after long study. But to await the result of such a course would be to continue the undesirable situation in which we have so long been. In my view it is much better to do those things which lie nearest at hand and can be done than to remain as we are, without moving along proper lines until a more comprehensive and perfect scheme can be agreed upon. Nothing done along the lines I am about to suggest will interfere with the carrying out of a more comprehensive and maturely developed plan, but, on the contrary, will fit into it exactly.

To the statement which I have just read and to the arguments contained therein as to the general proposition of provisions for national self-defense, it would be well-nigh impossible to make any substantial additions. But it can not be too often reiterated that the Constitution itself contemplates the maintenance of an Army, and in the clause relating to the militia speaks of the enforcement of the laws, domestic insurrections, and foreign invasion as the purposes for which the forces of the United States should be established and if the necessity arises should be employed. That we ought to have an adequate national defense well prepared in time of peace to meet the exigencies of war was clearly contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. It is true that more than 125 years have elapsed since that great instrument was adopted, but it is not apparent, despite the advances which have been made in the direction of arbitrating international disputes, that the danger of war has been materially lessened since 1787. On the contrary we are at this moment in the presence of a war which in its extent and in the death, destruction, and suffering that it is causing goes far beyond anything which the framers of the Constitution could have imagined. Our organic law therefore directs us to make provision for national defense, and the only question is whether under existing conditions that defense is at present adequate.

I propose briefly to enumerate certain points where the plain facts, comprehensible by everyone, or the evidence of those most competent to judge prove that our means of self-defense are either woefully inadequate or wholly lacking. Before doing so I wish to call attention to the expenditure caused in times of peace by the wars in which we have been engaged and contrast it with the expenditure of the Government in preparing in time of peace a proper national defense so that we might be reasonably ready when war comes, if come it must.

In the report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1910 there is a table which seems to me of interest in this connection. It shows the relation of our average naval expenditure, by decades, to the average valuation of the property of the country, also by decades, from 1800 to 1910. This table has many points of interest. It shows that the percentage of naval expenditure to the value of the property of the country is largest in the decade from 1810 to 1820, reaching in that period .0026 per cent. The lowest was in the decade from 1880 to 1890, when the percentage of naval expenditure was .0003 per cent. In the decade from 1900 to 1910 it was .0009 per cent, the lowest that we have had since 1800 except in the decades from 1850 to 1860, 1870 to 1880, 1880 to 1890, and 1890 to 1900. After the War of 1812 the percentage of naval expenditures to the wealth of the country ranged from .0026 per cent to .0015 per cent, dropping to .0009 per cent in the decade from 1850 to 1860. After the Civil War it declined to the lowest point ever reached, and is now, as I have said, less than it has been in all but four decades of our history. Surely .0009 per cent is not a large amount to pay merely as an insurance. The Navy, in the nature of things, is our principle defense, and to compel $110,000,000,000 of property to pay .0009 per cent toward its own protection does not seem an unreasonable or excessive burden.

Since the foundation of the Government we have paid in pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines, their widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, on account of services in the several wars in which we have been engaged, including cost of maintenance, $4,857,895,843.73. The total expenditure for the Navy from 1794 to 1914 was $3,071,179,958.99. Deducting, as we should in order to get the expenditure in time of peace, the expenditure on the Navy during our years of war—10 in all—we find that the Navy in time of peace has cost the Government $2,663,294,530.50. The total disbursements for the War Department from the foundation of the Government are $7,484,348,144.26. Deducting the disbursements for the 10 years of war, which were $3,058,759,659.96, and the disbursements for rivers and harbors, which were $753,448,939.30, we find that the total disbursements for the War Department in time of peace were $3,672,139,544.50. The total disbursements for the two services in time of peace from the foundation of the Government were $6,335,434,075, which is only $1,477,538,231.27 more than the amount expended in pensions.

It is also interesting to make a comparison of the expenditures from 1866 to the present time, because the pension disbursements have been largely made since the Civil War. The river and harbor appropriations, amounting to $687,203,329.31, must be deducted from the military disbursements for that period. I have been unable to get the figures from 1866 to 1875, so that for those nine years the river and harbor disbursements are included, although they ought not to be, in the table of the War Department expenditures. Made up in this way the figures stand from 1866 to 1914, inclusive: Army, after deducting the appropriations for rivers and harbors from 1875 to 1914 and leaving in those made between 1866 and 1874, inclusive, $3,296,448,378.47; and the Navy, $2,345,306,671.82; a total for the two services of $5,641,755,050.29. The appropriations for pensions for the same period, from 1866 to 1914, inclusive, including those for maintenance, amount to $4,761,450,- 399.50. It will be observed, therefore, that our expenditures for past wars come within $900,000,000 of equaling the expenditures for both the Army and Navy during the same period. Having spent so much money for past wars certainly it is not too much to ask that we make proper appropriations for future wars in which the country may unhappily be engaged, and to take care of the men who may be called upon to defend their country in wars of the future, as well and generously as we have taken care of the men who have fought the wars of past times.

I now come to the condition of our defenses at the present moment, and I will begin with the Army. On June 30, 1914, the Regular Army of the United States consisted of 4,701 officers and 87,781 men; 758 officers and 17,901 men belong to the Coast Artillery and are therefore stationary in coast defenses; 1,008 officers and 18,434 men belong to the staff, technical, and non-combatant branches of the Army, including recruits and men engaged in recruiting. This leaves a mobile Army composed of 2,935 officers and 51,446 men. Of those 9,572 are in the Philippine Islands, 8,195 in Hawaii, 2,179 in the Canal Zone, 849 in China, 862 in Alaska, 707 in Porto Rico, troops en route and officers at other foreign stations, 1,449. This left a mobile Army force in continental United States on June 30, 1914, of 1,495 officers and 29,405 men.

The Secretary of War states that in the very near future it will be necessary to take from the United States and put in the Philippine Islands 13 companies of Coast Artillery, comprising 1,950 men; in the Hawaiian Islands, 6,380 men; and in the Canal Zone, 4,774 men; and the Secretary adds that he does not think the Canal Zone force will be sufficient even when this addition is made. So long as we hold the Philippine Islands we must have a force there adequate for their defense. The Hawaiian Islands are one of our most important outposts and we need and must maintain there a considerable force. We can not therefore look for any addition to the mobile force in the continental United States from either of these sources; on the contrary, it is probable that further drafts on our Army will be necessary in both places. The Panama Canal Zone is more important to us for our national defense than anything else. At the present moment it is miserably and most inadequately protected. It is not enough to have fortifications to guard the ends of the canal. We must maintain there a force sufficient to protect the canal, so far as it is humanly possible, throughout its entire length. The canal is a delicate piece of mechanism. Explosives rightly placed would block it in a moment. There would be—there is at all times—great danger that the agents or spies of a hostile nation might make their way to some point on the borders of the canal and in a moment render it useless for weeks and perhaps for months. This is a danger to be guarded against most vigilantly, and although the Secretary proposes to raise the protecting force there to practically 7,000 men, he frankly states that such a force will not be sufficient. Porto Rico and Alaska must of course have forces sufficient for their protection. For these obvious reasons we can not hope to reduce the numbers in our detachments employed in necessary and, in the case of the Canal Zone, vital service outside the continental United States, and thus with the additions to these outlying posts, which must be made very shortly, we are left in the continental United States with 12,610 Coast Artillery troops and 24,602 men composing our entire mobile force, which, as the Secretary points out, is not much more than twice the size of the police force of the city of New York. Surely it is not necessary to do more than repeat these figures to show the utter inadequacy of our Regular Army for the absolutely necessary duties which must be performed in time of peace and the painful insufficiency of our mobile forces for any effective defense if we were to be attacked by a powerful enemy. Can there be any doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that the regular forces of the United States ought to be increased to at least the very moderate extent of 25,000 additional men, as recommended by the Secretary of War?

I pass now from the Regular Army, in which we are so clearly deficient, to our provision for supplying waste and losses which occur in any army when war begins. What means have we of filling the gaps which war would make? The reserves which we have of soldiers who have served in the Army, and who under the terms of their enlistment are liable to be called back to the colors, amount to 16 men. In other words, we have no reserves with which rapidly to enlarge the Army of the United States if we were to be attacked. We have no reserves with which to fill the waste of war in our little mobile Army. We should be forced to rely on volunteers for that purpose, and to give volunteers even the rudest kind of training in order to make them fit to be placed in the line would consume months. Even if we get the volunteers we have no officers ready to take commands. Even now we are short of officers, and the Secretary points out that the instruction of the Organized Militia suffers woefully from the lack of officers available for that service. Is it not clear and beyond dispute that we should make some provision for reserves who can be called to the colors, composed of men already trained who have their equipment, who are prepared, and who can take their place in the line as soon as they are mobilized? Is it not equally clear that we should increase the number of our officers so that we may have enough officers in case of war to take command in these reserves? Officers can not be improvised; they must be trained and educated. But we are making no effort and doing nothing toward increasing our supply of officers, although we have the best Military Academy in the world ready to give instruction to any number of officers that we may need.

The other branch of our national defense is the militia. The fundamental difficulty in regard to the militia resides in our form of government. They are State forces, under 46 different heads, and to bring them into the service and put them under command of the United States is no easy matter. We can not depend upon them to take the place of proper reserves, who by law have been trained in the Regular Army or under regular officers, and who by the terms of their enlistment or of their volunteer service can be mobilized and called to the colors on short notice. Yet the militia is of undoubted value, and should have all the encouragement that Congress can give it. It is a good training school both for officers and men. If the militia is brought to a high state of efficiency we could undoubtedly draw from it officers and men who could at once be incorporated with the forces of the United States as volunteers.

But what are the numbers of this militia force? On June 30, 1914, it numbered 8,323 officers and 119,087 men. They are required under the acts of Congress, and in order to obtain the official financial aid authorized by Congress to attend 24 drills in a year and give 5 days annually in the field. The Secretary of War says it is inconceivable that even if all the National Guard were summoned in the event of war that all would respond, and the statistics of the drills and maneuvers and of the rifle range throw some light on the possibilities of the militia when the call to arms arrives. If you will examine the report of the Chief of Staff and those of his predecessor, you will find that over 24,000 members of the militia did not even appear for inspection last year, over 33,000 did not appear at the annual encampment, and 44,000, or 40 per cent of all the militiamen, did not even appear on the rifle range. It also appears that 60 per cent of the men in the militia who were armed with a rifle did not know how to use it properly, for 60 per cent were unable to qualify last year as second-class marksmen. Forty-four thousand, as I have just said, did not appear on the rifle range. Only about two-thirds of the militia, 67,000 in round numbers, have availed themselves of the opportunity of rifle practice, and of these 66,974 officers and men only 42,599 qualified as second-class marksmen or better. It therefore follows that of all the officers and men of the Organized Militia who participated in rifle practice only 38.3 per cent have reached that stage of proficiency which marks them as suitable for battle purposes. (See p. 257, Report of the Chief of Militia Affairs, and pp. 6 and 7 of Report of Chief of Staff.) The total absenteeism from inspection was 639 officers and 23,467 men. From the camps of instruction there was a total absenteeism of 1,428 officers and 31,855 enlisted men (pp. 6 and 7, Chief of Staff).

From the above figures it will be seen that only 81.7 per cent of the officers and men of the Organized Militia attended the annual inspections; that only 73.87 per cent of the officers and men attended the camps of instruction; that the number of men who had any practice with the rifle during 1913 was 52.56 per cent; and that only 33.43 per cent qualified as second-class marksmen or better. The regulations require that units of the organized Militia shall have at least 24 drills of one hour each per annum. In a majority of the States these requirements were fully met as regards the organizations, yet in a majority of organizations there were a number of enlisted men who failed to attend 24 times for drill and instruction during the calendar year 1913. The total number so failing to attend during 1913 was 37,874 men out of a total of 119,087. The Chief of Staff also states that there is no indication of the number of practice marches held by the units of the Organized Militia, but that it is believed to be a safe conclusion that not a single unit at its maximum strength marched a distance of 10 miles fully equipped and armed.

The militia is deficient, according to the Chief of Staff (p. 7), in the following units to make it a properly balanced and efficient field force:

Fifty-four troops of Cavalry.

Seventy-nine batteries of Field Artillery.

Fourteen companies of Engineers.
Thirty-four ambulance companies.
Twelve field hospitals.

The militia can be made a most valuable force for the defense of the country. A proportion of the militia is now available, but it is not all available; and when we look at these figures can we not see that it is inadequate, both in numbers and training, for a great and sudden exigency? Is there not room for some wise legislation in this respect?

But suppose that we have our volunteers and our militia trained; how well can we equip them? The Secretary of War says that we have enough small arms and small-arms ammunition and equipment, figured roughly, for the 500,000 men that would have to be called into the field in any large emergency. Just what does that mean? I understand we have 196,000,000 rounds of ammunition for small arms, which would be enough to equip a mobile army of about 450,000. It makes no provision for reserves of ammunition. It is, I believe, only one-third of what the estimates of the general board, made before the European war came, required for a really sufficient supply. Now, consider what Gen. Wotherspoon recommends in his report since the European war. In the first place, he thinks we ought to have 800,000 men instead of 500,000, including the militia, and here is what he says in his report as to ammunition (p. 12):

No attempt will be made to enter into particulars as to the character of supplies that it will be necessary to accumulate and store for the use of such forces as are contemplated in the above scheme; that is, a regular mobile army, including its reserves of 500,000 men, and a force of 300,000 mobile Organized Militia troops, including its reserves. One illustration will be sufficient, and that will be taken from the munitions most necessary in war, as rifles and field artillery. The proper proportion of rifles in a force of this character, including the Cavalry, which is armed with the rifle, would be 642,541. The minimum accumulated supply of rifle ammunition, based on 1,000 rounds per rifle, should be 646,000,000 rounds.

The Secretary of War also says that we have nothing like sufficient artillery and artillery ammunition. As for the deficiency in artillery, it is only necessary to examine the report of the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs to learn how deficient the militia is in field artillery. (See p. 229.) It there appears that there is only 1 among the 12 divisional districts—the sixth or New York district—which has adequate artillery protection. The Coast Artillery Militia is 11,000 men short of the number required to man one-half the gun defenses in the continental limits of the United States. If raised to war strength, the existing organizations would still be 5,000 men short of their complement for this service. (See p. 277, Chief of Militia Affairs.)

There are but 550 horses available for the use in drill and instruction of the militia cavalry, which aggregates 4,940 officers and enlisted men. The deficiency in horses for the Field Artillery is even greater than that of the Cavalry. There are no animals for the signal or sanitary troops. In regard to wagon transportation, the militia, as now organized, is deficient 1,934 wagons, and should the militia be assembled into divisions and separate brigades the deficit would be 5,836 wagons. There are no draft animals available.

I have made no statement in regard to the militia which is not taken from the official reports of the Chief of Staff or of the Chief of the Division of Militia Affairs; and it seems to me that no intelligent man can read those figures and consider those facts without realizing what we have to rely on if the militia as a force is suddenly called out to defend the country against invasion. Is it not apparent that we need the legislation recommended by the department in regard to the militia?

Putting the number of infantrymen now in the Regular Army and Organized Militia at approximately 138,000, there are in the regular service and the militia 98 batteries of 4 guns each—the regular number—making 2.84 guns per thousand infantrymen. It is considered, however, that in proportioning the number of guns for an army the Cavalry should be included, and on this basis, since there are 19,800 cavalrymen in the regular service and the militia, the guns are in the ratio of 2.48 per thousand Infantry and Cavalry. I understand that in the French Army the number of guns per thousand Infantry and Cavalry is 6½, and in the German Army 7 per thousand. This gives an idea of how very unbalanced our Army is at present and how deficient it is in field artillery. It should be said, however, that in addition to the guns in the hands of the troops there are now manufactured and in reserve 242 guns, making 634 in all available. These include the various calibers which make up light and heavy field artillery. There are appropriated for and under manufacture 226 additional guns, making 860 as the total number on hand or under manufacture, a ratio of 5.44 guns per thousand for Infantry and Cavalry actually in the service. But the department's scheme for the supply of material for the Army contemplates a mobile force of 450,000 men in the United States, organized into six field armies, in addition to the Coast Artillery and the garrisons of the outlying possessions. Artillery takes longer to manufacture than the other arms and equipment, and the scheme is intended to provide for seven field armies in the United States, in addition to that required for the troops in the outlying possessions, at a ratio of about 3.16 guns per thousand Infantry and Cavalry, with a total of 1,292 guns, or 323 batteries; so that even on a basis of a little over 3 guns per thousand we are still short, counting those on hand or under manufacture, 432 guns, or 108 batteries. In other words, we are short of batteries; we need more men, more horses, and more equipment for our field artillery, which is now so lamentably deficient.

Let us now consider what the Chief of Staff in his last report said (p. 12), in view of what has taken place in Europe:

The proper proportion of field and heavy guns of the mobile type, and exclusive of the gigantic engines of war of more recent introduction, drawn by tractors, no types of which have as yet been developed in this country, would be 2,834. The ammunition for this type of guns, based upon a supply of 5,000 rounds per light field gun, with a corresponding proportion for the heavier field guns, a conservative estimate, if we regard the examples of the great military nations, would be 11,790,850 rounds. It is sufficient to point out that at the present time we have on hand and being manufactured 698,374 United States rifles (model 1903) and 241,000,000 rounds of ammunition for these rifles, 852 field guns and 580,098 rounds of ammunition for these guns. The number of guns per thousand men used in the calculation as to the total number required in the above estimate as to force is five, that number being considerably below the average in European armies. It should also be remembered that large numbers of guns and large masses of ammunition are, in an active war, liable to capture and destruction, and that to start into field operations with the expectation that the proportions given will be maintained without large sources of manufacture would be fallacious. As the factories and works in this country which can produce munitions of war of the above character are exceedingly limited, it is evident that a full supply of this type of matériel must be stored and ready for use before war is undertaken.

As to the guns in our fortifications for harbor defense it would appear from all the available testimony that the guns we now have are of shorter range than those carried by foreign warships of latest design. The Chief of Coast Artillery says in his last report (p. 7):

The question of the size and power of the guns required for the defense of Cape Henry has been brought up. In view of the fact that foreign warships of the latest design are to carry guns larger than 14 inches in caliber and of the highest ballistic power, and in view of the fact that if the defenses at Cape Henry were subjected to a naval attack it would be possible for a naval enemy to bring many battleships carrying 8 to 12 large-caliber guns per ship and to concentrate their fire on the Cape Henry fortifications, and in view also of the fact that coast fortifications are not restricted by reason of weight or space in mounting and using effectively the largest caliber of guns and guns of the highest power, the Chief of Coast Artillery has recommended that the type gun for the Cape Henry fortifications be a 16-inch, 50-caliber gun; otherwise these fortifications may be subjected not only to a very much greater volume of fire than can be delivered by them, but also have the disadvantage of replying to that fire with guns of inferior power, both by reason of the diameter of the bore of the gun and by reason of its shorter length, it being understood that for any given diameter of bore the power of the gun is a direct function of its length.

When Gen. Wood gave his testimony—I think a year ago—he based his calculation of ammunition on the capacity of one gun to fire 200 rounds. We have an official report that in one engagement a French gun fired 600 rounds. So Gen. Wood's estimate was certainly not excessive.

If guns of a larger caliber are needed at Cape Henry, as seems to be demonstrated by the Chief of Coast Artillery, it can be seen that this would apply to every harbor fortification in the country, and that we are deficient in guns of sufficiently large caliber to meet the latest and largest ships in foreign navies.

In machine guns we are better prepared. We have 1,000 automatic machine rifles, and 1,361 are estimated as required for the Army. Of the 361 still needed, 60 were covered by the estimates for the pending Army bill, but the war in Europe seems to indicate that we should increase our estimate of the number of machine guns ultimately needed.

We have practically no motor trucks for transport. We have no armored motor cars mounted with machine guns. The difficulty appears to be, according to the War Department, that no satisfactory motor truck has yet been developed in the United States. It is quite true that Canada has bought a number of motor trucks made in the United States, and apparently thinks them entirely sufficient for use in the field; but we are waiting, as it would seem, until we can get a perfect truck, and only experiment with them. It would seem that it would be better to have motor transportation and armored motor cars provided for with the best truck available than to go without any motor transportation and any armored motor cars at all until a perfect truck has been developed. The main fact remains that we have neither.

As to mines for harbor defense, we apparently have a sufficient number—about 5,000—but we are short of cable, and mines without the necessary cable are practically useless. The trouble here has been in insufficient appropriations. We also need for our coast defense an enlarged boat service for various purposes, but particularly we require mine planters which go along the coast visiting coast defenses annually as itinerant schools for mine instruction and local mine-defense boats necessary for planting the mines provided for each harbor. It is well that we have the mines, but if we have not the cable to connect them or the boats to plant them when necessity arrives they would not be very formidable or very protective.

I now come to the Navy, and I print as part of my speech a table of sea strength prepared by the Office of Naval Intelligence and dated July 1, 1914, and the warship tonnage of the principal naval powers from the same office under the same date:

Sea strength.

In order to answer the frequent inquiries of societies and persons throughout the country interested in the maintenance of the Navy and its relative strength and importance in comparison with foreign navies, the following information has been compiled:

[1] Battleships having a main battery of all big guns (11 inches or more in caliber).
[2] Battleships of (about) 10,000 tons or more displacement, and having more than one caliber in the main battery.
[3] Armored cruisers having guns of largest caliber in main battery and capable of taking their place in line of battle with the battleships. They have an increase of speed at the expense of carrying fewer guns in main battery, and a decrease in armor protection.
[4] Includes all unarmored cruising vessels above 1,500 tons displacement.
[5] Includes smaller battleships and monitors. No more vessels of this class are being proposed or built by the great powers.
[6] Includes vessels of colonies.

[1] England has no continuing shipbuilding policy, but usually lays down each year 4 or 5 armored ships with a proportional number of smaller vessels.
[2] Includes vessels of colonies.
[3] Germany has a continuing shipbuilding program, governed by a fleet law authorized by the Reichstag. For 1913 there are authorized 1 battleship, 1 battle cruiser, 2 cruisers, 12 destroyers. Eventual strength to consist of 41 battleships, 20 armored cruisers, 40 cruisers, 144 destroyers, 72 submarines.
[4] $78,837,569 authorized to be expended from 1911 to 1917 for the construction of war vessels.
[5] Russian shipbuilding program provides for the completion by 1918 of 4 battle cruisers, 8 small cruisers, 36 destroyers, and 18 submarines.

The following vessels are not included in the tables: Ships over 20 years old from date of launch, unless they have been reconstructed and rearmed within 5 years; torpedo craft over 15 years old; transports, colliers, repair ships, converted merchant vessels, or any other auxiliaries; vessels of less than 1,500 tons, except torpedo craft; torpedo craft of less than 50 tons.

NOTE.—Vessels undergoing trials are considered as completed.

[1] The Admiral of the Navy.
[2] The United States now has, temporarily, as extra numbers, due to promotion for war service, and to officers restricted by law to engineering duty only on shore only 6 flag officers, 20 captains, 9 commanders, 6 lieutenant commanders, and 1 lieutenant.
[3] Includes pharmacists.
[4] Includes pharmaceutical officers.
[5] Includes 21 officers of the Judge Advocate's Corps.
[6] Includes 50 ordnance and 10 hydrographic engineers.
[7] Includes 4 hydrographic engineers.
[8] Includes adjutants principaux; does not include premier maitres and maitres.
[9] Includes 4,000 recruits for 42 days.
[10] Marine infantry and seaman artillery.
[11] Includes 3,130 men of the coast guard.

NOTE.—In the table published December 1, 1913, the number of captains and commanders given was 356 and other line officers 1,881. This apparent discrepancy was due to the inclusion of 213 korvetten kapitane (lieutenant commanders) with the captains and commanders. In the above table the korvetten kapitane (226) are included with the other line officers. Under Italy the number of vice admirals given was 18; this was a typographical error and should have been 8.

[1] Colonial vessels included.
[2] Does not include Idaho and Mississippi, recently sold, or ships of current program for which contracts have not been awarded.
[3] Battleships having a main battery of all big guns (11 inches or more in caliber).
[4] Battleships of (about) 10,000 or more tons displacement, whose main batteries are of more than one caliber.
[5] Includes smaller battleships and monitors.
[6] Armored cruisers having guns of largest caliber in main battery and capable of taking their place in line of battle with the battleships. They have an increase of speed at the expense of carrying fewer guns in main battery and a decrease in armor protection.
[7] All unarmored warships of more than 1,500 tons are classed as cruisers. Scouts are considered as cruisers in which battery and protection have been sacrificed to secure extreme speed. The word "protected" has been omitted because all cruisers except the smallest and oldest now have protective decks.
[8] Includes 3 submarines authorized in 1913; contract for fourth not yet awarded.

The following vessels are not included in the tables: Ships over 20 years old from date of launch, unless they have been reconstructed and rearmed within 5 years; torpedo craft over 15 years old; those not actually begun or ordered, although authorized; transports, colliers, repair ships, torpedo depot ships, or other auxiliaries; vessels of less than 1,500 tons, except torpedo craft; torpedo craft of less than 50 tons.

I shall not enter upon any minute examination of the figures given in these tables, for anyone who will take the trouble to look at them can easily make the comparisons himself. It will be seen that the United States has 8 dreadnaughts and 22 battleships, some of the latter of old types which have been reconstructed and rearmed. Of the highest type battleship, the dreadnaught, we have only 8. We ought to have at least 48 dreadnaughts and battleships instead of 30 if we would properly defend our coast. The actual situation of the fleet as it relates to battleships at the present time is as follows:

(a) Effective battleships completed and ready for service, less than 20 years old from completion (since the sale of the Mississippi and Idaho)	30
(b) Battleships under construction	4
(c) Battleships authorized in 1914	2
(d) To replace Mississippi and Idaho	1
Total	37

This shows that we are now deficient 10 battleships, built, building, and authorized, from the number contemplated in the 1903 program of the General Board of the Navy. In considering these figures, however, it is well to remember that they include old ships and ships out of commission. It is true that every navy includes in its figures old ships not up to the latest modern requirement. Out of our 30 completed battleships, however, as well as I can make out from the information available, there are 12 which would require months of work to get them in order, because they have been laid up owing to the fact that we have not had the men and the crews to put on board of them; that is, we really have out of the 30 ships given in the table only 18 that are first-rate modern ships. You will see from these tables that the United States has four dreadnaughts building or authorized and no battle cruisers. We need more destroyers, but our most obvious weakness is in submarines. These tables show that we have 30 submarines built and 19 building or authorized; but these figures are misleading, and I wish to call your attention to the testimony of Commander Stirling before the House committee. From this testimony it appears, as nearly as I can make out, that we actually have 38 submarines built, 11 building, and 8 authorized, making in all 57. How many of those are good for anything, I do not know. I have studied the testimony, but it is very confusing. Let me, however, read what Commander Stirling said in regard to the mobilization of the Atlantic submarine flotilla (pp. 866–867) and that will give the Senate an idea of our submarine fleet.

Commander STIRLING. The commander in chief ordered a mobilization of the Atlantic submarine flotilla at Hampton Roads on the 1st of November of all available vessels. He left it to me to say what vessels I would bring down there. He did not consider the 5 at Colon. That reduced the submarine flotilla to 12.

Two of the 12 had but recently been turned over by the contractors. Their officers and men were new, and the boats had not been given their torpedoes; they had not left the navy yard. So I excluded them. That left 10, and 2 of them had been ordered by the Navy Department to have necessary alterations made on them at the contractor's yard at Groton.

If the contractors had been ready to do the work, and if the department had held those boats up and sent them to Hampton Roads, they were perfectly able to go there and would have been efficient, but it would have cost the Government a good deal of money by holding up the contractors. That left 8.

Of the 8, one of them had, after a submerged run, developed salt water in the battery. It was sent to the navy yard, and they were reconstructing the battery tank, and at the time of the mobilization the alterations had not been completed; and that left 7.

The G–4 had only been in operation a few weeks, and had only joined the flotilla a couple of weeks before that—about 10 days before the order came—and I considered that her best duty would be to train herself in submerged running, and that the best locality to do that was where she could base on some vessel that could look out for her crews more or less, and so I gave her the McDonough, an old destroyer, and based her on New London, and she went out two or three times a day and got in good shape. That left only 6.

Mr. ROBERTS. The G–4 was the Lorenti boat?

Commander STIRLING. The G–4 was the Lorenti boat.

Mr. ROBERTS. You say her batteries are too weak for underwater running?

Commander STIRLING. No; but batteries are defective. That left 6. Two of those were the G boats, under alteration and in reserve. So that left only 4.

So I took the four submarines from Newport to the mobilization, and one tender, the Tonopah. When we left Newport the condition of the submarines was this: There were two boats in good shape in every way. There were two other boats with negligible battery capacity. They could submerge for 10 or 15 minutes only. Their batteries were dead. They were 4 years old.

Mr. ROBERTS. They were old batteries?

Commander STIRLING. Yes. So when we got down there the admiral wanted to know what we could do. I told him we had then only one submarine that I thought could efficiently take part in the maneuvers at sea off the coast. One that had been in good condition when we left broke a crank shaft on the way down and burned out a motor bearing, requiring about three days' repair at the navy yard, or by tender, if we had one to do the work. In the latter case the work would probably have been done in less time.

Mr. ROBERTS. You had a tender?

Commander STIRLING. But she did not have the facilities.

Mr. ROBERTS. She had no facilities for such repairs?

Commander STIRLING. She had no facilities for such repairs. One boat had a half battery and could have submerged for probably three hours at slow speed, and was able, in every way, with a trained crew, to take part in short maneuvers. That was reported to the commander in chief, and the commander in chief reported that to our Navy Department.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then the heading of the article is somewhat misleading when it says only 1 out of 17 will dive.

Commander STIRLING. That is misleading, because it seems to imply that the 17 were all to be in service and only 1 was able to dive, while, as a matter of fact, all but 4 were undergoing alterations and necessary repairs or were stationed at Colon. The 5 stationed at Colon were all ready.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were all right, subject to this periodical repair work and the accidental repairs you mentioned?

Commander STIRLING. Yes, sir. The K boats. As I said, in time of emergency I would not have hesitated to have said that, while they had not demonstrated their ability to do what is required of them, but this is war, and we will go ahead, even with crews that have not been completely trained. Even under those circumstances we would have gone out against an enemy with the four K boats.

The CHAIRMAN. They were new boats and had just been delivered, and they had not had any training?

Commander STIRLING. Yes, sir; that is partly correct. They were perfectly excusable in every way, as far as the Navy is concerned. The engines are not yet satisfactory.

Mr. HOBSON. Captain, after your experience with flotillas and submarine boats, what types would you recommend for us to adopt this year and during the coming year when making appropriations for this purpose? About what size boat would you recommend?

Commander STIRLING. I understand the General Board has gone into that question very exhaustively and has recommended two types, the sea-going submarine and the coast submarine. When I was there the other day a number of the junior officers questioned me in regard to that matter and asked me what I considered was the minimum size for the coast-defense type from my experience in the flotilla—and I want to say my experience in the flotilla has not been very long. I take my experience from the officers there. Everything we do in the flotilla, every decision we make, is the consensus of opinion of all the commanding officers we can get together. We lay the questions before them and get the views from them, and from these views we make up the consensus of opinion, and the consensus of opinion of the Atlantic submarine flotilla is that the smallest submarine that should be built should not be smaller than about 500 tons submerged displacement.

It may also be added that the torpedoes we now have are all lightly built, and that our submarines are not only deficient in torpedoes but in size. Germany, England, and France have 800 and 1,000 ton submarines (p. 843), and we know what work they have done. The truth is we are sadly deficient in submarines; we have scarcely any really effective ones, none large enough for present conditions, and the figures that are given in the tables are, on their face, entirely misleading as to the actual value of our submarine fleet.

Our worst deficiency, however, even worse than in the case of submarines, is in scout cruisers. In the table which I have given the number of cruisers is put at 14, but that includes vessels of different types; and, as a matter of fact, I believe we have only three scout cruisers, as against 74 in England, 41 in Germany, and 13 in Japan. The scout cruisers which we have were authorized in 1904, and I wish to call attention to the statement of the General Board on this point:

In the struggle to build up the purely distinctive fighting ships of the Navy—battleships, destroyers, and submarines—the cruising and scouting element of the fleet has been neglected in recent years, and no cruisers or scouts have been provided for since 1904, when the Montana, North Carolina, Birmingham, Chester, and Salem were authorized. This leaves the fleet peculiarly lacking in this element so necessary for information in a naval campaign, and of such great value in clearing the sea of torpedo and mining craft, in opening and protecting routes of trade for our own commerce, and in closing and prohibiting such routes to the commerce of the enemy. The General Board believes that this branch of the fleet has been too long neglected and recommends that the construction of this important and necessary type be resumed. For the 1916 program it is recommended that four scout cruisers be provided.

We have three scout cruisers, therefore, to protect and give warning of the approach of a hostile fleet for 6,000 miles of coast on the Atlantic and Pacific. If they were all concentrated on the Atlantic coast, they would have to cover 1,000 miles a day to patrol the coast, and they are slow ships. They ought to be of the highest possible speed—30 to 31 knots per hour.

In sea strength, both in vessels built and building or authorized, we occupy third place among the nations; but when we come to tonnage, which is the great test, you will observe by the tables which I print that we have dropped to fourth place among the world navies, counting the vessels now building. We have not only dropped to fourth place in tonnage, but we have come dangerously near to Japan, which occupies fifth place.

Now, I ask attention to the active personnel of the Navy, taken from the same authority—the Office of Naval Intelligence—on July 1, 1914. According to this table we have 66,273 officers and men comprising the active personnel of the Navy. But this again is somewhat misleading, as to our naval efficiency as connected with the personnel. On this point the testimony of Mr. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, merits attention. It appears from his evidence that we are 18,000 men short of the number of men that we ought to have in time of peace as a preparation for war, and we shall be 4,000 more short if we count those necessary to man the vessels coming into commission in 1915 and 1916. These facts are also stated in the testimony of Admiral Badger before the House committee (p. 482). This shortage of men not only shows that our fleet is unprepared for war and for a sudden exigency of national defense but it also brings with it the deterioration of the ships laid up and out of commission, because we have not the men to put on board of them. Surely it is not necessary to dwell further upon such a condition as this.

I wish now to say a word about a new element in warfare which concerns both services and which has proved, in the war in Europe, to be of very great importance, if not as a military instrument, as a valuable means of obtaining information, both for armies and fleets. I refer, of course, to what are generally called air craft, or, more specifically, aeroplanes and hydroplanes. I do not think any argument is necessary to demonstrate the importance of the aeroplane in war. I merely wish to call attention to the condition of our two services in that respect. In the Army we have at this moment 13 aeroplanes and no Zeppelins or dirigible airships. We have no armored aeroplanes and no guns suitable for aeroplanes. In view of what we have all learned from the war in Europe, it seems to me that this is a deplorable condition, no matter to what cause it is due. In the Navy we have 12 aeroplanes and no Zeppelins or dirigible airships, according to the report of the General Board. The money appropriated for this branch of the service in the Navy, I am informed, has not been expended, and it is stated that the delay has been owing to the failure of the American manufacturers to furnish aeroplanes, to the differences of the experts as to the best type, and to the fact that we are waiting to get some aeroplanes from abroad in order to test them. These are, no doubt, correct explanations, but they are no defense of the conditions. No matter what the reasons may be for our lack of aeroplanes in both services, the deficiency ought to be supplied. If the manufacturers can not make them, then we should make them ourselves. In the country where the Langley formula, upon which all aeroplanes are built, was first established, in the country where the heavier-than-air machine was first perfected and successfully flown, it seems to me idle to suppose that we can not build good aeroplanes. It is quite possible that the nations now fighting in Europe have not got the best conceivable type of aeroplanes, but they have large numbers of them, which are formidable, and effective, and which seem to answer every purpose. And if they have them we can have them. Congress has not been illiberal in making appropriations in this direction, and ought to continue to do so. It ought also to give to both Secretaries authority to enlist mechanicians or drivers, who can go up with the officers in charge and run the machinery. Men fit for this work can be had if you pay them enough. You can not get them for the pay of a sailor or a soldier, and the Secretaries of War and Navy ought to be given authority to employ such men at a rate of pay which is sufficient to get the best, leaving the rate to the discretion of the two Secretaries. We ought also to make it plain that what Congress and the people want is a sufficient number of aeroplanes to serve and protect their Army and Navy. An army and navy without aeroplanes, as we practically are to-day, would be helpless, indeed, in the face of an enemy provided with them. In this connection let me quote what is said on this point by the General Board of the Navy:

24. The General Board in its indorsement No. 449 of August 30, 1913, and accompanying memorandum brought to the attention of the department the dangerous situation of the country in the lack of air craft and air men in both the naval and military services. A résumé was given in that indorsement with the accompanying memorandum of conditions in the leading countries abroad at that date, showing the preparations being made for air warfare and the use of air craft by both armies and navies, and contrasting their activity with our own inactivity. Certain recommendations were made in the same indorsement looking to the beginning of the establishment of a proper air service for the Navy.

25. The total result of that effort was the appointment of a board on aeronautics October 9, 1913. That board made further recommendations, among them the establishment of an aeronautics school and station at Pensacola and the purchase of 50 aeroplanes, 1 fleet dirigible, and 2 small dirigibles for training. At the present time, more than a year later, the total number of air craft of any kind owned by the Navy consists of 12 aeroplanes, not more than 2 of which are of the same type, and all reported to have too little speed and carrying capacity for service work.

26. In view of the advance that has been made in aeronautics during the past year, and the demonstration now being made of the vital importance of a proper air service to both land and sea warfare, our present situation can be described as nothing less than deplorable. As now developed air craft are the eyes of both armies and navies, and it is difficult to place any limit to their offensive possibilities.

27. In our present condition of unpreparedness, in contact with any foe possessing a proper air service, our scouting would be blind. We would be without the means of detecting the presence of submarines or mine fields or of attempting direct attack on the enemy from the air, while our own movements would be an open book to him. The General Board can not too strongly urge that the department's most serious thought be given to this matter, and that immediate steps be taken to remedy it, and recommends that Congress be asked for an appropriation of at least $5,000,000, to be made available immediately, for the purpose of establishing an efficient air service.

I will now take from the testimony of Capt. Bristol before the House committee, page 299, a statement which shows the equipment of other nations in respect to dirigibles and aeroplanes:

Capt. BRISTOL. At the beginning of this war our best information gave, approximately, France 22 dirigibles and 1,400 aeroplanes; Russia, 18 dirigibles and 800 aeroplanes; Great Britain, 9 dirigibles and 400 aeroplanes; Belgium, 2 dirigibles and 100 aeroplanes; Servia, 60 aeroplanes; Germany, 40 dirigibles and 1,000 aeroplanes; Austria, 8 dirigibles and 400 aeroplanes; and the United States, 23 aeroplanes.

It seems to me that this is a melancholy showing, and to be met with the answer that we have not yet been able to decide on the best possible type of aeroplane or of armored aeroplane is deplorable. The aeroplanes of Europe have been good enough to do very effective service, and surely it is better to have machines that can do something than to have no machines at all. According to the testimony of Secretary Daniels, page 711, we have a total of 77 men in the aeronautic service of the Navy. What a splendid and effective force this would be if we were attacked by a foreign fleet!

Thus I have shown, as it seems to me, in the statements just made that our national defense is not only imperfect and unbalanced but that it has grave and in some instances fatal deficiencies. I have made no allegations drawn merely from my personal beliefs. I have simply stated facts as given by official authority, and I think that those facts tell their own story. My only purpose has been to show by the facts the deficiencies in our means of national defense. I have no intention of attempting to set forth in detail the proper remedies to be applied. That must be the work of experts and of the men who devote their attention to the subject. To obtain the proper remedies we ought to have, as I have already said, a commission, or, better still, a permanent council of national defense in which the legislative and executive branches of the Government should both be represented. We should also have a general staff both in the Army and the Navy who can furnish the council of national defense and Congress with the expert knowledge necessary to reach right conclusions. Generally speaking, it is clear to my mind that the Regular Army, whether large or small, should be properly balanced and proportioned as well as thoroughly equipped. Our Army to-day is neither properly balanced, properly proportioned, nor properly equipped. No matter how small the military machine may be, and I am far from desiring a large one, it should be as nearly as possible a perfect machine. Ours is not. It is also clear that we have no reserves to draw upon for the support of the Regular Army in case of war. These reserves should be created. No one would think of suggesting either conscription or compulsory service for this purpose, but the end can be obtained without either. The volunteer camps where the men are now paying all their own expenses prove to my mind that, if the Government should pay reserve volunteers for their month's service and give them their equipment and their transportation, there would be no difficulty in obtaining them. I believe that the scheme so ably elaborated by my colleague in this direction would be entirely successful. I do not believe that virility, patriotism, and courage are so dead in the United States or so narcotized by commercialism and the talk of professional peace advocates that we could not get 500,000 young men, or five times that number, under proper conditions to make themselves fit and ready to come to the defense of the country whenever the country was attacked. What I have said of the Regular Army is true of the militia. It is unbalanced, it is insufficiently equipped, it requires the careful and liberal attention of Congress.

What I have just said of the Army is also true of the Navy. It is strong in certain directions and very weak in others. In some important particulars it has little or no equipment. It should be made as perfect and as well balanced as possible. To secure these results in both services we must have unity of action. We can not succeed in doing so if we do not establish some means of dealing with the great subject of defense as a whole. When that is done the rest will follow.

I learned in college when studying political economy that Adam Smith thought that defense was more important than opulence, that the first duty of a sovereign was the protection of the country against invasion, and that "an industrious nation and, upon that account, a wealthy nation, is, of all others, the most likely to be attacked." (Wealth of Nations, Book V, ch. 1.) These teachings, at least, I have never forgotten.

I know well that all this will cost money, but I am old-fashioned enough to believe thoroughly in the doctrine in which I was brought up as a boy, the doctrine declared by Charles Cotesworth Pinckney when we were a poor and struggling Nation, that we have "millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." I want an adequate national defense, and, speaking broadly, I care little what it costs if we can obtain it. Were it possible in the present state of human nature in the United States we could obtain this adequate national defense without additional expenditure. Cut off our needless Army posts, cut off our needless navy yards and stations. Lay aside for a few years appropriations for public buildings and river and harbor improvements where they are not needed by the public at large. Drop off all the expenditures which are designed for spots where votes are lying thickest, and you will have money enough to provide for a sufficient Army and an adequate Navy without adding to the burden of taxation. This is perhaps a counsel of perfection. I have put it forward simply to show that if Congress has the vigor of character necessary for such self-denying ordinances it can provide for our national defense out of existing revenue. But whether it does this or not, the national defense ought to be provided for, no matter what the cost. I believe this is the wish of the American people to-day, and that the intensity of their desire will increase as they become familiar with existing conditions. The American people, in my opinion, understand well that a sufficient national defense does not imply war, but is an assurance against war. They are not misled by the parrot cry that preparedness brings war. All through history there have been nations or States which have armed themselves for conquest, and their preparedness meant war because war was the object; but to say that the mere fact of readiness to defend one's self means war is absurd. It would be as reasonable to say that the Civil War in the United States came because both sides were unprepared as to assert that war comes because a nation is ready to defend itself against aggression. There is no thought of conquest in the hearts of the American people. We wish for nothing but peace at home and abroad. Every reflecting man must favor a general reduction of armaments, but there is no such incitement to war possible as for a rich and prosperous nation, whether great or small, to disarm alone and remain unarmed in the midst of an armed world. We do not want war with any nation or any people, and the way to avoid war is not to invite it. Unarmed, unready, undefended, we offer a standing invitation to aggression and attack, and the idea, still popular or used for purposes of oratory by some people, that we can meet all dangers by springing to arms when the moment comes, is a dream so wild that it would be grotesque if it were not tragic. In these days of rapid movement and swift communication what possible defense could be offered to a military machine, organized to the highest point of efficiency, by an untrained people springing to arms which they have not got? The ocean barrier which defended us in 1776 and 1812 no longer exists. Steam and electricity have destroyed it. What we should aim at is to make it plain to all the world that we seek no conquest, that we desire only peace, and that to preserve our own peace we have a defense so strong that no nation in the world could hope for aught but loss and disaster in attacking us.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, unfortunately I was not present to listen to the entire address of the Senator from Massachusetts, and he may have stated what I desire to ask him, and that is, whether he has included in his remarks a statement showing the relation which our appropriations for military and naval purposes bear to similar appropriations by the great powers of the world.

Mr. LODGE. No; I have made no comparison between our appropriations and those of other powers, but I have compared our appropriations for defense in case of the Navy with the total property of the country.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I heard that, but it was the other matter to which I referred.

Mr. LODGE. No; I have made no comparison with the appropriations of other nations.

I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 19422, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in view of the discussion had on yesterday concerning the site of the Eastern High School I have two letters which I think it is but proper should be placed in the RECORD. They are brief, and if the Senator in charge of the bill will permit me the privilege I will read the letters myself.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. The first letter is from Henry P. Blair, president of the board of education. Mr. Blair writes:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1915.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: In reading yesterday's debate in the Senate regarding the Eastern High School site two questions are suggested which I wish entirely clear for your information, particularly in view of the patient consideration which this proposition has received during the many years of agitation before the purchase was authorized.

The location selected is the nearest to present and prospective center of school population available. The sites committee, superintendent, and myself, being all the male members of the board, spent an entire half day in personal inspection of the four sites formally submitted to the commissioners, as well as land possible to be purchased within the limits of the appropriation of adequate area for this school site. A hearing two hours in length was given, at which Dr. Emmons, Capt. Potter, and Mr. S. W. Curriden strongly urged the jail site, one of the gentlemen named even urging that the erection of the school should be immediately started on ground available on the jail site between the buildings heretofore used for the male and female workhouses before the latter were removed. The sites committee gave careful and long consideration to the final choice, and the site selected was by unanimous vote when deliberations were concluded.

A more desirable location would have been to the north and west of the present site, but no sufficient unimproved area was to be found, and the value of the improved areas was far beyond the sum appropriated, if sufficient land was to be had for the proper present and prospective needs of the school. All the protests have come from organizations located in the southeastern part of the city, who either do not know or are unwilling to recognize the gradual movement of the school center of population in east Washington toward the north. With the reclamation of the Anacostia River and growth of the city the bulk of territorial area to be served will in the future lie northerly and easterly from the site selected.

It is only just to add that no member of the board owns a foot of ground within the area of the site selected, and that Mr. Larner personally was inclined at first toward another site, but yielded his judgment in the matter to the views of the majority of the committee and united in the unanimous selection. It is possible that he is a trustee under some deed of trust securing money loaned on property within the area of the squares selected, although I have not had time to have the records examined. If the fact be so, it would give no substantial interest to him in the selection of the site, as all loans by our trust companies are carefully margined at 60 per cent or less of the market value of the property used as security. It would not represent in the usual course of business any personal investment, and does not in this instance, as Mr. Larner has informed me, nor has he any personal interest in any property in the eastern section of the city.

Your personal kindness to me is deeply appreciated, as well as the genuine sympathetic interest which Senator SMITH has shown in this important project.

Sincerely, yours,

HENRY P. BLAIR.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I understand Mr. Blair is the president of the board of education.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is the president of the board of education.

A moment ago a letter from Mr. Larner was handed to me at my desk. It reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1915.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: Mr. Henry P. Blair has called my attention to certain statements which were made on the floor of the Senate in reference to the property selected by the board of education and the District Commissioners as a site for the new Eastern High School. He has also called my attention to a statement which was made, which is in effect that I was either interested personally or as trustee in certain lots located within the boundaries of the squares selected for this building.

My purpose in writing you is to say that I have no personal interest in any property located within the lines of this site or any personal interest whatever in any properties located in that immediate section of the city. I wish also to say that I have no knowledge of any property within the boundaries aforesaid being in my name as trustee of any character.

When the matter was first mentioned to me I thought it was possible that I might be a trustee under a deed of trust to secure a loan to the Washington Loan & Trust Co., for which company I am counsel and for which I have frequently acted under deeds of trust to secure loans. In order to verify this matter I have caused the real estate officer of the Washington Loan & Trust Co. to investigate the books of the company, that he might find if that institution had any money loaned upon properties embraced within the proposed site. I am just now informed that the Washington Loan & Trust Co. has at this time no loans upon any property within those squares.

The statement, therefore, that I am interested as a trustee for the Washington Loan & Trust Co. or that the trust company has loans upon lots in these blocks appears to be untrue.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN B. LARNER.

Mr. President, this illustrates how easy it is for a rumor to be started or for an accusation to be made which appears in our debates in the Senate, but which has no foundation in fact.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is there any amendment pending? I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending, on which the Chair does not know whether the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is going to withdraw his point of order or not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Brady	Gallinger	Norris	Simmons
Brandegee	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bryan	Hollis	Oliver	Sterling
Burleigh	Hughes	Overman	Stone
Burton	James	Owen	Thomas
Camden	Johnson	Page	Thornton
Chamberlain	Jones	Perkins	Tillman
Chilton	Kenyon	Pittman	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Poindexter	Vardaman
Colt	La Follette	Pomerene	White
Culberson	Lane	Reed	Williams
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Shafroth
du Pont	Lippitt	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have just come into the Senate Chamber. I am informed that the matter immediately pending is the point of order I made, just on the eve of adjournment yesterday, against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will say that I personally have no objection to the amendment itself, and I will withdraw my point of order, if I may, and will not object to the amendment being voted upon with the understanding, and I state it in that form, that it is done by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The motion of Mr. SHEPPARD to agree to the report of the Committee on Rules as made by Mr. OVERMAN, January 12, 1915, to suspend paragraph 3, of Rule XVI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to discuss this motion, if in order now.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas if he is willing to lay it aside temporarily until we dispose of the other amendments? I have one to offer, and, as far as I know, that is the only amendment yet to be offered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am entirely willing to lay it aside for the remaining amendments to be considered.

Mr. LANE. I have one amendment to offer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator will ask unanimous consent, I shall not object to laying aside the motion temporarily.

Mr. POMERENE. As the amendment pending is the one introduced by myself——

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I object to laying aside the motion. We might just as well decide it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry. I notice the report of the committee refers to the consideration of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas and all amendments thereto. I make the inquiry as to whether the report as phrased would permit amendments in case the Senate should agree to the consideration thereof under the report of the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can be no doubt about the state of the record. The Senator from Texas gave notice, and had it referred subsequently to the Committee on Rules, of a motion to suspend the rule of the Senate which provides that no amendment proposing general legislation shall be presented to an appropriation bill. That is not the exact language but the substance of it. The Committee on Rules reported favorably that the rule should be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Texas to present an amendment involving general legislation to an appropriation bill. A point of order was then raised as to whether the rule could be set aside by a majority or whether it took two-thirds of the Senate to temporarily suspend it. The Chair referred that point of order to the Senate. The Senate decided that it takes a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules.

There is nothing before the Senate except to vote upon the question as to whether the rule will be suspended. If carried by a two-thirds vote, the rule is suspended. Thereupon the Senator from Texas can present his amendment, and that amendment, like all other amendments, is subject to further amendment at the instance of any Senator.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It is clearly understood that the amendment of the Senator from Texas, if coming before the Senate, would be subject to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has tried to so state.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I wish to have it clearly understood that in the event I should vote to support the committee's report and to bring the amendment of the Senator from Texas before the Senate, I would do so with the expectation of being able to sustain or support other amendments, including among them a referendum to the people of the community to be affected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to submit a few remarks on this subject. I shall not detain the Senate very long.

Nearly 13 years ago Congress prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors in this Capitol Building. Its action met with universal applause, and to-day there is no suggestion from any quarter for a return to the old practice. The extension of that prohibition to the capital city and the capital district would meet with equal applause, and after so proper, so logical, and so humanitarian a step shall have been taken not a whisper will arise for its reversal.

The District of Columbia is peculiarly the property of the Nation. It is the ambition of all American citizens to make Washington the model city of the world. How shameful it must appear to them that within their Capital City, a city that should be the head and front of all that is pure and decent and ennobling, there are 300 saloons, or 1 to about every 233 adult males. A convivial individual a few years ago on leaving the Capitol met a tourist near the Capitol steps. The tourist accosted him and said, "Mister, how far is it from the Capitol to the White House?" "Stranger," replied the individual questioned, "it is 17 blocks and 26 saloons."

It is said that the Nation has no right to impose prohibition on the District of Columbia. What peculiar virtue does the liquor traffic possess that its abolition must be made the subject of a referendum when every other question is within the absolute control of Congress? The people of this Republic pay for the expense of maintaining the District of Columbia, of educating the children, of paving the streets, of supporting the courts, the hospitals, the jails. Besides, they have a patriotic interest in making it the Nation's pride.

Internal conditions here are not local in the sense that they are local in any self-governing Commonwealth in the Union. The Federal District was created for the especial purpose of Federal control, and the people who live here came to the District with that understanding; they live here to-day with that understanding.

The idea of a referendum was a mere second thought, and a poor second thought at that. It did not occur to its proponents when I introduced the motion to suspend the rules last Monday. They thought it would never see the light of day. It did not occur to them to propose a referendum when the next day my motion was referred to the Committee on Rules. They thought it would be consigned there to the senatorial potter's field. But when the Committee on Rules reported the motion out with a haste that violated the senatorial speed limit it then suddenly occurred to these gentlemen who are opposed to the motion that the citizens of the District of Columbia are possessed of some rights. It was only when they were brought face to face with the fact that the liquor traffic was threatened with extermination in the District of Columbia that they became so aroused along the line of self-government in the District. They then engineered a movement by which the Senate determined that my motion would require a two-thirds vote—a direct and inexcusable violation, in my opinion, of the plain import of the rule I had invoked. These gentlemen are loudly protesting their loyalty to the idea of a referendum, yet not one of them is in favor of referring the Nation-wide prohibition amendment to the States of this Union for decision, despite the fact that the States are the constitutional tribunal with exclusive authority for this purpose.

When it is in the interest of the liquor traffic to have a referendum they want a referendum. When it is not in the interest of the liquor traffic to have a referendum they do not want it. They are against a referendum for the Nation-wide amendment, although the Nation-wide amendment in itself invokes one of the highest rights the States of this Union possess, namely, the right to mold the character of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. President, the traffic in alcoholic liquor is a trade in the most seductive and powerful poison that men to their sorrow have ever known. Louis Pasteur, one of the foremost of all scientists, a man who achieved an everlasting reputation through his investigations into the character of ferments, has this to say:

> Another equally exceptional characteristic of yeast and fermentation in general consists in the small proportion which the yeast that forms bears to the sugar that decomposes. In all other known beings the weight of nutritive matter assimilated corresponds with the weight of food used up, any difference that may exist being comparatively small. The life of yeast is entirely different. For a certain weight of yeast formed we may have ten times, twenty times, a hundred times as much sugar, or even more, decomposed, as we shall experimentally prove by and by; that is to say, that whilst the proportion varies in a precise manner, according to conditions which we shall have occasion to specify, it is also greatly out of proportion to the weight of the yeast. We repeat, the life of no other being under its normal physiological conditions can show anything similar. The alcoholic ferments, therefore, present themselves to us as plants which possess at least two singular properties: They can live without air—that is, without oxygen—and they can cause decomposition to an amount which, though variable, yet, as estimated by weight of product formed, is out of all proportion to the weight of their own substance.

Thus, Mr. President, this substance, this organism, is the only one that in return for nutriment produces decomposition and that in return for the means of life gives death. As its origin is in one of the most intense rotting processes known to organic life, so it rots everything with which it comes in contact. Its chief mission is to wreck and to damn. It enslaves body, mind, and soul. Its hold is so pitiless and so complete that few of its victims ever escape.

The loss to society, economic and moral, from the ravages of this drug is such that the only effective measures are preventive ones. The hereditary alcoholic taint transmitted from even moderate drinkers to children still unborn, condemning many of them to deformity, to lunacy, to epilepsy, to blindness, to disease, to the fatal appetities of their fathers, to children who are thus deprived of the right of normal birth, forms an additional reason for the extermination of the traffic.

Already the drink bill of the Nation is reaching a yearly total of $2,500,000,000, more than half the cost to the United States of the entire Civil War. The Republic can not endure with this cancer in its vitals.

Chauncey M. Depew, the eloquent and able octogenarian, a man who at the age of 80 retains his brilliant intellectual powers, delivered a speech within the last few months at Ossining, N. Y., celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of that place. He was giving reminiscences of his early days, and he had this to say incidentally:

When I first ran for the lower house of our New York Legislature 52 years ago, I was told that unless I secured the support of one of your most active citizens, an eccentric and successful man, I could not be elected. I addressed a meeting in the public square, and afterwards this gentleman insisted upon adjourning to the American House for refreshments. At that time temperance was unknown. It was an insult to refuse a drink. Most of the public men whom I met in the legislature died from alcoholism.

This was an incidental but vivid revelation of the havoc this poison has been wreaking. Men say that their personal liberty will be interfered with by the prohibition of intoxicating liquors. I tell you that your personal liberty is subject to the right of society to abolish a traffic which is the chief source of poverty and of crime. The good of the thousands this traffic transforms into murderers, thieves, lunatics, paupers, beasts, is superior to your right to walk into a saloon, lean upon a mahogany bar, and solemnly discuss your personal liberty.

You say you can not legislate morality into men. That is true; but it is also true that you can legislate certain concrete temptations out of the pathway of humanity. The removal of saloons will put intoxicating liquor beyond the reach of millions, to their lasting redemption and the redemption of society.

You talk about the right to drink alcoholic poison. The railroad companies do not recognize such a right. An employee who is known to drink or to frequent a saloon will be immediately dismissed. Great steel plants deny such a right. In many of them employees are warned against drink and dismissed if they are found to drink. The surety companies, in ascertaining the standing of those for whom they are asked to be responsible, always make the inquiry, Is he addicted to drink?

In fact, Mr. President, the whole world is going dry. The business world is going dry in so far as the requisites for employment are concerned. Certainly prohibition would be a logical step for our Government to adopt as to our Capital City, where the business of the Nation is principally transacted.

Preventive measures are now the order of the day. Society is beginning to see the folly of maintaining hospitals and jails and penitentiaries on the one hand and tolerating a traffic that fills them on the other.

We are beginning to see that we must go to the source of evils if we would avoid wrestling forever with their sinister results.

This amendment is merely a step in the sanitation of the Capital City. The saloon must follow the disreputable alley.

Mr. President, Gladstone said that the evils of drunkenness outweighed the evils of war, pestilence, and famine put together.

Lincoln said that after the destruction of slavery the next great problem would be the destruction of the liquor traffic, and he said he would hail that day the happiest of history when there should be neither slave nor drunkard in the world.

The man who to-day votes against the abolition of the liquor traffic in the Capital City is not voting as Abraham Lincoln would vote. In fact, he will repudiate Lincoln's memory.

Russia has already abolished the sale of vodka through its vast dominions, and the results are most gratifying. They are reflected already in the increased happiness, health, and prosperity of its people.

The Senate will put itself in touch with the highest and noblest sentiment of the age by the adoption of this amendment. It will make this Capital what it should be—a model and a light for all the world. The American people have a right to say that the liquor traffic shall not exist within their Capital. It is an insult to the Nation and a reproach to the flag. The Senate will win the approval of the Republic and of the most enlightened sentiment of the globe when it expels this curse from the Federal District.

Senators, if the mothers of this Republic could vote to-day, they would vote to expel the liquor traffic from the Capital of the Nation. If the mothers of the District could vote to-day, they would vote to drive this evil from the Capital City. Will you listen to their prayers?

The bravest battle that ever was fought,
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you'll find it not;
'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot,
With sword or nobler pen;
Nay, not with eloquent words or thought,
From mouths of wonderful men.

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart—
Of woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo! there was the battle field.

No marshaling troop, no bivouac song,
No banners to gleam and wave;
But oh! these battles, they last so long,
From babyhood to the grave.

Yet faithful still as a bridge of stars,
She fights in her walled-up town—
Fights on and in the endless wars,
Then silent, unseen—goes down.

Oh, ye with banners and battle shot,
And soldiers to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
Were fought in these silent ways.

Oh, spotless woman in a world of shame!
With a splendid and silent scorn,
Go back to God as white as you came,
The kingliest warrior born.

All that we ask now is that you permit us to vote upon this great question. Every rule of the Senate has been strictly followed. The requisite motion has been made, and under your construction it now requires a two-thirds vote to determine whether the Senate may in connection with the pending bill vote to purge the National Capital of one of the most infamous businesses that ever disgraced the world. What will your answer be?

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, when this question arose in the Senate I said that while I would vote to take up for consideration the report of the Committee on Rules, I would vote against the adoption of the report for reasons I would give later.

I am opposed to the adoption of the report of the committee because I think that paragraph 3 of Rule XVI of the standing rules of the Senate is a most excellent rule to conserve the proper consideration of bills of that nature pending in the Senate, its object, expressed in general terms, being to prevent the injection of foreign matter into the bill being considered.

If I had been a member of the committee, I would have felt compelled to vote against the temporary abrogation of the rule, because I think it very bad policy to suspend it in order to assist in the passage of any measure, however meritorious it might be considered by some or even by a majority of the Senate, because if done in one instance it could and should be done in others, while I think it should never be done in any case, but the rule be preserved inviolate for the general good of legislative procedure and of legislation itself, believing that all measures should be presented through the regular and proper methods of procedure and decided on their own merits.

For these reasons, and for these only, I shall vote against the adoption of the report; but my vote on this question is not necessarily an index to my vote on the amendment itself if the Senate adopts the report of the Committee on Rules.

PROHIBITION.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, since I have been a Member of this body I can not recall at this moment a measure which has been considered by it that I regard of as much moment to the American people as this. It involves the happiness and prosperity of the living and the well-being both of body and soul of posterity. It is a question of the highest privilege to humanity. As to the anxiety expressed by Senators on the question of suspending a rule or changing a rule—the importance of holding the rules inviolate, I confess that I am unable to understand and appreciate just what they mean, or to apprehend what harm is to grow out of this proposed suspension of the rule.

The rules of the Senate are the instruments of the Senate. It was never intended that the Senate should be the creature of, or subordinate to its rules. Whenever it becomes necessary in order to facilitate the business of Congress a mere rule should not stand in the way, if in the judgment of a majority of the body the thing under consideration should be done. I repeat, this rule worship is a form of fetishism that I can not comprehend. Now, I would not approve or raise my voice in support of a measure that would take away from any American citizen a right vouchsafed to him or her by the Constitution.

I believe in liberty of action. I believe a man should be permitted to follow out, in the performance of the functions of citizenship and the private affairs of life, the processes of his own mind, and after he shall have reached a conclusion I believe it is his duty to express that conclusion, or if not, to live by it, at any rate. Nor would I permit one in the performance of his duty as a citizen to trench in any way upon the rights of somebody else.

There is nothing of that character in the proposition which the Senate is called upon this afternoon to consider. The question is whether or not the saloon is to be permitted in the District of Columbia, whether or not it is best for the people. It would not be out of place to consider also in this connection the effect of such an act in creating public sentiment throughout the Nation and the world.

Now, let us consider the observation and experiences of other nations as well as our own people with reference to this evil. The public mind is alert and the public conscience is aroused to the dangers to society involved in this damnable traffic. That it is an evil no well-ordered mind will deny. I read from an article in the Technical World Magazine for January, 1915. Senators, it is well worth your while to weigh the facts set out in this paper.

At a blow the autocrat of all the Russias, Czar Nicholas, has liberated 150,000,000 people. He has done for his people what the free-born American citizens have been unable to do for themselves. It is a new freedom that has come to Russia—a kind of freedom that the world has never before seen; the Czar's edict has liberated his subjects from the oppression of alcohol.

As by magic, drunkenness has vanished from the Empire and the $1,000,000,000 annually spent for intoxicating drinks will be diverted to other purposes. It has been a comparatively easy thing for Russia to do this, because the manufacture of strong liquors is a Government monopoly. For many years our National Government has been assailed by the friends of prohibition for its attitude on the liquor question. They have, first of all, demanded that the Government cease levying revenue on intoxicating liquors; and, secondly, that the manufacture and sale of such liquors be stopped within the boundaries of the United States; but little progress seems to have been made in this direction.

If America becomes liquor-free in the next generation, as some industrial leaders predict, it will probably be because of the drastic action of our industries, which can not stand by and see large possible profits swallowed up by alcoholism.

Of course we all know that railroads have long maintained strict rules in regard to drinking among employees, but do we know that within the last few years practically every great industry in the country has established similar rules?

Drinking will now spell prompt dismissal for you if you are an employee of the Hershey Chocolate Co., International Harvester Co., Sherwin-Williams Co., Sheffield Car Works, United States Steel Corporation, Western Electric Co., Pullman Co., Edison Co., Western Union, Interborough Co., Standard Oil Co., or any one of a thousand other American firms of the first rank.

Sears, Roebuck & Co. forbid employees entering a saloon at any hour of the day within a mile of their plant in any direction.

Dalzell Bros. Co. declare that "as the State insurance rate is affected by the number of accidents, we are determined not to place ourselves liable to an increased rate," and they accordingly rule that promotions shall go to total abstainers only.

Thick and fast during the present year industries have been lining up in the efficiency campaign against the common enemy, "booze."

On March 27, 1914, a sweeping order was issued by the United States Steel Mills, covering the entire Mahoning Valley, to the effect that hereafter all promotions would be made only from the ranks of those who do not indulge in the use of intoxicating drinks.

Last spring a local-option election was held in the "dry town" of Three Rivers, Mich. The big industry of the town is the Sheffield Car Works. The management of these works issued a circular letter to the many thousand workmen advising them that if they signed wet petitions they would by that act be placing themselves in opposition to the interests of the company.

Yes, and only a few months ago the great steel works at Homestead, Pa., employing 12,000 men, decreed that not only would drinking be prohibited during working hours, but that even the slightest intemperance while off duty would be cause for immediate discharge.

Recently the Philadelphia Quartz Co. conducted a pledge campaign among its employees. The men were offered a 10 per cent increase if they would pledge themselves not to use liquor nor to frequent places where it was sold or used. Practically all of the men made the promise.

This magazine could be crammed to the covers with similar instances of the strong front industry has assumed against alcohol during the last two years.

The sentiment of the executives of industry is pretty well summed up in the pointed statement of Andrew Carnegie:

"There is no use wasting time on any young man who drinks liquor, no matter how exceptional his talents."

And note this: C. L. Close, manager of the famous Bureau of Safety of the United States Steel Corporation, a man who knows the social side of industry as few men do, declares his opinion that in 10 years, through the combined effort of American industries, the manufacture and sale of liquors will be at an end in the United States.

What does it all mean? Have our industrial leaders been caught up in the swirl of religious revival? Has a moral renaissance begun to climb up through the hearts of our captains of industry?

Not a bit of it! They are as disinterestedly interested in the almighty dollar as they ever were, but their eyes have been opened. They see dollars, thousands, millions of them, slipping away, and they are going to stop the leak or know the reason why.

And here is the leak—exposed unmistakably by the laboratory experiments of Dr. Emil Kraepelin, of the University of Munich.

With the ergograph, a little instrument for measuring the weight-lifting strength of workers, Dr. Kraepelin found that on days when the alcoholic equivalent of a good glass of Bordeaux was taken, the amount of work done by the subjects was decreased by from 7 to 9 per cent.

A number of accountants were given daily, in divided doses, the equivalent of three and a half cups of claret. After two weeks of this steady, moderate alcoholic allowance, their average ability to add one-figure columns had decreased 15.3 per cent.

Four typesetters, each drinking daily three-quarters of a tumbler of Greek wine (18 per cent alcohol), lost an average of 9.6 per cent in efficiency by the end of one week.

In coordination tests, where the subject was required to snap down a telegraphic switch at the unexpected flash of a light or sound of a gong, the rapidity of the coordinating responses was decreased by liquor from 6 to 8.3 per cent.

Tests by other scientists tell the same story.

Prof. Durig, an expert mountain climber, found that on days when he took two glasses of beer his instruments showed that he expended 15 per cent more energy than on the days when he did not drink, and that it took him 21.7 per cent longer to reach the top of a mountain.

In many industries employees do but a single small piece of work, repeating the same motions, using the same muscles, over and over all day long. Tests of Swedish marksmanship illustrated the effects of alcohol upon endurance in such repetition work. Upon the alcoholic days the soldiers averaged only 3 hits out of 30 shots, while on their abstinent days they averaged 23 to 26 hits out of 30. It is significant that they thought they were shooting better after they drank!

Lord Kitchener pleaded with the friends of the British recruits as they started for the front not to "treat" them to liquor. With the declaration of hostilities, Czar Nicholas issued his now famous ukase, which ended, once and for all, the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor by the Russian Government. Writes Prof. Thomas C. Hall, of the Union Theological Seminary, who was appointed Roosevelt professor at the University of Berlin for the year 1915–16: "With the first proclamation of war all drinking in the German Army was ordered stopped at once." Assuredly, the war lords have discovered that an efficient army is a sober one.

If an office worker takes only so much as one glass of beer daily, he decreases his efficiency 7 per cent, according to experiments of Bergman, Kraepelin, Mayer, and Kinz.

The drinking man can not stand heat or cold as well, remember as well, smell as well, see or hear as well as the nondrinking man. Such is the finding of experiments performed by Prof. Kraepelin, Prof. Frolich, Dr. Ridge, of England, and Prof. Vogt, of the University of Christiania.

So much for the verdict of the laboratory. Now, what has been the actual experience of industries? Have they noticed any practical, workaday difference in the efficiency of alcoholic and nonalcoholic workmen?

Here is one instance. The manager of a copper mine at Knockmahom, Germany, was convinced that his output would increase if his men quit drinking. He induced 1,000 of them to take the pledge. He was delighted to find, after two years, that their productive efficiency had increased nearly $25,000 annually.

Coming nearer home: President Wilborn, of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., makes this striking statement in regard to the closing of saloons in the Colorado mining districts:

"With the advent of the Federal troops all saloons in the coal-mining districts were closed, and as a result the efficiency of the workmen has greatly improved, the average production of coal per man increasing about 10 per cent.

"The production at this company's mines in the southern district of Colorado for the first 18 days of April averaged 5.85 tons per day for each miner at work. That was before the Federal troops closed the saloons. For the first 18 days of June, with all saloons closed, each man produced 6.52 tons, which meant an average increase in wages of more than 11 per cent per man.

"This has confirmed the view long held by us, that if saloons and drinking could be eliminated from the coal districts not only the miners but the companies would be greatly benefited.

"What I have said applies specifically to the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., but I think in a general way it is true of the coal-mining industry in the State."

Spoiled work is no small part of the loss which drink lays upon industry. A workman in one of the Coatesville steel mills declares that when the saloons were open it was not unusual for 20 to 40 tons of steel to be spoiled in the rolling following pay days. Thus the earnings of every tonnage man in the mill were reduced because of the half-drunken condition of some of the men. "But, with the closing of the saloons," he adds, "that's all history now."

There is evidence that a shorter working day, permitting workers to stop before the physical limit of fatigue has been reached, results in a falling off of the desire to indulge in intoxicants.

Boyd Fisher, vice president of a club of Detroit executives, says:

"A good many Detroit employers are wise enough to see that in a large number of cases excessive drinking is a direct result of too long hours at monotonous work. Wherever they have shortened the working hours they have minimized drinking and secured a compensating increase in output."

The Burroughs Adding Machine Co. is a case in point. This firm shortened the working day from nine and one-half hours to eight hours. A noticeable decrease in drinking followed, and a slight increase in the output per man.

A thorn in the side of industry has been the proverbially meager output of Monday. Industrialists are now discovering that if there is no drinking on Saturday and Sunday there is no falling off of output on Monday.

"Blue Monday in the industries of Kokomo is a thing of the past," says J. E. Frederick, of the Kokomo Steel & Iron Co. Kokomo, Ind., is a city without saloons. "On Monday our factories are able to secure the same output as on any other day of the week. This was not the case when saloons were running."

"Monday has stepped up with the other days of the week," say a manufacturer in Buckhannon, W. Va.

"Manufacturers have no off days now in Kansas" says the Thomas Page Milling Co., of North Topeka. "The men are just as fresh at the beginning of the week as at the close."

So it goes. From 50 different angles industry is to-day looking critically and cynically at the results of alcohol.

Do you wonder, then, that most of the money for the campaign which made West Virginia dry was contributed by labor-employing industries in the State? West Virginia abounds in coal, lumber, oil, and gas industries. These were, almost to a unit, active workers for State-wide prohibition.

Judge J. C. McWhorter, who had charge of the campaign, says: "While I was helping to raise funds for our constitutional prohibition campaign a brewer from another State who had no liquor business in West Virginia, but who had thousands of dollars invested in certain other industries in the State, sent me his check for $250 to help make West Virginia dry, because he knew what liquor was doing to his men and his business."

What the industries within the Nation have learned the Nation itself is learning. Abstinence is becoming the enforced rule of national engineering projects. The way Col. Gorgas obtained increased efficiency by reducing alcoholism among his canal builders is interesting in this connection.

He writes, in a paper published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, June 13:

"On the Isthmus we had our laboring force located on the line of the canal, about 50 miles in extent. In this distance we had about 20 towns. At first we allowed as many liquor establishments as chose to pay the high license—$1,200 per year. As time went on we gradually abolished saloons in town after town until last year liquor selling was finally abolished in all the zone.

"The two Panama towns of Colon and Panama, at the northern and southern ends of the canal, are not under the jurisdiction of the commission so far as regards liquor selling. There is no restriction on an employee going to these towns and getting liquor when he wishes and bringing it into the zone to his own home. The only prohibition is that it must not be sold in the zone; but to get liquor he has to make a longer or shorter railroad trip and go to considerable effort. Our experience has shown that there are a considerable number of men who do not care enough for liquor to make the effort, and therefore do without.

"The efficiency of our working force has increased so much that generally the men in charge of the laborers in the different districts have asked to have their districts included within the prohibition area."

Another big national business, known as the American Navy, has also learned the alcoholism-efficiency lesson. On July 1, 1914, the order went into effect prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating beverages into the ships of the Navy, the naval stations, and all points under the jurisdiction of the Navy.

It is not commonly known that one of the chief considerations which startled Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels into this action was the fact, revealed by the medical inspector of the United States Navy, that there were nearly ten times as many admissions to the hospital for alcoholism in the American Navy as in the British Navy, and nearly fifty times as many in the Germany Navy! If alcohol was sending so many men to the hospital, it was undoubtedly rendering inefficient a still larger number of men who did not get as far as the hospital. Alcohol, in the name of efficiency, was banned.

Four years ago, long before this action was considered, Germany's far-seeing Kaiser, in a great speech to his naval cadets, urged them to form total-abstinence societies as the British had done.

"Naval service demands a height of effort which it is hardly possible to surpass," said the Kaiser. "It is necessary that you be able to endure continued heavy strain without exhaustion, in order to be fresh for emergencies.

"In the next great war nerve power will decide the victory. Victory will lie with the nation that uses the smallest amount of alcohol."

The verdicts of the laboratory, of industry, and of the Nation against alcohol are the same. Because it is a breeder of inefficiency, it must go. And in America, at least, the prospect is that it will be driven out by hard-hearted, firm-fisted industry. The great god industry cares not a rap for the moral or social phases of the drink question, although the big men who are his directing forces may be industrially greatly concerned. Alcohol might trample on the garments of morality and social relations until doomsday and it would not worry industry as such; but when alcohol begins to tease and harass the great god's pet mascot—efficiency—that is quite another matter. Drastic measures must be taken.

Already the American Foundrymen's Association has appointed a well-financed committee to campaign in every State for legislation to push back the saloon from the doorways of industrial plants. That will not satisfy industry. At the end of five years, probably, every great business will have united its forces against alcohol; and who knows but that at the end of 10 years the prediction of C. L. Close will have been realized and industry will have banished the manufacture and sale of liquor from the United States?

Apparently it does not matter very much whether we want this to happen or not. If industry wants it, it will come to pass. The best thing we can do is to hope that, when that added six billion saved by efficiency is divided, we may come in for a share.

Who will undertake to answer the eloquent arguments which the facts that I have just read present in behalf of prohibition? Who is bold and brazen enough to appear as apologist for the liquor traffic? Who will have the effrontery to stand up in the light of eternal truth and in defiance of the moral sentiment of the world defend this infinite iniquity? If the great captains of industry have discovered that even the moderate use of intoxicating liquors is so harmful, so hurtful to the brain and the body of the individual, by what process of reasoning can the officers of the Government and representatives of the people—the lawmaking body of this Republic—justify the continuance of the traffic in this deadly drug? Will Democratic Senators be justified in voting to perpetuate the traffic in order that it might win votes for the Democratic Party? Has the Democratic Party fallen so low or gotten in such desperate straits that it must depend upon the influence of the saloon to keep it in power? God of nations, save us from the humiliation of such a thought. Mr. President, no political party depending upon that influence for supremacy can be of service to the Nation very long.

The stream can not rise above its source. If the source be impure, that same impurity will characterize the entire course of the stream. I love the Democratic Party, its history, and traditions. I believe the underlying principles upon which it rests are indispensible to the fulfillment of the purposes of the founders of this Government and the permanency of our institutions; but rather than have the Democratic Party depend upon the influence of the saloon for victory I would prefer to see it pass to honorable and harmless oblivion.

But some gentlemen have announced the strange doctrine that the Government is under a moral obligation not to prohibit traffic in intoxicating liquors because it would affect vested pecuniary interests. The brewers, the distillers, and the wine makers, they maintain, have enormous sums of money invested, for which they have a right to demand of the Government protection. That is an old argument. That is the doctrine of Cain—a doctrine so conclusively and completely condemned by the lessons taught by the Nazarene—in such shameful violation of the spirit of the Golden Rule, that it has no place in the economy of this Republic.

To the malign influence of such a theory are traceable the overthrow of republics, the dissolution of empires, and the absolute obliteration of civilizations. Mr. President, the love of money is the root of all evil, and it is a root which grows deep and permeates the soil of human nature. It has been the case in all the ages of the world, however, and among all the peoples of the earth. Some few men of the present are great enough to resist its sordid and debauching influences, but there are very few. Too often the dollar is the standard of excellency and the accumulation of money the measure of success. Conditions at the beginning of the twentieth century—the hopes and aspirations of men—are to a certain extent the same that they were in other days and among other peoples at some period in their history.

Human nature does not change. It is the same to-day that it was when the peripatetic philosopher taught his hungry-eared pupils beneath the classic shades of ancient Greece. It is the same to-day that it was when Confucius startled a world with his benign philosophy. It has not changed a particle since the Pharaohs ruled in Egypt. The only difference is environment and opportunity. Scan carefully the pages of the histories of ancient Greece and Rome and you will find a prototype or precedent for almost any and every thing that appears in our modern civilization.

At this moment there comes to me in all of its vividness the picture painted by Oliver Goldsmith:

> But, scarce observed, the knowing and the bold
> Fall in the general massacre of gold;
> Wide-wasting pest; that rages unconfined;
> And crowds with crimes the records of mankind;
> For gold his sword the hireling ruffian draws,
> For gold the hireling judge distorts the laws;
> Wealth heaped on wealth nor truth nor safety buys,
> The dangers gather as the treasures rise.

Gold has become the god and commerce the religion, I am sorry to say, with a large class of the people of this Republic. I have often thought of the effect of accumulated wealth upon the characters and natures of men, and I have also observed its effect upon the earth in which the gold is found. Some years ago I visited the rich gold fields of Cripple Creek, Colo., and after ascending the rugged, barren, rocky mountains and going down into the dark, rock-ribbed pit, where men suffer and sacrifice, toil, and die in search of the precious metal, I thought of the effect of hoarded gold upon the human soul. There was not a beautiful flower to be seen in all the landscape, no waving grass, no luxuriant vegetation, no umbrageous trees that spread their giant arms and afford the weary traveler the refreshing shade, no soft and gentle zephyrs to cool the fevered cheek of the wayfarer or waft the perfume of the rose which delight the heart of man. There was nothing but rocks—barren, cold, conscienceless rocks. Down into the dark recess, in the cruel grasp of this granite, the precious metal lay. It requires the most desperate work and painful search to find it, and when it is found the use of dynamite and other powerful explosives is employed to release it from the relentless, avaricious grasp of the gray flint. And after it is gotten out it must be ground, burned, and melted before it is fit for the use of man. And so is its influences upon him who gives his life for its accumulation. Years of toil, sacrifice, and self-abnegation are devoted to its acquisition, and when acquired in great quantities it usually leaves the heart barren of the fragrance of love, the aroma of friendship, and devoid altogether of the true spirit of altruism. There are no cooling shades of charity in the garden of the heart—there is none of the fragrance of affection where the weak and helpless may go for succor and rest. Cold, conscienceless, selfish, stingy, bereft of all the nobler virtues which glorify the life of one "who loves his fellow man," a heart as hard as the rock in which the gold is found and as remorseless as the granite which grasps it with the grip of death away down in the bowels of the earth.

Mr. President, the end of all government should be the benefit of humanity—for the uplift of mankind, and every law which is devoid of that spirit and purpose is a reproach to the men who breathe into it the breath of life. The saloon is indefensible. It is a social cancer, an economic blight. Somebody has truthfully and forcefully said of the saloon bar. It is—

A bar to heaven, a door to hell—
Whoever named it named it well!
A bar to manliness and wealth,
A door to want and broken health.
A bar to honor, pride, and fame,
A door to sin and grief and shame;
A bar to hope, a bar to prayer,
A door to darkness and despair.
A bar to honored, useful life,
A door to brawling, senseless strife;
A bar to all that's true and brave,
A door to every drunkard's grave.
A bar to joy that home imparts,
A door to tears and aching hearts;
A bar to heaven, a door to hell—
Whoever named it, named it well!

Mr. President, if I were called upon at this moment to name the one thing that has wrought the most harm in the world, blighted more lives, frustrated more ambitions, caused more scalding tears to fall from the eyes of woman than all the other agencies of evil combined, I should say the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors. Whisky taken immoderately is hurtful physically, financially, mentally, and morally. As an evil it is without a mitigating incident. It is the one deadly drug in which the jewels of the heart's best love are dissolved and poured into the mouths of men to madden the brain and destroy the soul.

I have observed its ravages. I have seen the destruction of character; I have seen the happy home, musical with the laughter of children, warm with the atmosphere of love and contentment, changed to a place of sorrow and shame. I once had a young friend who was almost as great a genius as Byron or Prentiss. I knew him in the morning of life; the pulses of youthful spring bounded in his veins; hope sprang eternal in his breast. Life to him was a glorious prospect. He lived in a world of promise. At an unguarded moment he entered the saloon, drawn there by the siren song of temptation. The first drop of the seductive drug that passed his lips fired the latent appetite, which probably was the uncoveted legacy from indiscreet ancestors. He went back again, and again, and again until the love for the accursed stuff had become a gnawing disease against which his imperious will was absolutely helpless. I saw the sparkle in his youthful, manly, intellectual eye turned to the stupid, leaden gaze of the inebriate. I saw the sun of hope and happiness go behind the cloud of dissipation and death ere it reached the meridian; and I said the cause that wrought this man's downfall society ought to remove. Anything that encourages excessive drinking and leads to this unhappy end is an enemy to society and ought to be exterminated. I maintain that the most valuable thing beneath the stars is a human being, and I know that the highest end of government is the development and improvement of man. If the man be improved the government will share of his improvement and the moral sentiment will write the laws of the land.

I have heard a thousand arguments in favor of closing the saloons, but I have never heard a decent suggestion in favor of keeping them open. The influence of the saloon is pernicious in politics. The soul-quenched, brain-soaked, body-distorted habitues of these dens of iniquity, with eyes like frostbitten plums and noses like frozen tomatoes, with the story of a life of crime and dissipation written in those mysterious hieroglyphics upon their besotted faces—these men are easy victims of the ward rounder and political bribe giver. They hold the love of drink and lawless power above the interests of their country. Oh, it is hurtful to the church; it destroys the happy home; it fills the jails with criminals, the asylums with lunatics, and the world with idiots and paupers. Verily it is a Circean vortex, from whose voluptuous whirl come human swine to scatter seeds of sin and death, from which shall surely spring the tares of biting sorrow.

Mr. President, a glorious opportunity is presented to the Senate and House of Representatives to drive this evil from the Capital City of the Nation, to make it a city set upon a hill, the cynosure of all eyes that look for righteousness in government—a glorious example for the emulation of the municipalities of this Republic. Washington should be the model city government of America; its parks and statuary should be so splendid in all their arrangements as to meet the approval of the most esthetic taste; its streets and architecture should conform to the most substantial and enduring type; its laws should be justice applied in its purest and best form. In a word, Mr. President, it should be a city in all of its appointments which would body forth the highest thought and best purposes in government. The opportunity is at hand for this Congress to achieve this great work—to honor itself—and after it shall be done let us not forget that we shall have rendered a service to humanity, which, after all, is the most acceptable service to God.

I agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that it is only a question of a short time when this Republic shall be rid of this greatest of social evils. You may defeat this resolution to-day; you may defeat this measure next year; but just as surely as right shall triumph over wrong, when the good judgment and patriotic sentiment of the American people shall be crystallized into law there will be no saloons in the District of Columbia. It takes time to work out all great reforms. Error intrenched always fights stubbornly against the onward march of truth. Indeed—

The paths of truth in every age have led men to Gethsemane—to mocking and a cross
Its sacred light hath rent the veil behind
Which error long has been concealed; and though
The priests of wrong have raged and sought to bind
With thongs the souls of men, right on the tides
Of truth have swept; nor mobs, nor hate, nor yet
The Cross can stay the morning of its triumph.

Mr. President, I shall count myself fortunate, though in the minority, to have taken an humble part in this great effort to serve humanity, for I realize that the real greatness of the Republic does not consist—

In hewn stone nor in well-fashioned beams,
Not in the noblest of the builder's dreams,
But in courageous men of purpose great—
There is the fortress, there is the living state.

The consuming desire of my soul is that I may be able to do something to buttress the "fortress" and strengthen the "living state." I shall be satisfied if, when the last settlement comes, that my name may be recorded among those who "loved and served their fellow man."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I think my friend from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] was rather unfortunate when he quoted Chauncey Depew. I think he said that Mr. Depew had stated that the prominent men with whom he had associated for the past 50 years in legislative halls had filled drunkards' graves, or words to that effect.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not all of them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, how many of them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Only those he had met in the legislature at that time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, well, then, it was the legislature, and that is not on my side of the House. I will say that that was an extravagant statement, which I do not believe can be borne out by the facts. I have met very many in the halls of legislation on both sides of the political question, none of whom were given to the use of alcohol; and I have, as God is my judge, yet to know one of them who when he died filled a drunkard's grave.

The Senator quoted something from Lincoln, and doubtless his quotation was correct as to what Lincoln may have said on the question of the unbridled use of liquor; but there was another thing the Senator might have quoted which Lincoln said. During the civil strife, when the cry was "On to Richmond," Lincoln was being beset on all sides with the suggestion, "Change this general and supplant him with another." Finally one humanitarian came to him and said, "Mr. Lincoln, you will never succeed until you change Grant. You must change Grant." "Why?" asked Lincoln. "Why, Grant drinks." What was Lincoln's response? The Senator did not quote that. Lincoln said, "Tell me the brand of liquor Grant uses, as I want to send it to some of the other generals who are in our Army." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what Senators have said is all very well and all very nice, but you from Texas and you from Mississippi do not love humanity with a deeper love than do I. It is all very well to ring the changes on the particular species of fanaticism that has obsessed your lives.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, well, wait until I get through. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey declines to yield at this time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, notwithstanding all that has been said to us here to-day, this is a pretty good world, if we know how to take it. That is your trouble. It has wagged along for several thousand years blessing most of us far beyond our deserts. [Laughter.] Conditions here suit me pretty well as they are at present. This is a beautiful world, and this is a beautiful and well-governed city, as I see it. The people who make up this city are to me of a most pleasing and intellectual character, and I do not think it is well at this time to try to make this world or this city over.

Mr. President, it is a remarkable fact that all the grains and all the fruits given by the great God of creation to His creatures that are most nutritious and desirable are richest in alcohol. I need only cite wheat, rye, corn, oats, rice, and, in the realm of fruits, the grape, the peach, and the apple. This was not an accident, but with a purpose deeper than our finite minds can fathom or discover.

Under present conditions this city has advanced in every way—in beauty, in morals, in education, and in charity—until it is even held up to the world as a model city.

Mr. President, primarily I oppose prohibition because it is un-American and undemocratic, and has for its purpose the interference with the rights of the citizen and the destruction of private property without thought of recompense. I am opposed to prohibition because wherever it has been tried it has proved a failure. I say in the State of South Carolina it is an absolute failure; I say in Georgia it is a failure; I say in cities innumerable it is a failure.

In this connection I might cite my own city. Years ago, when an effort to secure prohibition was made there, and no licenses were granted, the result was, as the police records will show, that there were more arrests for drunkenness during the year of the so-called prohibition reign than in any other year. Literally, uncanny holes and lockers were established in various parts of the town, to the general detriment of the community.

The advocates of these measures are going to reform the world by suffrage and prohibition. I have here a little clipping from the New York Tribune, headed "Suffrage and Prohibition," signed by a woman whose name is Elizabeth T. Holmes, who asserts that suffrage will not correct the drink habit nor will prohibition correct it, but insists that women attend to their own matters, to their own homes and households, and that by so doing they will do more to advance the well-being of their sex and of the human race than in any other way. I ask to insert at this point the clipping to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The clipping referred to is as follows:

SUFFRAGE AND PROHIBITION—A NEW JERSEY WOMAN CONTENT TO DO WITHOUT EITHER.

UNION HILL, N. J., July 18, 1914.

To the Editor of the Tribune.

SIR: The sentiments expressed by Mary E. Cobb in her letter are just such as one might expect from a narrow-minded woman who thinks that the best and only way to get real temperance is by voting prohibition.

Indeed, most of the women who are shouting for the ballot actually imagine that their vote will in some unexplained way bring about wonderful and even miraculous reforms and improvements in society, in politics, and in business—perhaps.

What woman's suffrage would bring about would be 57 different kinds of fake or sham reforms, including the farce of prohibition, which is the greatest of all.

As a resident for many years in New Jersey, the State which Mary E. Cobb compares unfavorably with Maine, I do not want the ballot, nor do I want the brand or kind of prohibition I have seen in Maine and elsewhere.

ELIZABETH T. HOLMES.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. "Break up the saloon," is the cry. Well, Mr. President, if there was not a demand for the saloon it would not exist for a single day. Lack of bread and butter, an empty stomach, a harrassed mind, 10 hours of toil in a noisome atmosphere in shop and mill, sewer or ditch, are the feeders of your saloon.

Mr. President, I was called on the telephone at my home last night at 10 o'clock, the party at the other end of the wire telling me that we must abolish the saloon. He said the city was aflame with the sentiment for the abolition of the saloon, and requested me to meet him at the Metropolitan Club, where we might talk about it over a glass. [Laughter.] Innocently I asked him where the Metropolitan Club was; and I asked him, too, if it was a perfectly proper place for an old gentleman to go. [Laughter.] He answered me, "Oh, yes; very quiet and highly respectable," with a peculiar emphasis on the words "highly respectable." Think of it, Mr. President! Here was a man wanting to rid the community of the saloon, but inviting and enticing an old man to a highly respectable resort called a club, with a gilded bar. God save me from such hypocrisy.

I cite again, as I have before, the words of that sweet angel of temperance who has gone to her reward, Frances E. Willard, whose sweet and sympathetic voice pleaded that we first make it easier for mankind to get bread and butter, and then, mayhap, our teachings might fall in more fertile soil. To my mind this is the solution of the whole question: Give mankind happy homes, let them be well clad, well sheltered, and well fed, and the problem of the drink question will disappear as dew before the rising sun.

Mr. President, I feel that conditions throughout our country prove something. Let me take two States, one "wet" and the other "dry"—one the State of Kansas, a prohibition State, and the other Nebraska, two States which are very much alike in conditions and in population. As to the conditions in those two States I quote the following from the New York Sun:

"DRY" AND "WET"—SOME FIGURES OF PAUPERISM AND INSANITY IN TWO STATES.

To the Editor of the Sun.

SIR: Mr. William H. Anderson in his letter to the Sun, published July 20, says:

"The Federal census report shows that the prohibition States over the country not only have less pauperism and less insanity but less crime on the average, in proportion to population, than the 'wet' States."

Kansas is the model "dry" State, and Nebraska, her nearest neighbor, with like natural conditions, is "wet."

The Federal census report on insane and feeble-minded in institutions, 1910 (Bulletin 119), gives these figures for Kansas and Nebraska: Insane in hospitals January 1, 1910: Kansas, 2,912; Nebraska, 1,990; admitted in 1910, Kansas, 905; Nebraska, 411; insane with alcoholic psychosis, admitted in 1910, Kansas, 70; Nebraska, 20; feeble-minded in institutions January 1, 1910, Kansas, 420; Nebraska, 446; admitted in 1910, Kansas, 86; Nebraska, 23.

Bulletin 121 of the Bureau of Census, Prisoners and Juvenile Delinquents, 1910, gives these figures as enumerated January 1, 1910: Kansas, 1,971; Nebraska, 789; prisoners, Kansas, 1,537; Nebraska, 656; juvenile delinquents, Kansas, 434; Nebraska, 133; prisoners committed for grave homicide, Kansas, 100; Nebraska, 44; for major assault, Kansas, 77; Nebraska, 40; for minor assault, Kansas, 28; Nebraska, 4; for robbery, Kansas, 89; Nebraska, 29; for burglary, Kansas, 275; Nebraska, 130; for larceny, Kansas, 619; Nebraska, 163; for fraud, Kansas, 22; Nebraska, 10; for forgery, Kansas, 93; Nebraska, 41; for rape, Kansas, 86; Nebraska, 37; for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, Kansas, 29; Nebraska, 52; for violating liquor law, Kansas, 72; Nebraska, 2. Bulletin No. 120, Paupers in Almshouses, 1910, gives these figures: Paupers enumerated in almshouses on January 1, 1910: Kansas, 735; Nebraska, 551. B.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23.

Mr. President, I regret sincerely to find myself arrayed against the Senators who are supporting this measure. They are my friends, and I have the greatest regard and respect for the motives and the high ideals they proclaim; but, Mr. President, while feeling thus, I ask from them and from my countrymen the same generous and charitable consideration. I yield to none in my desire for temperance and sobriety; I will not knowingly support a measure that I feel will bring degradation to a single mortal; I yield to none in my love for my fellows; and I only ask that when the great God may carry me hence it may be said of me, "He loved his fellow man." But, Senators, your path is a mistaken one; your guideposts point you the wrong way. Circumstances alone make drunkards.

There are two elements that press upon me on this question and urge upon me their respective views. One claims that the distillers and the whisky dealers have no rights which Congress is bound to respect; the other says that they produce over a third of the internal revenue, and hence we must not touch their business. Neither of these arguments has any weight whatever with me. I shall vote upon grounds of right and justice and for that which I believe will advance the general well-being and prosperity of my country. I can not agree with the narrow thoughts which have been advanced by the other side.

We have, Mr. President, in the United States about 3,000,000 people who class themselves as Christian Scientists. They practice and preach that the use of drugs is not necessary to cure human ills; that drugs are a curse. Let these people—and I say this with all respect to this great element of our society—be able to gather votes enough and they would endeavor to prevent by legislation the use of drugs in this country. Then, too, comes the vegetarian, declaring that the use of meat is unclean and generally deleterious to health and that mankind should live upon vegetables. With votes enough this school might ask, with as much reason, that this body legislate against the use and transportation of meat throughout the country.

Senators, I appeal to you not to be carried away by this sectional clamor and narrow view. This great Government was not established on one idea, nor can it be maintained on a one-idea policy. A widely different policy has extended our territorial possessions until we reach from sea to sea and from the Gulf to Niagara's mighty cataract, that is sending up ceaseless anthems to the Most High over a happy and prosperous people. Through a broader and more liberal policy America has written on the pages of history a story at which the world marvels. Mr. President, with this unparalleled story before us of our glorious and magnificent progress I ask why should we enter at this time this devious, dubious, and dangerous path?

On God Almighty's footstool there is no more intelligent or God-fearing people than those who make up the population of this favored land and of this splendid city. This great result has come about without the enactment of this or of other similar drastic laws. I urge you, my friends, in the interest and well-being of humanity, in the interest and well-being of the progress of our land, and to advance the glories of this city, the Capital of the Nation, that these narrow thoughts be brushed aside and find no place in the future.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] has taken the occasion of this debate to undertake to make comparisons between the State which I in part represent and a neighboring State, very much to the detriment, in his opinion, of the character and intelligence of the people of Kansas. I do not in any way reflect upon the people of Nebraska. They are a good people, and their State is a great State and worthy of the high position it holds in the Federal Union. It is not stated, however, in the clipping from which the Senator from New Jersey has quoted that Kansas has a population something like half a million more than Nebraska; and the data which is submitted indicates, if it indicates anything, that the people of Kansas have made ample provision to care in every way for the unfortunates who may need their care.

So far as prohibition is concerned, Kansas has tested its merits, and you can not find within the boundaries of a limited area on the face of God's globe a better people, a people more intelligent, people who practice morality to a greater degree, a people of more energy, or a people amongst whom there is so little crime. You may travel through that State from one end to the other, and you will find county after county with not a single person in the county jail or living on the county poor farm. Nothing has contributed to her prosperity and to her moral and material welfare so much as her prohibitory law. She stands to-day a model Commonwealth for mankind to pattern after. If the State of New Jersey would pattern after her and suppress vice and crime and its causes, the State of New Jersey would improve her social condition.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to say right there that the Senator should realize, first, one fact. Geographically New Jersey is situated between the great Empire State of New York, with a great port open to the world, on one side, and the State of Pennsylvania on the other. We have New York City and we have Philadelphia, both great ports, great cities, whose population runs into the millions, so that naturally we might reap some of the evils that come from great cities. [Laughter.] But I say that, in proportion to her population, there is no Commonwealth in this land that can show a better result or a better file of statistics than the humble little Commonwealth of New Jersey.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind Senators that it is against the rules of the Senate to refer offensively to any State in the Union.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Chair to the fact that three different times on yesterday the Presiding Officer notified the galleries that they were violating the rules because they smiled at some observations here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The galleries will please preserve order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I desire to express my surprise that the Senator from New Jersey, in the situation provoked by the Senator from Kansas, should find it necessary to resort to the plea of confession and avoidance.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I know that the Senator from New Jersey had no intention of transferring to the city of New York or the city of Philadelphia the responsibility for any possible abuses that may exist in the State of New Jersey. Living as close to it as I do, I should be prepared to say that there was absolutely no foundation for the criticism of my friend from Kansas regarding the great Commonwealth of New Jersey, and it would have afforded me much pleasure if the distinguished Senator from New Jersey had placed his answer upon the same ground. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I only desire to say that God knows, Mr. President, that I have no desire or thought of bringing disrepute upon the State of New York. I first drank from my mother's bosom the milk of justice and liberty in the city of New York. It is my birthplace, and I think a good deal of it. I did not say just what the evils were. It may have been the preponderance of genius from New York that sometimes overlaps and comes over there and makes a good many laws about which there is some criticism.

As to Pennsylvania—I see there is one Senator from Pennsylvania here—I was about to say that in the absence of the Senators from that State I hesitate to make criticisms. Nothing but the little, narrow Delaware River divides us, and we sniff their breezes, get some of the benefits of their intellect, and reap much of the benefit of their culture, both in liquid and in solid form, so I have understood.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that I did not intend to cast any reflections upon the State of New Jersey. I think it is unfortunate that the genial and distinguished Senator, who is one of her representatives on this floor, should feel it his duty to rise and defend the brothels and the saloons in the District of Columbia.

If there is anything on the face of God's earth that ought to be banished from civilized society, it is the drinking saloon. It is an evil influence in every community where it lurks. It debases the morals, it deadens the intellect, it poisons the very character of society. It is to be regretted that any State should have a Senator who would stand upon the floor of the United States Senate and defend such a hideous institution as the open saloon, with its offensive signs, which every citizen who visits the National Capital sees plastered upon the windows of the buildings as he passes.

I am glad to say that I live in a State where men and women have been born and have grown to manhood and womanhood and have never seen a saloon. It is a disgrace to the Nation that when they come to visit its Capital these sources of moral pestilence to society should be open, and thereby invite them to enter and corrupt their morals and debase their natures.

I hope to see the time when the saloon will be abolished, not only from the National Capital, but from the earth. Not a single Senator can stand on this floor and mention one good thing, one influence that is elevating or beneficial to mankind, that comes from the open saloon—not one.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Why emphasize the word "open"? Why does the Senator say "the open saloon"?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say any kind of a saloon, or indulgence in intoxicating liquor in any form. I do not care whether it comes from a saloon or from some hidden source. Yet on this floor, where no Senator will stand and state a single good thing that can come from the saloon, we probably will have at least a third of this body who will vote to perpetuate saloons in the National Capital.

I regret that this resolution comes before the Senate as it does, requiring a two-thirds vote to put legislation of this character upon an appropriation bill, when I have sat here for almost six years and have seen legislation ingrafted on every appropriation bill that has ever passed this body. There is not a Senator in the Chamber this afternoon but who knows that legislation is ingrafted on every appropriation bill, and this bill is full of it; but when it comes to striking at the greatest evil in civilized society, then it is barred from being placed in the bill by a majority vote, as other legislation, and a two-thirds vote is required.

It was not my purpose to indulge in this debate, because I felt that, at least for the present, the proposition offered by the Senator from Texas, which is noble in its character and an honor to him, was beaten day before yesterday, and that, so far as this immediate motion was concerned, the fight was lost; but when the State which I in part have represented in this body for almost six years was brought into this debate in disparagement because she has driven the saloon from her borders, and driven it effectually and permanently, I could not sit silent.

Kansas is the enemy of the saloon. Why, the people of that State would no more harbor saloons in their midst again than they would take to their breasts vipers and rattlesnakes. The sentiment, after years of enforcement of our prohibitory law, is so overwhelmingly in its favor that no man representing any political organization of any consequence would dare to advocate its return. Kansas stands to-day in the high moral character of its people, in the conservative, intelligent, progressive character of its legislation, in the honesty of its administration of public affairs, without a superior among the organized governments of mankind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Kansas have involved the reputation of the State of Nebraska in this debate, I desire to state exactly what the statistical abstract of the Government of the United States shows in several important particulars.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that I never in any way reflected in the slightest degree upon his State in the remarks I made. I spoke in high praise of its character and its citizenship.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not intend to imply that anything said by the Senator from Kansas reflected upon my State; but I desire to show that the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey is in a large measure justified by the statistical reports of the United States.

The Senator from Kansas, in reply to the Senator from New Jersey, stated that the difference in the figures quoted by the Senator from New Jersey favorable to Nebraska was due to the fact that Kansas was a larger State and had 500,000 more population than the State of Nebraska. He was accurate as to the fact that Kansas has more population than the State of Nebraska, but he is obviously greatly in error when he questions the correctness of the figures favorable to Nebraska. Let us take the percentage applying to each State; and I can demonstrate that fact to him in a few moments by a number of figures.

Take the matter of paupers enumerated in almshouses in Nebraska and compare it with Kansas. There were in the State of Kansas in 1890 41.6 paupers for every 100,000 of population. In Nebraska there were 27.5 paupers for every 100,000 of population.

Take the matter of persons confined in penal institutions. The total number in Kansas is 1,746; in Nebraska, 519.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I ask the Senator what year he is quoting from?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That last was for the year 1904. I will also give the later years.

I will repeat. In 1904 there were in the State of Kansas 117 persons confined in penal institutions for every 100,000 of population, but in the State of Nebraska in that same year there were only 48 persons and a fraction per 100,000 of population confined in penal institutions.

In the year 1910 the number of persons confined in penal institutions in Nebraska was 55 for each 100,000 of population, but in Kansas it was 91.

Take the matter of insane persons, referred to by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Before the Senator leaves that matter, I should like to ask him whether the number of criminals does not depend a great deal upon other matters? If a census were taken to-day, South Carolina would not have a single inmate of the penitentiary. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that there is only one Blease, as has been stated, and his jurisdiction extends neither to the State of Kansas nor to the State of Nebraska.

Take the matter of insane persons, referred to by the Senator from New Jersey. In 1910 there were 172 persons for every 100,000 population in Kansas in insane asylums. In Nebraska there were only 166. I leave off the fractions.

In the matter of illiterates, the illiterates of voting age in Kansas in the year 1910 numbered 14,716; in Nebraska only 8,545. The percentage in Kansas was 2.9 per cent; in Nebraska it was only 2.4 per cent.

I have quoted these statistics, which I have gathered hastily while the Senator from Kansas was on his feet, for the purpose of indicating that the Senator from New Jersey was correct when he stated that the high-license, strict-regulation State of Nebraska stands above the prohibition State of Kansas in net results. I am not reflecting upon the State of Kansas, and I doubt whether the Senator from New Jersey reflected upon the State of Kansas, because Kansas stands preeminent among prohibition States as being the State in which the best results have been attained among all prohibitory efforts; but I reaffirm that the Senator from New Jersey was right and was warranted when he referred to statistics as evidence that high license and regulation, as proven by the statistics of the United States, produce the best net results in the matter of illiteracy, insanity, and inmates of penal institutions.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, so far as the Senator's statistics are concerned in regard to the inmates of penal institutions, they simply demonstrate that in Kansas we send our criminals to jail, while in Nebraska they do not. [Laughter.] So far as the insane are concerned, they demonstrate that we take care of our insane people, by providing places to care for them properly, much better in Kansas than they do in Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hardly think the Senator from Kansas intends to reflect upon the State of Nebraska. I have certainly paid the highest encomium I could to Kansas as a State where prohibition has attained the highest degree of efficiency among prohibition experiments. But even taking that highest degree of efficiency, and comparing it with the highest and best results under regulation, I think I am justified in quoting the statistics of the United States to show that Nebraska shows the best results; and even if the Senator's theory is correct about the penal institutions and the insane institutions of Kansas, he could not possibly answer the matter of illiteracy.

Mr. BRISTOW. So far as illiteracy is concerned, there is little difference; and what there is is due to some conditions relating to foreign immigration into the mining regions of our State, which has made illiteracy there somewhat higher than in Nebraska.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if it is not a fact that more than half of Nebraska is dry, that more than half of it is under prohibitory law?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; a very large part of Nebraska is dry.

Mr. SHEPPARD. More than half of Nebraska is dry. What the Senator from Nebraska has read is a great tribute to prohibition in Nebraska.

Mr. BRISTOW. A great part of Nebraska is dry, and it would be a better thing for the State if it were all dry—very much better, indeed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not like to have any statements made about the State of Nebraska that are not correct. I think it is entirely inaccurate to say that. Nebraska voted upon prohibition, and beat it overwhelmingly, just as the State of Texas voted upon prohibition and beat it recently. In Nebraska each community settles for itself what it wants. Each community, when it elects its local officers, decides whether it wants to permit the use of liquor or does not. We have self-rule and home government in that particular.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Five-sixths of the territory of Texas is dry, much the larger proportion, and over half of Nebraska is dry. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas, further, if one of the largest Federal penitentiaries in the United States is not located in Kansas? They send the inmates there from all the whisky States of the Nation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRISTOW. One of the two Federal penitentiaries that are maintained by the National Government is located at Leavenworth, Kans.; and in addition to that the Kansas penitentiary for many years, until very recently, took care of the convicts in the State of Oklahoma. The State of Oklahoma paid Kansas so much for taking care of her prisoners of that character, and they were confined in the Kansas penitentiary. But I simply say that so far as these statistics are concerned, if they relate simply to the administration of the criminal laws of the States of Nebraska and Kansas, they show that Kansas prosecutes and confines more carefully in prisons the criminal part of her population than does her sister State upon the north.

In this I make no reflection upon the State of Nebraska, because I have quoted no statistics of any kind. I am simply answering allegations that have been made by the Senator from New Jersey, and supported by the Senator from Nebraska, in regard to my own State.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if the people of Nebraska are more law abiding with the saloon than the people of Kansas are without the saloon, it is a great tribute to the moral qualities of the people of Nebraska, because the Senator from Nebraska knows, and every other Senator in this Chamber knows, that there never was a moral thought, there never was an idea that worked for the uplifting and betterment of mankind that emanated from a saloon. As an evidence of that fact, all the great business enterprises of this country, as I stated a moment ago, are using every influence within their power to place their employees beyond the influence of the saloon; and I challenge any Senator on this floor to suggest a single good thought, idea, or deed that ever originated in one of those dens of iniquity.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not care to consume the time of the Senate——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to suggest that the number of persons that may be confined in prison is dependent greatly upon the policy of the State as to the prisoner. For instance, in the State of Colorado we have a parole system by which prisoners can earn their liberty, and by giving perfect conduct and by working in the open air on roads and farms a sentence of 10 years can be commuted by their own acts to 4 years and 3 months. That, of course, would have a tendency to decrease the number of persons in the prisons and penitentiary; and the same rule has been applied also to those confined in jails. I do not know what the policy of the State of Kansas may be, or the policy of the State of Nebraska; but evidently one must have a more liberal rule in regard to letting prisoners out than the other.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say that Kansas has a number of penal institutions of a corrective character for men and women. We take the women, the girls, and the boys that are incorrigible and put them in these institutions for the purpose of developing in them the higher ideals of life. Then I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from New Jersey that a very large percentage of the inmates of the jails and the penitentiary of Kansas are there for violating the prohibitory law. Why, there is county after county where there is not anybody in jail except some fellow who has been selling whisky in an illicit way. In Kansas we send to jail the man who sells whisky to poison the morals and the life and the character of his fellow men, and if they violate the statute habitually we send them to the penitentiary to do penal service for their crimes, and a large percentage of the inmates of these institutions have been sent there for violating this law.

Senators, I want to say that the saloon, the sale of intoxicating liquors, is an evil influence in society from which nothing but vice, woe, suffering, and corruption, and for a Senator to state that the presence of a large number of such institutions in his State contributes to the moral uplift of her people is a mistake. You might as well sow seeds of corruption of any other kind in the minds of the youth and then say that it is for his good. You might as well bring any other kind of vice or harbor of the vicious into a community and say it is for its benefit. That is contrary to every principle of moral ethics; it can not be defended.

The State or the community that banishes these dens of vice and iniquity does honor to itself, and the influence which results from such action is for the good of the people of those communities. Such statements are true and axiomatic and can not be denied by any sophistry or argument or presentation of statistics that do not prove what it is hoped that they may prove.

Mr. LANE. I should like to say that I think, respecting the States of Nebraska and Kansas, the Senators from those States have become confused in relation to the statistics. As a matter of fact, in Leavenworth, Kans., a prison for Federal prisoners is located, and the inmates of that institution, I presume, are taken into account in making up these statistical tables. A number of citizens of Nebraska are temporarily residing at this time in the penal institution in Kansas, and that is added to the population. Some citizens of our State of Oregon are included, for I have been interested in getting some of them released from there. It may be that that makes a difference.

Mr. CRAWFORD obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield for just a moment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Inasmuch as so much has been said about Nebraska, I should like to have read from the desk an editorial written by the leading citizen of Nebraska—perhaps in this presence I should say the third leading citizen—on this subject, Mr. Bryan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE ALCOHOLIC MILLSTONE.

The Democrats of the Nation have an issue to face, and they may as well prepare for it. The liquor interests are at bay; they are on the defensive. They realize that they have but a few more years in which to fatten upon the woes of their victims, but they are fighting desperately and are willing to hold any party between them and the fire. The Democratic Party can not afford to shield the brewery, the distillery, and the saloon from the rising wrath of a determined people. Democracy is the Nation's hope on political and economic questions; let it not, by taking sides with the liquor interests, repel those who put moral issues first. The young men of the country are Democratic by nature, but they will not submit their claims to political preferment to those who conspire against the home and everything good; neither will they find pothouse politicians congenial party associates. The President has set a high standard in intelligence and morals, and the party can not afford to lower the colors to gain a temporary advantage. Those whose support depends upon subservience to the liquor interests disgrace the party while they are with it and then leave it if it refuses to obey them. They are a millstone about the party's neck. The Democratic Party is the party of the future; it has a chance to enter the promised land; why allow the liquor interests to lead it away into the wilderness? Get ready for the fight.

W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I understand that in one sense the discussion of this report is idle, because of the fact that, as construed by the Senate, it will require a two-thirds vote of this body to suspend the rule so that the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas may be considered. But while that is true, Mr. President, there lies back of the immediate question, back of the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, a question which has a deep hold upon the American people, and in regard to which I do not believe it is any waste of time to exchange views here upon this floor upon this occasion.

It may be said, of course, that every matter considered by the Senate or by the Congress of the United States is a matter of great interest and of great importance, weighty business; but, Mr. President, when this particular question and its various associated questions come up in any form we at once observe a manifestation of interest that does not attend the deliberation of other matters, and the reason for it is that the interest is profound, is widespread, and reaches into the innermost recesses of the human heart.

I am going out of the Senate in a few weeks. I am going out with a good deal of satisfaction to myself and perhaps a good deal of satisfaction to others. I do not expect to engage in public life nor partisan politics, but to go back to my little home, into my country law office, and resume the practice of the law in the neighborhood where I have lived for a great many years. So for once I feel that what I say can not in the slightest degree be influenced by a desire either to play to these galleries or to shape a course that may win in a selfish way some advantage in the forum of politics. I do not desire to discuss the matter in any dogmatic way or in any spirit of fanaticism; but no question could possibly have come before the Senate of the United States while I have had the honor to be a Member of it that could impress me as being of greater importance to this country in all its future than this question.

I may say right in the start that if this particular question could get before the Senate it would be a proposition for the Congress of the United States to legislate for the people of the District without their being heard in it; but the people of the District would be heard in it just the same as they are heard in regard to legislation of every other character that relates to the District, just the same as they would be heard in any matter of taxation which would take money out of their pockets, just in the same way that they would be heard in relation to any police regulation of any other matter that should be imposed upon them by the Congress of the United States. This Congress is their legislative counsel, their city council, their legislative body, and it has in the very nature of things the same power to enact prohibitive legislation of this character that the legislature of any State has. So I do not believe there is anything affecting a fundamental right that is involved in this claim that we would be legislating in regard to the interests of the people of this District without their having a voice in it. It is the District of Columbia and not the city of Washington. It is under the direct control and supervision and subject to the direct legislative power of the Congress of the United States.

But we hear over and over again that the prohibition of the liquor traffic carried on in these saloons in the District of Columbia and elsewhere is a matter in which people have some sort of constitutional personal right that can not be touched by legislation; that it is a matter of individual habit; and that every man and every woman ought to be built up with a character so strong, with a will so invincible, that they can as individuals protect themselves against these dangers that are everywhere incident to the use of intoxicating liquors.

Oh, my fellow Senators, you have seen here and there during the years of your life admirable brilliant men, endowed with great power, both of mind and of will, and yet you have seen them as little children in the hands of a habit that holds them in its control as a galley slave. What is the use to talk about the individual being able in the strength of his character and his will to control himself when everywhere along the way we see the victims of that class?

Mr. President, when I went to my home just after Congress adjourned at the last session I discovered a situation there that chilled the blood in my veins. I found that the open saloons in the village in which I lived were in a combination and had a sort of net for the boys in the high school. One of them, a nonresident brewer, owned a saloon and employed irresponsible bartenders, and when a cry came up against one he disappeared and another was put in his place. These bartenders were playing the game with the little boys in our high school, having understandings with them that if they came at a certain time down the back alley and to the back door of the saloon they could get not only beer but whisky and carry it off out on the ground back of where they played baseball. Some of those little boys were found drunk more than once.

They went further than that. They had their little club, their little association, where they practically took a solemn vow that they would not expose each other, that they would protect each other if any charge was made about their drinking, and even in their little parties with their sweethearts from the high school some of them were found too drunk to go home with the young girls they had brought there.

Look here, my fellow Senators, your sons under such conditions as these become the victims of a habit. There is where it comes close to home. Your son, whom you expect to bear your name and go into your office and practice the profession you now follow when you are gone, at a time when you have absolute confidence that he is pure, sweet, innocent, and knows nothing about a thing of this kind is forming a habit in these saloons in the plastic years of his life that is reaching down and getting hold of him from which there is no escape.

Suppose it is your boy, all your hope in the world. What do you care for yourself as compared with your boy, your two boys, your three boys? I have three of them. If a thing of this kind should happen to those boys, what would I care, what would their mother care, for life? My boy is not any more to me than any other parent's boy is to him.

So much is said about these mothers that it becomes a sort of cant and falls on listless ears; but the mothers who are at home watching these little children say their prayers before they get into bed at night, who see them taking their first limping little barefooted step out of the front door and afterwards into the school, and watch them grow and develop—what must be their anguish when they discover that just outside the dooryard and beyond the street are these spider webs laid to poison those little lives?

I ask, what in the world do we receive revenues from these institutions for or permit them, so far as we have any power in the matter, to exist for? Say, what good are they? Why is it that we say, even where we license them, "You have got to close up at 9 o'clock at night; you are not allowed to sell liquor to minors; you are not allowed to sell it to habitual drunkards; you are not allowed to keep gambling apparatus inside"? We do not say it to the grocer or any other concern anywhere. Why do we say it to the saloon? Because we admit that it is bad, wholly, entirely, irredeemably bad.

We can not rebuild humanity. That is true. We can not pass laws that make men over again. We can not put a statute on the books that will make a bad man a good man or that will make a particular druukard a sober man. I admit all that. But we can outlaw the saloons.

How many clerks with small salaries in all these departments, that perhaps have families and have rents to pay, who have children to clothe and have duties to their children and the families to perform, are being led into these pitfalls along the streets here, when they go home from their daily work, and are leaving money there and practically by doing so stealing it away from their children? We are taking part of the money those poor men are paying in there, and of which they are depriving their children and their wives. We are taking part of it in the Treasury to pay the expenses of this Government. Let us look that thing squarely in the face. Is that right? What business have we to be doing such a thing as that?

I will tell you, my dear old brother from New Jersey, what is the matter. The reason why we do not come out and be perfectly fearless about this matter and go at it single hearted to destroy this evil is that we are really sort of fond of this thing. We may take only one drink of whisky occasionally, but we are fond of it just the same. We may not get it out of the saloon, we may get it in the club, but we rather like it, and we are allowing that partiality for it to influence us. You will find when you get right down to the root of the matter that that is where the reason is found for all this sluggish indifference to it. It is in some way or another, financially or personally, they are in it in sympathy or as a business proposition.

I tell you it is a serious thing. I know they say in Maine it has been tried so many years, and we have never got it clear out of there yet. That is true.

I was in Iowa just out of law school when they voted for State-wide constitutional prohibition. It went into the courts and it was defeated. Then in the State in which I live and into which I went as a young lawyer we voted State-wide prohibition into our constitution. We tried it for 10 years. We had a few counties in the State that were so solidly composed of men from foreign lands, who believed that it was just as proper and just as much their right and privilege to drink beer as it was to drink coffee, that it was not enforced there, and that put it into discredit, and after 10 years it was voted out of the constitution and we enacted a local-option law. Each county coming in under the local option has increased the number until in a substantial way we are rapidly becoming State-wide prohibition again; and now that the men of foreign birth, who stuck to their customs and habits so strongly, are passing away, their sons and daughters, who have been educated in the public schools, who have got inspiration from our churches, who have been taught these prohibitory doctrines, are now becoming prohibitionists, and I expect in no distant day to see the State which I in part represent become again a State-wide prohibition State.

Now, what right have the breweries and the distilleries in different cities and States in this Union to ask us to allow them to prey upon the growing boys and girls of this country in order to put money into their pockets? Oh, let us look at this thing as it is. I went into one of those big hotels down in Chicago one night about 1 o'clock in the morning when there was a great convention held there, and to see the red liquor that not only men but women were pouring down in almost unlimited quantities was a fright.

You can go into some of these cities and find a poor mother with a little child at her breast lying in her filth on the floor drunk. Then do you talk to me about the distillation that you get out of grain and corn and rice as something that the Lord made for the benefit of mankind? You had better say that we ought to permit the use of opium because the Lord made the poppy, and let people take it without limit. No! No!

I simply take the opportunity to say that in the few years I have left, when I vote on this question, wherever it comes, whether at the polling booth in my little town or here or elsewhere, I am going to vote in the direction that means that ultimately, so far as the law can do so, this business is going to be outlawed. I am going to vote that way here and now.

Mr. STONE obtained the floor.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment before he begins his address?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have read by the Secretary a statement from Hon. John S. Dawson, the retiring attorney general of Kansas, who on last Monday retired as attorney general and was sworn in as a member of the supreme court of our State. Since Kansas has been referred to quite extensively, I should like to have that statement of Mr. Dawson's read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

RESULTS OF PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.

[By Hon. John S. Dawson, attorney general.]

In 30 years Kansas has forged ahead from an insignificant place in national affairs to one of front rank. Almost a third of the entire population is enrolled in public or private schools. We have $16,000,000 worth of school buildings and public endowment funds of $10,000,000 more. Illiteracy has been reduced to less than 2 per cent, and that trifling amount is almost entirely among the foreign element in our mining regions of the southeast.

With 105 counties in the State, 87 of them have no insane, 54 have no feeble-minded, 96 have no inebriates, and the few we do have come from the cities which defied the law to the very last. Thirty-eight county poor farms have no inmates. Only one pauper to every three thousand population. In July, 1911, 53 county jails were empty; 65 counties had no prisoners serving sentence. Some counties have not called a jury to try a criminal case in 10 years, and a grand jury is so uncommon that half of our people wouldn't know what it is. In my home county in western Kansas there has never been but one grand jury in its history and that was 25 years ago.

In 1880, when prohibition was adopted, Kansas was an exceedingly poor State. In 30 years it has become the richest State in the Union per capita. The assessed valuation of property for taxation is sufficient to give every man, woman, and child in the State $1,700. The average wealth in the Nation is only $1,200.

Prior to 1880 the death rate in Michigan and Wisconsin, Iowa and Kansas, was practically the same, viz, 17 to the thousand. After 30 years of prohibition in Kansas our death rate has dropped to 7½, while that of the other States has slightly increased. Is it not fair to say that 30 years of prohibition had something to do with this?

In 1880 the bank-savings deposits were $30,000,000; to-day they are $200,000,000.

Prohibition has taken politics out of the saloons and has driven the saloon out of politics.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I would not detain the Senate, anxious as I am to expedite business, except that I am unwilling that a vote should be taken on the question pending without saying a word in protest against the attitude taken by most, if not all, the Senators who have spoken in favor of the adoption of the committee report.

Mr. President, if I should judge men by their intemperate utterances, I might imagine that some of those who have indulged in such ferocity of expression to-day had taken something even into their mouths which had stolen away their brains Alcohol is not the only thing that steals away a man's intellect. Narrowness of mental vision, intolerance, bigotry—things of that kind embedded in the hearts and minds of men—often makes them think they are superior to their fellows, better at heart and infallible in judgment, when, in fact, these characteristics merely impair a man's capacity to think clearly, to speak temperately, or to conduct himself in a spirit of fairness and justice to others.

Mr. President, this debate has proceeded upon a false assumption. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], and others assume to arraign those of us who are opposed to prohibition as being the advocates and friends of the saloon. They would have the country believe that we stand for the saloon; that we are its friends and champions. I do not think that that is a very creditable statement for any Senator to make. It is not creditable to his sense or his veracity. I can only say that the man who is capable of making that charge, especially in the circumstances of this environment, must be a very narrow sort of human creature—narrow in the scope and possibilities of his intellect and both narrow and absurd in the assumption of superior virtue, morality, and good citizenship.

Mr. President, I do not believe in prohibition as a national policy or as an arbitrary State-wide policy. I would vote against Nation-wide prohibition, as I did speak and vote against an amendment to our State constitution establishing State-wide prohibition. That constitutional amendment was before the people of Missouri three or four years ago, and the proposition was defeated by a vote approximately of 250,000. Following my convictions, I voted against it, but I did not impugn the motives or integrity of those who voted for it. If a majority of my fellow citizens had been of the opinion that it was a policy that should be adopted by the State, and if it had been written into our constitution, no man would have more earnestly insisted upon its enforcement than I.

I think a State has a right, under the Constitution, to determine all police questions of that kind for itself, and if the people of my State should at any time take a different view from that I entertain I would accept their judgment and thenceforth stand with them for the enactment of such laws as might be needful to carry out that policy and stand with them for the enforcement of the law. I would not, however, seek to force that policy by Federal enactment upon another State.

In my State I took the position that the exclusion of licensed places for the sale of intoxicating liquors should be determined by local option in each community acting for itself. That is the present policy of the State, and I think it is the wiser one. More than half the counties of the State have adopted what we call "local option," and saloons are not permitted. As a rule, I think the law in those counties is well enforced, due to the fact that in those counties the law is supported by public opinion. I have not thought that one county should force its views and policies upon the people of another county where an entirely different public opinion prevails. If the shoe should be put upon the other foot, I would undoubtedly oppose any effort that might be attempted by those we call the "wets" to establish a policy that would make it possible to maintain saloons in counties where the people are opposed to them. I would have each community settle that question for itself, and especially would I let each State settle it for itself. States are supposed to be sovereign over matters which purely and solely affect their internal concerns, and I think that the States severally should remain sovereign over all police questions of this character. Moreover, I stand for a measure—a large measure—of individual liberty. Individual liberty is an old principle which always appeals to me.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] spoke about what the Czar had done in Russia. He put a new jewel in the crown of the Czar because he had with one sweep of his pen driven the demon, as he called it, from the Empire. Mr. President, I do not adopt the Czar of Russia as my model or my example. To be sure, he could of his own motion and by his own decree forbid the manufacture, sale, or use of intoxicants, or perhaps of anything, within the limits of his vast Empire. So he might by his decree determine what his subjects—his subjects, I say—might not eat, or what they might or might not wear, or what professions they might or might not be permitted to engage in. That sort of thing is done in Russia. So, also, may the Czar of all the Russias decree what men may not think, controlling not only the habits of men, but the minds of men, and make it a crime to think. Thousands have been chained like brutes and whipped from their homes into the chill and lonely confinement of Siberian solitudes because of the things they dared to think. Let these subjects have thoughts that reached out toward liberty—individual or collective human liberty; let it be known that they aspired to something better than this autocrat was willing they should have, and it has never been long until, like slaves, they have been driven at night from the toil of quarries to the most cheerless of dungeons. I hate intolerance in any form, no matter how or where or when it appears. No, Mr. President, the Czar of the Russias affords no inspiration to me.

I am sorry to find Senators so inconsiderate, narrow, intolerant, and bigoted as to charge motives upon and against their colleagues on this floor that are discreditable to them solely because they do not agree with them. I am unable to understand that temperament or mental construction.

Mr. President, I am not the advocate, champion, or friend of the saloon; but I do believe with all my might that better results from every point of view, whether of sobriety or good order or good morals, are attained through a strict regulatory system than through absolute prohibition, unless the attempt at prohibition is sanctioned and supported by a decided public sentiment.

I know thousands of good men and women do not agree to this view; I know there are in my State, as in yours, thousands among the best of our people who are so intense in their opposition to the liquor traffic that they have persuaded themselves into the belief that the only effective remedy is to destroy the saloon; and not only the saloon, but to destroy even the manufacture and sale in any form of all kinds of alcoholic beverages. I do not criticize, much less assail, these good people. God only knows they may be right; I do not know that they are wrong, but I do not think they are right. The best thought I have leads me to a view wholly at variance with theirs. There are among them, as I have said, many men and women who go so deeply into the struggle and become so intense in their feelings that they grow to be absolutely intolerant of other men and women who do not think as they do. They seem to regard it as impossible that anybody could have an honest opinion on this subject contrary to theirs, and they are too quick to believe that whoever differs from them is influenced by some foul motive—not only a mistaken view, but a foul motive. There are so many intent upon attributing bad motives or purposes to men and women who do not agree with them. I wish that were not so. Happily it is not true of thousands, but it is true of many; and it is true of some not far away who ought to know better. I have no tolerance for intolerance, no patience with this spirit of illiberality.

Mr. President, a word more and I am done. If the people want prohibition, let them have it. If they want it, I want them to have it; and where you find a community where there is a dominant sentiment favorable to prohibition you will have a community where it would be in every way good for the people to have prohibition, and in such a community there will rarely be any trouble about enforcing a prohibitory statute. As to this particular measure, applying only to the District of Columbia, I do not believe that prohibition would promote sobriety, good order, or good morals in this District.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STONE. That is my opinion. I suppose, possibly, the Senator from Texas rises to say that I am now speaking for the saloons in Washington; but I am not. He is laboring under a grave misapprehension.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; but the practical effect of the Senator's speech is for the saloons. That, however, was not what I rose to say. I want to know if the Senator was in favor of abolishing the sale of liquor in the Capitol Building?

Mr. STONE. Yes; and it has been long since abolished.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Have you no confidence in the ability of Senators and Representatives to drink or not to drink without the interference of prohibitory law? What becomes of your argument against the merit of prohibition?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as between the Capitol and the city there is no parallel. And now, when I say that, I see some of my prohibition friends smile; but men "may smile and smile" and—well, I will not finish the quotation; it would not be proper—but a man may smile and smile and still be mistaken. [Laughter.] A mere grin upon a face, however well shaven, placid or even classic in contour, does not help the intellect to right conclusions. A supercilious sneer is not a convincing proof of good judgment.

Mr. President, the Senator says that the effect of my argument is to favor saloons. Not so. Saloons may remain, indeed, if the argument should be effective. I think undoubtedly they would remain, although, speaking out of my heart, I wish there were none in the world. I wish there were no intoxicants on earth and that none were used by men as beverages. But it is not what I wish; the question is what I should do to get the best result out of conditions as they are.

No, I do not speak for the saloons. I believe, absolutely believe, that if my argument should have weight and my advice be followed it would result in far better conditions in the District than could, in the circumstances, be hoped for under prohibition.

This Capitol is the Capitol of the Nation. It is the building where the lawmaking power assembles——

Mr. WILLIAMS. They do not allow even photographs to be sold in the Capitol.

Mr. KERN. The Capitol building is not a hotel.

Mr. STONE. The Capitol is not a hotel. It is the National Capitol, and no traffic of any kind should be permitted under its roof, except it be absolutely essential to the convenient transaction of business by the Senate and House of Representatives. We need restaurants in the Senate and in the House, but that is to facilitate the business of Congress by aiding in economizing the time of Senators and Representatives. But we do not need a saloon in the Capitol, and there is none. We do not want whisky dispensed publicly here in this building, and it will not be done; but there are reasons for that outside of and beyond the reasons that influenced my judgment when I come to deal with the government of a great city like this—a city of perhaps 350,000 people—to which thousands are ever coming from all over the country and all over the world. I believe that better results will be attained here without this proposed law than with it. I have that opinion, and it does not become any Senator to assail my motives. I might speak in more resentful terms of that sort of thing if I cared enough about it, but such observations do not ordinarily flow from a source that I consider of sufficient importance to weigh heavily upon my heart. I am satisfied to protest against it and pass it by. Now, Mr. President, I am through——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. What I rose for especially was to enter my protest against this question being decided upon the pleadings made by the friends of the measure. The issue they present is a false one. I shall not vote against this amendment because I am the friend of the saloon, but I shall vote against it because I believe the welfare of the people of this city will be better promoted by a well-regulated license system than by what would be, as I think, a vain attempt to prevent the sale and use of intoxicants altogether.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Missouri has not discussed the question which, to my mind, is perhaps of most importance in this matter, and that is as to what the attitude of the people of the District themselves may be with reference to it.

The Senator has in his own State a local-option law, as we have in the State which I in part represent. The value of that law, as it occurs to me, is that no community undertakes to put prohibition into operation until a majority of the community are in favor of it; and whenever a majority of a particular community are in favor of the enforcement of the law, and so declares, they can make it measurably successful. The extent of the success will depend upon the strength of the sentiment in favor of the law; but the weakness of the State-wide idea is that it undertakes to put prohibition into operation in communities where the majority are against prohibition just the same as it does in communities where the majority are in favor of it; and the enforcement of a law of this kind, more than any other sort of law, depends upon the sentiment of the community where the law is to be enforced.

I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he has any idea as to what the sentiment of the people of this District is upon that subject, and to ask him, if it should turn out that 65 or 70 or 75 per cent of the intelligent people of this District or of this city are against prohibition, what he thinks as to the possibility of enforcing the law.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not know what the sentiment of the people living in Washington is. I have no means of knowing. I saw in the press that the Chamber of Commerce had a meeting the other day at which it adopted a resolution against this proposed measure. That is the leading commercial body of this city. It represents the industrial and commercial activities of the community. That is the only expression I have seen beyond expressions I have read in the newspapers.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a slight interruption just at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have here a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Washington, D. C., which, if I may be permitted, I will read:

We, the Chamber of Commerce of the District of Columbia, in annual meeting assembled, protest against prohibition of the licensed sale of liquors in the District of Columbia, comprehended in the Sheppard amendment to the District appropriation act now pending in the Senate. We submit that under any circumstances such drastic organic legislation should have full and separate consideration in Congress. We protest against legislation for the District of Columbia, in which the people of the District have no voice, being considered in riders to appropriation acts. We respectfully petition the Senate of the United States to reject the Sheppard amendment.

Mr. STONE. What is that?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. This is a resolution passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Washington, D. C., on January 12, 1915.

Mr. STONE. I have read it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Asking the pardon of the Senator further, here is a statement addressed to the Congress of the United States signed "Respectfully, the Washington Mercantile Association"; and while on my feet I respectfully ask permission that this may be added to the few remarks I made some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be taken.

The matter referred to is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: Committees of Congress have received protests against attempts to enact more drastic liquor laws for the District of Columbia from the following:

The Personal Liberty League of the District of Columbia, with a petition of residents and taxpayers numbering about 50,000.

The German-American Building Association of this District, with $1,000,000 capital and 3,000 members, all of these taxpayers in the District of Columbia, protesting against any change in the existing law.

The Chamber of Commerce of Washington, D. C.

On two different occasions in the last six years petitions bearing more than 50,000 signatures of adults in the District of Columbia were presented to the District Committee of the United States Senate, asking that they not be weighed down with prohibition.

The Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia passed this resolution:

"Whereas the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia since 1908 has recorded itself against prohibition and other measures before the Congress of the United States affecting the present excise laws; and

"Whereas we believe that the proper enforcement of the present laws covering the liquor traffic are sufficient and satisfactory to our needs and requirements: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That our legislative committee be instructed to appear before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of informing the said committee that organized labor is opposed to the contemplated changes of the present law."

And the official executive heads of the District of Columbia, after a careful examination of the matter, made an unfavorable report on the 27th of March last. The commissioners in this report stated they were of the opinion that if an election were to be held in the District, the majority would vote against any restriction of the number of barrooms to a maximum less than the number now in existence. Statistics show, they pointed out, that, while the population of the District has increased more than 60,000 in the past 13 years, there has been no increase in the number of saloons. The Jones-Works bill would limit the number of saloons in Washington to 300. At present there are 498 retail drinking establishments in the Capital and 123 wholesale liquor houses. In lieu of the Jones-Works bill the commissioners recommended a measure limiting the number of saloons to the number now in existence and providing for an increase in the retail license from $800 to $1,000, and in the wholesale license from $400 to $500, now $1,500 for retail and $800 for wholesale.

The annual report for the past 10 years of the excise board shows that less than 1 per cent of the licensed liquor dealers of the District of Columbia have violated the excise law.

On February 21, at the Willard Hotel, on the occasion of the dinner to the President of the United States by the citizens of Washington, D. C., President Taft said, among other things:

"My friends in Washington, it is 23 years since I came to this city; during that entire period my interest has been active, etc.

"I have been here for the last nine years continuously. I believe I have been in a position to know, etc.

"I do not know any better policed city than the city of Washington. I do not know any city in which there has been less vice and in which the Sunday laws and the liquor laws are better observed than they are here.

"Of course, there is not a city in the world where, if a man has got a nose for something nasty, he can not find it. What I mean by this is that Washington is as moral as any city in the world."

We believe, you who have lived here any length of time, agree with the President of the United States in his statement about conditions here in the Nation's Capital, and we sincerely trust you will not only carefully consider what has been said by these high authorities, but to also bear in mind there has been no demand by the people who live here the year round for any change in the present excise law.

This editorial appeared in the Washington Times of January 11, 1915:

"A DRY WASHINGTON.

"Whether Washington is to be a dry town is likely to depend on whether somebody makes a point of order in the United States Senate. After that it may depend on whether somebody else insists that the Senate itself vote on the point of order, rather than allow a presiding officer to rule on it.

"Does Washington want prohibition? That is quite immaterial. Nobody seems to have thought seriously of asking the question.

"It is merely a question whether Members of Congress want Washington to have prohibition.

"Not even a question whether Members of Congress want prohibition for their own homes. Just a question whether it would be better politics for them to favor or oppose it for a people who are not their constituents.

"Here is a question on which the rule everywhere is to let the people decide for themselves. One State votes for it, another against it. But Washington, alone of American communities, may get it without even a suggestion of effort to determine how the affected community feels.

"There could be no better illustration of the unrepresentative character of the government that is imposed on this town.

"Whether Washington shall or shall not have such a revolutionary change should be a question for the people of Washington, and nobody else, to decide. But the last people who will get a chance to decide—under present conditions of the local government—are the ones who must live here.

"If Washington wants to go dry, it should have the privilege. But it should not have that policy imposed on it by Congress without a chance for local opinion to be heard."

Respectfully,

THE WASHINGTON MERCANTILE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I want to refer for just a moment to the first resolution read.

Mr. STONE. I wanted to go on somewhat further, but I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I simply want to refer to the resolution read by the Senator from New Jersey and to say that, according to the newspaper reports, that resolution was presented and urged by Mr. Harvey. Mr. Harvey is the representative of the saloons of the country and is now running a saloon in the city of Washington under a license issued contrary to law.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no knowledge in regard to that. The Senator is better acquainted as to that than I am.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I know nothing about who prepared the resolution or anything about its origin. I read the resolution in one of the Washington papers, and it was said to have been passed by the chamber of commerce. I do not know what the sentiment of the people is. I have some vague idea with respect to that, but not sufficient definite knowledge or information upon which to base an opinion.

Mr. President, as to whether there should be a reference of this question by election to the people of the District I am not certain, and therefore I express no opinion upon it at this time. I suppose Congress has the absolute power to pass such a law as this. We come here from all over the Union, from every State. We are in and out; we come and go; many of us are sent here for a few months only and then we are gone for good. We know little about the District as a rule, little of its real conditions or its needs. Let us brush the people aside. Let us say that they have not any rights that we are bound to respect. Then what? As I see it, speaking as one of their legislators—though I live more than a thousand miles from here—but speaking in my capacity as a legislator, it is my deliberate opinion that the best interests of the people living here and of the thousands who come every year for a day or a week would be better protected and cared for and that the general welfare would be better promoted by the system we now have than by the one the Senator from Texas and his confrères are proposing.

That will be my reason for voting as I shall vote on this matter. I do not like to have some other reason or motive ascribed to me or ascribed to other Senators who are going to vote against this proposed amendment. I voted against prohibition in my State, and took all the hazard of that vote, if hazard there was. I might have dodged, Mr. President; but I did not. I might have resorted to some means of staying out of the fight; but I did not. My convictions upon the subject were deliberately formed, and I felt that I ought to take my part in the responsibility of determining what the policy of that great Commonwealth should be with respect to a question of so much importance. So I feel here to-day, and so I shall act upon this question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] referred to the effect of prohibition in Georgia. I have a copy of the language which he used and I will read it:

I am opposed to prohibition because wherever it has been tried it has proved a failure. I say in the State of South Carolina it is an absolute failure; I say in Georgia it is a failure.

I do not claim that the prohibition law in Georgia is never violated. Few laws are found upon the statute books which are not sometimes violated. There are in Georgia 150 counties. Out of that number certain in 145 counties the law is vigorously enforced. Probably this is true of 147 of the counties. I believe the law has been a blessing to the people of the State. I believe the overwhelming majority of the people of the State favor its retention. It was passed by the legislature during the summer of 1907, more than seven and a half years ago. There has been no serious effort to repeal it. It was made a State issue two years ago last summer by a candidate for governor—an excellent man, a man who had been upon the bench, a popular man. There were three candidates running. Two of them favored the retention of State-wide prohibition. One championed a return to local option. He ran a poor third.

I do not desire to speak upon this subject, and I should not have risen except for the fact that I think it is due to the earnest advocates of prohibition in my own State that I should say this much in reply to the statement of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WORKS obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in justification——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California has the floor. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will not interrupt him.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the immediate matter before the Senate is the question of the suspension of the rules; but back of it is a great moral question, and one that the Congress of the United States will be called upon to determine sooner or later, and in my judgment it will be very soon.

The saloon, or the liquor traffic, has found no champion or defender up to this time in this debate on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], while opposing prohibition, objects to being classed as the friend or the champion of the saloon. It is acknowledged to be a great evil—so great an evil that the Supreme Court of the United States has determined that it may not only be regulated by law, but may be completely destroyed, notwithstanding the fact that it may indirectly amount to confiscation of the property of those who are dealing in the traffic.

The question presented here, aside from that of the suspension of the rules, is a very simple one. Are we going to continue to license and indorse and legalize the traffic in intoxicating liquors, or are we going to destroy it?

The trouble about it is that too many of the people of this country, and particularly the business men, attempt to make it a matter of dollars and cents; but it rises far above that, Mr. President. It is a question that goes to the morals, to the character, and the integrity of the people of the United States.

It is hardly necessary in this presence to undertake to point out the evils of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. There is not a man on the floor of the Senate who does not know and recognize the fact, and admit it. The only question is whether there is some better way of dealing with this question than the absolute prohibition of the traffic.

It is said that prohibition does not prohibit. It is said by some of the business men that it hurts business. On the part of others, it is said that it is an interference with personal liberty. These are matters of small consequence as compared with the great evil itself and the consequences and results from the sale and use of intoxicating liquors.

Let us apply it, as we are expected to do by our votes on this occasion, if this amendment should be adopted, to the District of Columbia. Does any Senator mean to say that the power of this great Nation, which has complete jurisdiction over these 10 miles square of territory, can not control the liquor traffic and enforce a law prohibiting it if we shall enact it? Who shall say that it is better for this country, even if it were an admitted fact that business is benefited by this traffic that it should be improved at the expense of the morals and standing and integrity of the people of this country, and that the claim that it hurts business should be a valid objection to the enactment of legislation of this kind? But no thinking man who has knowledge of the facts and conditions will maintain for a moment that prohibition does hurt business.

In my own State there are prosperous and growing cities, the most prosperous in the State, that are prohibition cities. Take the great city of Pasadena, one of the most prosperous and growing cities in this whole country. It is a prohibition city. So is the city of Long Beach, on the coast, in Los Angeles County. It has grown in a few years to a population of something like 40,000 people. It has not hindered its growth, it has not interfered with business, but it has made the city grow and prosper beyond any other near-by city along the coast.

I do not question the motives of Senators or anybody else who oppose prohibition. It is a matter that has been one of controversy and debate for years. I wish, however, to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the sentiment in favor of prohibition in this country has grown by leaps and bounds. It has become almost a revolution. If this matter were submitted to the people of the District of Columbia, and all of the people who are interested in that question, including the women, were allowed to vote, in my judgment there would be no question as to the result. Prohibition would be voted, I am certain, by the people of this District; and, so far as I am individually concerned, I should be very glad to see the whole matter submitted to the people of the District of Columbia to determine this great question that so vitally affects their interests. That may be impracticable. All of the machinery of the election and the casting and counting of the votes would have to be provided by law in order to allow any expression of opinion on this question. If it were practicable, I for one would be perfectly willing to allow the whole question to be submitted to the people themselves.

I know it is unnecessary to cite instances or cases of the fearful effects of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors; but I should like to call the attention of the Senate to just one case that has come within my knowledge, and is typical of a great many others that have happened as a result of the traffic.

I knew a lawyer in my native State of Indiana. He was a great lawyer, a man of ability, a bright, intelligent, successful lawyer, a popular man. He had as many friends, perhaps, as any man in the community. In the beginning it used to make him brighter, more brilliant, to take a little intoxicating liquor; but it was not very long until the habit had fastened itself upon him, and I lived to see him walking the streets unkempt, ragged, and almost idiotic. His friends contributed in small amounts to keep him from want. He finally found a little place to live in a poor, dingy room in the upper story of a small building in the little town where he lived, with a flight of stairs on the outside. He reached the point where, in a drunken condition, he fell down the stairway and was killed. It was a sad end to a promising and useful life that was completely wrecked by strong drink.

What amount of money, what amount of successful business, can compensate for results like that? And his is not a single case, by any means. There are thousands of cases of that sort happening all over this country to-day as a result of this traffic.

I appeal to the Senate to allow this question to come to a vote, in order that Senators may express their views upon it and, if a majority of the Senate are in favor of legislation of this kind, that they may have the opportunity to pass this amendment. It can be defeated, not by a vote upon its merits, not by a majority vote, but by the enforcement of this rule by a vote of one-third of the Senators. That, I think, would be a misfortune. It would be simply delaying a vote that must come sooner or later on this measure. I think, for the good of the District of Columbia, for the good of this whole Nation, resulting from the example that will be given by us to-day, it would be well for us in this instance to suspend the rule and allow the Senate to express its views upon the merits of this question.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not feel willing to be silent when a question of this national importance is before the Senate, and for that reason I pray the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments to express my opinion in regard to it.

I favor prohibition, Nation-wide, State-wide, and local option, in order of preference, and certainly within the District of Columbia I wish the liquor traffic expelled. In my own State, for three-quarters of a century, under a two-thirds vote of the Senate, prohibition has been imposed by treaties with the various Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. When the State of Oklahoma was established in 1907 the people of the State made it a State-wide issue, discussed it thoroughly from end to end of the State, and decided that it was better for the people of Oklahoma to have prohibition. It resulted in some destruction of property. It resulted in some serious loss to men who had built up breweries and liquor business under the laws in western Oklahoma, and those who had established such business were compelled to give up the traffic. It was prophesied that Oklahoma City, our capital, would be greatly injured by prohibition; that the places that were occupied by saloons would not be easily occupied by other business. The contrary proved to be the fact. Immediately that prohibition went into effect these places were all occupied by legitimate business. It has had a good effect in our State, in our cities, and in our country districts, and the State on various occasions has tested its own opinion and has refused to go back to the previous system.

I am opposed to the liquor traffic generally, not only because of the evil effects of alcohol on the human organism, on the physical strength and powers of a man, but because of its evil effect upon his brain power, its evil effect upon his moral character. When a man becomes addicted to alcohol, when its poison penetrates his blood, it is a progressive poison under the law governing toxins. It is useless to say a man can quit if he wants to. The trouble is he can not want to. He becomes a victim of the habit.

I am opposed to the liquor traffic because I have observed that they do not hesitate to establish groggeries of the lowest character, with attendant houses of vice. They become centers of nefarious political activity. They group every evil element in a city and use those evil elements to promote their wicked and sinister influence in the government of the cities and throughout the States. They do not hesitate to undertake to control membership in the United States Senate. Evidence has been put before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this body within the last week offering to show the expenditure of hundred of thousands of dollars in the last election by these evil elements with a view to controlling the membership of this body.

I think the time has come when we should no longer encourage or permit a traffic which has distinguished itself as centers of vice, as centers of political corruption, a traffic which has shown itself so defiant of the law and of honest public opinion.

When you say that you can not enforce the prohibition law you mean to say that these evil elements are so defiant of the law, are so persistent in their defiance of the law, that even the sovereign power of the Government of the United States is unable to deal with it. When it comes to an issue of that character I am in favor of grappling with the force that defies the law and defies public opinion and determine where the sovereignty is, whether with God's people or with the commercialized agents of Satan.

There is another aspect. Many great properties have been built up under the sanction of the law. We have tremendous breweries in many of our great cities, with property valued at millions and millions of dollars, and naturally these men and men who are engaged in the wholesale liquor traffic are concerned not only in conserving the business which they have built up under the sanction and permission of law, but they are also ready to commercialize this traffic and enlarge their own private holdings by sending liquor into prohibition territory. They have done this over and over again, to such a degree that in my own State it has become a very great evil in some of the cities, particularly in the city of Tulsa, where recently two of the deputy marshals sent by order of the Government to search the premises of a notorious bootlegger were deliberately shot down and murdered. So strong was this liquor interest in that city that it was impossible to convict that man, and the United States district attorney withdrew from the case because, he alleged, it was being conducted as a farce. The evil influence of this traffic permeates, penetrates, and poisons government and even the fountain of justice.

I think the time has come when the people of the United States should consider the absolute destruction of the liquor traffic, and in doing so to deal with it in a spirit of temperance and of moderation. I should be perfectly willing to agree to compensate those men for the property which would be destroyed. I think it is better to adjust it upon such lines than to have the struggle proceed in so fierce a fashion and continued so long by those who are fearful of this great loss of property. Paying for the breweries, paying for the liquor interest and buying it out, would be better for the Republic, just as it would have been better for this Nation if the people of the Nation had agreed to settle black slavery by paying the price of the slaves and freeing them on that basis. Civil War was too high a price to pay, and the war which society wages on the liquor traffic, and the cost to society in the administration of justice, in punishing the crimes and misdemeanors due to the liquor traffic is greater than would be the cost of buying out the liquor business bodily.

I asked only a few moments of the time of the Senate. I do not wish to discuss this matter at any length. Every Senator here knows this question on one side and on the other side by heart. It is as old as the hills. The arguments can be marshaled on either side with perfect facility by any Senator on this floor. As for myself, I am in favor of prohibition, State wide, Nation wide, and certainly for the District in which the capital of this Nation is located, in order that we may give a testimonial to the people of the United States as to the attitude of the Senate and the House of Representatives on this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suppose the world will be a thousand years older and human nature will have to be changed very much before men ever discuss any great public question concerning which they have a great deal of feeling without, consciously or unconsciously, going to great extremes and, consciously or unconsciously, being guilty of falsehoods. Both extremes of this question illustrate that fact.

Not long ago I picked up the utterance of a very distinguished prohibitionist, and he mentioned the fact that a certain number of people in America went to their graves each year from the liquor habit. It struck me as an enormous number of people, and I thought maybe I had better look into it, and I found out that alcohol, by his account, had sent to their graves in America about 100,000 more people than had in that year died in all America. That is an illustration of the extremes to which men go on one side.

A further illustration of it is that men picture to you a condition under prohibitory laws as if the millenium were coming if you merely got rid of alcoholic stimulants. Asia Minor has been rid of alcoholic stimulants since a little while after a thousand years after Christ. Since Mohammed and his followers, with the sword in one hand and the Koran—prohibiting the use of alcoholic stimulants, even light wine—in the other. Asia Minor has set no great example for the world's imitation. Of course a man would be just as great an extremist to cite that as a reason why prohibition could not do good somewhere else as he would be to make the assertion that prohibition might bring some sort of a millenium.

Mr. President, this philosophic fact is true, that a man who is not a drunkard merely because he can not procure something wherewith to be drunk is precisely as much a drunkard as if he were lying in the gutter drunk. A man who shoots at me with the intent of murdering me and fails to accomplish his purpose because his pistol is not loaded or the hammer fails to fall is, in the eyes of God, just as much a murderer as if he killed me. Vice and virtue are inward, not outward, things. God judges by the nature of the soul.

But that does not conclude the question. That is an extreme utterance, too.

Because it is also true that there are very many people in the world who have no desire nor intent nor inner inclination to become drunkards and who have no desire nor intent to commit murder and who yet might be led into one or the other by a temptation extreme or irresistible for them. So much for the extremes upon one side of this question. Moreover, man can not see the inner intent, and must judge by the outward overt act.

Christianity did not teach prohibition. Mohammedanism did; and thus far the Christian nations of the world are not behind the Mohammedans either in civilization or in intellectual ability or industrial progress. That is not, however, because the one permitted the use of liquor and the other did not, and the man who argues either side of that proposition is necessarily also an extremist.

Now, upon the other side; if a man should rise in his place here and say that one State is the superior of another, and has fewer illiterates and fewer convicts and fewer insane than another, because the first State attempts to stop the sale of liquor and the latter does not, he is equally guilty of an extreme utterance.

I did not intend to say anything upon this question. I expected to let my vote on the resolution and amendment proposed to it speak for me. I must, however, now say something because of the fact that I have ascertained that I can not procure a transfer of my pair, and therefore there will be no other way than by speech for me satisfactorily to carry my opinion to my constituents.

In the first place, I shall vote for this motion of the Senator from Texas to suspend the rules and to pass his resolution. In the second place, I shall vote to refer the question to the people of the District of Columbia. If the motion to refer it, the referendum, is defeated, I shall still vote for the motion to suspend and to close the saloons in the District of Columbia.

Now, I want to give in a very few words my reasons for it.

In the first place, Mr. President, regardless of my individual views upon this great subject, this is a representative government, and no man has a right, except in very exceptional cases, to stand upon this floor or upon the floor of the other House and knowingly misrepresent his constituents, or if he does it he ought to lay down his office and give it back to them who gave it to him and ask a fresh vote of confidence. There are just a few exceptions to that rule. A man's constituents have no right to call upon him to violate the Constitution of the United States, because that is to violate his oath. His constituents have no right to call upon him to do that which in his opinion is immoral or unethical, because there they would call upon him to violate his duty to God. His constituents have no right to call upon him to do that which shall endanger international peace, because that is to violate the first law of the Prince of Peace.

With those three exceptions, this is a representative and not a misrepresentative Government. If I had no opinion upon this question different from that of my constituents, I should not hold my seat here in the name of the State of Mississippi and misrepresent her; and Mississippi has indicated her will upon this subject beyond all peradventure of a doubt; not once, but several times.

Independently of that, I would vote for it, anyhow. Years ago I opposed prohibition in my own State, believing that it would do no good. But, Mr. President, it has done good, especially among the negroes. I do not indorse the principle that you have a right to make other people do good by law, but the argument that prohibition does no good can hold no longer, at least in my State. In large towns where people are opposed to it it is not enforced. In country precincts it is enforced. There are acres after acres of the soil of Mississippi to-day where no man could get a drink for love or money unless he got it at the house of some friend, at his sideboard or table.

Now, I am as great an advocate of the independent development and self-evolution of the individual man as there is on this floor, or perhaps in the world. I do not believe that God permitted sin and suffering in this world for no reason at all, and I believe that his reason was that men might develop their muscles in the face of moral difficulty and obstruction and temptation, just as they develop their physical muscles in the face of physical difficulty and obstructions.

But, Mr. President, there are some exceptions to the rule of leaving men subject to temptation in order that they may grow strong. Every one of us admits the exception when we do not permit either poison or opiates to be sold ad libitum.

If I had my own way—and I have not and I never expect to have it—both extremes would equally decry me and put me down on every side. I would absolutely forbid the sale and the manufacture of distilled liquors because they are a poison, while permitting the free sale, subject only to ordinary taxes, of pure wines and pure malt liquors.

Mr. President, I love a toddy almost as well as Daniel Webster or Henry Clay ever did. I love one as well as George Washington or John Marshall ever did. I love a glass of wine as much as Shakespeare or Goethe ever did. But we must reason about everything with common sense. It never did me any permanent good nor any material good of any inherently valuable sort, and never did anybody else any, except to make him feel a little bit better for a little while. There is nobody who will dispute that.

I take issue with men who think that because you like to have a drink yourself now and then, therefore you are a hypocrite if you do not want it sold to the public. Even if a man were dead certain that it never would hurt him—and speaking for myself I do not very well see how he could be dead certain of that—he might be dead certain that it never had, but I do not see how he could be dead certain that it never would, but if he were dead certain of both propositions he might still remember there were people in the world weaker than he. He might remember St. Paul's saying, "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." I would not be willing to go to the extent of pledging myself not to eat meat, but I would be willing to pledge myself not to try to help somebody to sell meat to the brother to whom it would do hurt.

I agree with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] about one thing. I do not like this idea of emphasizing the word "open" in connection with saloons. Let us not be hypocrites. Let us not be humbugs. If it is wrong to sell whisky, it is worse to sell it secretly than openly, and it is wrong to buy it, and if it is wrong to sell it and to buy it both, it is wrong, because it is hurtful to drink it. If I had my way, in so far as distilled liquors are concerned, being certainly not helpful to anybody in the long run nor for any great time in the short run even, except under very exceptional circumstances, I would forbid their sale and manufacture, but I would permit pure beer and pure wine to be sold as freely as bread. As Thomas Jefferson said years and years ago, "If you substitute them for whisky and for other distilled liquors you would have no drunkenness."

When I say pure beer, I mean the product of hops and malt with nothing else in it except pure water, and when I say pure wine I mean the fermented juice of the grape with nothing else in it except a little sugar to correct the overacidity of the grape, or something to correct an oversweet grape, since some southern grapes are too sweet otherwise to make wine. I would so define both in the statute. You might as well shoot peas at the rock of Gibraltar, however, as to bring into this great controversy a midway opinion like that. Both sides would agree only upon one thing, and that would be to carry me out and crucify me. And yet it was Christ's opinion that good wine might be made and given to one's fellows.

I merely mention my opinion, because it might be a curiosity to most of you to find somebody who stands midway between the two extremes.

Mr. President, I think now and then, however, that men in their desire to do good by law are dishonest. Some time ago one of the States of this Union—overnight you might say—passed a prohibition law forbidding the sale and manufacture of malt or vinous or distilled liquors within its boundary. Men in that State had hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in breweries and distilleries. Men in that State had just finished paying the State for their annual license, which was permission to sell for the next succeeeding 12 months, and that State, which shall be nameless here, did not compensate the men for putting their distilleries and breweries on the junk pile; it did not even return to the men from whom they had collected the year's license the day before the law was passed the money which they had paid.

The highest form of morality can not afford to steal, and it ought not to steal; it ought not to take money under false pretenses. If it does not take it under false pretenses, if it takes it under a legitimate pretense, if by its own action it does away with the consideration for which the money was given, then it ought to restore it. In the mother country, at any rate, it has always been an axiom that compensation must be made to direct sufferers by a change of legislation.

Mr. President, I am willing to vote for this proposition outside of the fact that Mississippi wants me to vote for it, because I have come to the conclusion—and I have come to it after much standing upon the other side; I am one of the few men in Mississippi who ever did oppose prohibition who could be elected constable—but I have come to the conclusion that in some respects I was wrong about it, because it has done some good. It has not been a panacea; it has not brought about the millenium; it has not abolished drunkenness; it has not decreased crime to any marked extent; it has not, of course, kept lunatics out of the lunatic asylum; it has not done any sort of impossible thing that only extremists expected from it; but it has done a good deal of good; and I know that while liquor may do men of temperate temperaments some harm and does do men of intemperate temperaments a great deal of harm, it never did me or anybody else in the long run any good worth contending for. It requires very little self-sacrifice to do without it. So I do not see how anybody can be hurt by doing his best to do without it, and I do see how some people can be helped.

I do not believe it is hurtful to me personally, as a rule; I think, upon the contrary, it is a very good thing for me now and then; but I do think that a man ought not to measure the world's corn in his half bushel; and when you look at it the world over, no frank human being, I do not care what his opinions are, can contend for one moment that the good that it does in the world is to be held in the slightest comparison with the evil which it does. I am perfectly willing to see the experiment tried, if it can be, and tried on me and all others. It never has been really and efficaciously tried on any nation of the white European race.

I know that perhaps this may be said upon the other side, and it may perhaps be true; I do not know why it is, but it happens to be true that almost in proportion as races upon this globe consume alcohol they stand near the head in culture, industry, and civilization, but I think it is a great deal for the same reason that the North American Indians were physically a great, strong people; it was because all of them that were not physically strong died before they reached the age of 21. So that when our Scotch brethren go up against their Scotch whisky for generation after generation and sip it at their breakfast and dinners, as we do wine, and yet when you find a Scotchman, anywhere from the Arctic Circle to the mouth of the Ganges, he is found at the head of whatever enterprise there happens to be where he happens to be; when your German has impressed himself upon the entire world, and your Dutchman, too, both consuming a great deal of alcohol; when your Frenchman, less intemperate than either, has not impressed himself quite so much; when your Spaniard, who is a very abstemious man, almost a totally abstemious man; and your Italian, who is very temperate, have not taken the stand that these others—Scotch, and English, and Irish, and North German—have taken; and when across in the prohibition country which Mohammed made totally prohibition by a decree of the Koran, they, too, have not stepped to the very front in civilization, notwithstanding the fact that they do not consume alcohol at all, I do not think it is because of the consumption of alcohol that one is high and the other is not so high; but I think it may possibly be due to the fact that if the natural law of evolution and development were left to work out the survival of the fit and the extinction of the unfit alcohol would help to work it, especially the extinction of the unfit. Alcohol does from generation to generation destroy the nervously and stomachically weak, and in that way has perhaps had something to do with placing these races, or, rather, the surviving individuals of them, at the place they are.

That, however, is a scientific sort of argument that is very un-Christian in its character and can not very well afford to be adopted as a basis for legislation by an enlightened legislative body in an enlightened country. All that argument, I say, I am acquainted with, because I have read it from scientists of every description. It is especially science after the German manner.

The same school of scientists, by the way, have contended that you ought not to be trying to save lunatics, because if you cure them they may go out and marry other lunatics, or even without it may be encouraged to multiply lunatics in the next generation or men and women with a tendency toward lunacy. They contend that you had just better let them die off like the brutes in the field.

Mr. President, I want to tell you, though, why I am in favor of referring this matter to the people of the District of Columbia. I want to give you a little illustration from my own recollection. The State of Tennessee adopted a prohibition law without submitting it to the people. The cities of Memphis, Knoxville, and Nashville did not want it. The consequence was that the city of Memphis deliberately elected a ticket to rule that city, every man of whom had to pledge himself beforehand not to enforce the law.

Memphis is my native town, and I used to go there very frequently, until my brother and I sold what property we had there. I went up there once after prohibition went into effect. Prior to that time the saloons were closed upon Sunday, at any rate, in Memphis. I happened to be there on a Sunday morning, owing to the delay between trains, when I was going to Pine Bluff, Ark. When I went out I saw something that I had never before seen in all my life—men upon the sidewalk on Sunday asking you to come in to buy a drink. Selling it upon Sunday was no greater crime than selling it upon any other day. The saloon doors were wide open; and these men were out there just as you see people in front of certain little country town clothing stores calling people in and saying, "Do you not want to come in and buy some clothing?"

From that experience and from a great deal of other knowledge of that description, I have arrived at the conclusion that you can not enforce a law of this sort except in a community where a majority of the people themselves want the law, so as to impress upon the minority the fact that the law must be observed. Otherwise the majority is not going to respect the law, and you will not decrease drunkenness, but you will only increase lying and perjury and concealment and deadfalls and the bad habit of ignoring and defying law. It is otherwise where a majority, especially a large majority, want the law.

Take my own county in Mississippi, for example. In my county the prohibition law is almost perfectly enforced. At one time there were a few people in the chief town—not a very large town—of the county who wanted to defy the law, but after a little time, under the administration of officers elected to enforce the law, they stopped violating it. Mississippi has no very large cities.

Of course we have the power and we have the right, the legal right, to enact this amendment into law without any referendum to the people of the District of Columbia, who are to be affected by it. Senators ask, and ask very pertinently, why it is that law after law is passed here without any referendum, and yet when it comes to this question a referendum is sought. The answer is, because such a law as is now proposed depends peculiarly, if not altogether, for its efficacy and for its enforcement upon the public opinion of the people who are affected by it. That is the answer and that is sufficient. In other cases, especially in the case of criminal laws, directed against recognized crimes—crimes per se—the consensus of mankind is with you, public opinion is with you and itself stands behind the enforcement of the law; but if you have a majority of the people who think that you put a law upon them that they do not want, and which prohibits something in their opinion not in and of itself criminal, then they not only will not add their voice to its enforcement, but they will affirmatively use their influence in favor of its nonenforcement. So that I warn you now that if you want this law to be of any efficacy it must be after the people of the District of Columbia vote for it.

I am aware that there are some from my own section of the country who will say that that would bring the negro vote into it. That could be very easily cured. All you would have to do would be to provide that those who vote upon the question shall be those who can read and write, those who have never been convicted of a felony or of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, and those who have paid the District of Columbia such taxes as have been assessed against them. In that way you will have a white majority and there will not be any race question involved.

Mr. President, I expected to say nothing, because I intended my vote to indicate my position, and there were reasons, to be perfectly frank about it, why I should say nothing. I had been an antiprohibitionist in my own State 20 years ago, and no politician or man in public life likes to be accused of inconsistency, no matter when or how he changes his opinion. That is one reason; and the next reason is, frankly, because I like a glass of wine myself now and then and I like a toddy now and then. I do not think the fact that I do has anything to do with what my vote should be upon this question, especially when I know that neither the one nor the other has ever done me any particular good, though neither has ever done me any particular harm or ever interfered with the performance of a private or a public duty.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this question involves a duty not only to our constituents in our respective States but a peculiar duty to our constituents in this District. I regret that this question must come before the Senate in this form. I have been taught by older Senators here that it is necessary to protect appropriation bills against amendments containing general legislation. I have tried time and time again to add such amendments to appropriation bills, and have had those amendments ruled out on points of order, and, I think, properly so. Every one of us must stand for the appropriation bills. The supply and appropriation bills are essential to the running of the Government, and if we permit general legislation to be tacked upon such bills we may be placed in a position where we must either neglect the Government or be compelled to vote for a measure which we oppose. If we pass a supply appropriation bill with general legislation upon it, we may incorporate in the bill a principle which is obnoxious to the Chief Magistrate of this country, as has been the case on former occasions, and compel his veto because of that objectionable principle. However, the Rules Committee, who are particularly charged with the responsibility of looking after the rules of this body, if any such rules exist, have seen fit to recommend to Senators that they adopt this motion and suspend the rules of the Senate. I have great respect for that committee. They evidently consider that this proposition is of such vital importance that it warrants the setting aside of one of the most important rules of this body.

I am urged again to vote for the motion, because, so far as I have ascertained from my limited experience here, the only rules that are enforced in this body, or that exist, so far as I know, are rules to obstruct legislation rather than to facilitate it. I have occasionally, on asking the advice of some learned Senators who have been here a great many years, been referred to a rule which might enable me to secure the enactment of an item of legislation, but that rule had no sooner been discovered than there were twenty other rules called into existence which would cancel that rule.

I may vote against the proposed amendment, but I intend to vote for the pending motion because it appears to be the only means by which a fair test vote of the sentiment of this body can be obtained. I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is entitled to a vote on this question. I would prefer that the vote be had separately, but that seems impossible.

I voted that a majority, and not two-thirds, should determine the question of the suspension of the rules. The Senate has determined that it requires a two-thirds vote, but no matter what vote it requires, I think the Senator from Texas is entitled to have a vote on the main issue, and that is whether the proposed amendment shall become a part of the appropriation bill. It is a question which must be determined sooner or later by this body, and there is no use of dodging the issue. The issue will have to be met sooner or later on the question of whether or not we favor national prohibition. If I favored national prohibition, I would favor prohibition in the District, without consideration of the views or wishes of its residents.

I believe it the duty of a Senator, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has stated, to try to represent the wishes of his constituents where such action does not conflict with the Senator's moral obligation. I want to say that in my State this question has never been an issue; it has never even attracted the attention of the people of the State. I do not know what their views are on the subject. I know that in this body and throughout this country there are good people who differ as to the proper way to restrain and govern the liquor traffic. I do not know who is right; I have not given much study to the question; and I am not prepared to set up my opinion against either the opinion of the Senator from Missouri or the opinion of the Senator from Texas. I know, however, that I believe in local self-government throughout. I am sure that all of the people of my State believe in local self-government. I believe the question involved here is one which should be submitted to each State, to each county, and to each community. It is one of the peculiar questions affecting civic life which is always submitted to the community. It is a common and accepted practice to so submit it.

The distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] said that we are the legislature of the District, the board of aldermen of the District, and that the legislature of a State has a right to pass a prohibition bill; but let me state the distinction. A legislature is elected by the people; a city council is elected by the vote of the people of the municipality, and their election depends upon the sentiment of the people of that community. We are the lawmakers for the District; we are its legislature and its city council, and yet they had nothing to do with our election. They have no way of impressing upon us their sentiments or their ideas. I believe, nevertheless, that they should be considered in such matters of legislation. I am not prepared to say that they should be allowed to vote, but I do say that they should have the right of every American citizen who is affected by legislation, and that is the right of petition, the right to express their opinions.

We can not say because the National Government is situated in the city of Washington that the National Government owns the city of Washington. Why, there are thousands of people that we have invited here, that we have brought here, that we have induced to buy property here, to live in this town; and is it possible that we shall say that they shall not even have the right to petition us as to what laws shall govern them; that they shall have no voice in this peculiar legislation; that they have no interest in the affairs or the legislation affecting them? It seems to me that would be intolerable. It seems to to me that it is unjust and unreasonable; that it is an arbitrary use of power.

Following those principles of self-government, which I believe in throughout, I will vote to suspend the rules, and I will vote for any prohibition amendment to this bill which will go into effect after the same has been properly approved in the District.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914; and, on page 29, I read these words, among various other matters:

As the various States vote "dry" the operation of the bootlegger grows larger.

Then, on page 128, in an abstract of the seizures of illicit distilleries, I find that the State of Georgia heads the list with 867 seizures—a dry State.

As for my little reference to Georgia and to South Carolina, I hesitate somewhat, and would not say anything further except for the fact that the distinguished Senator from Georgia took me somewhat to task. I was a guest at Atlanta, Ga., that splendid, metropolitan, thriving city that kindled the very blood in me. I said that in Georgia the prohibition law was violated. I do not say what I heard, but, if Georgia has a prohibition law, then I say what I know—that in the city of Atlanta it is daily violated.

How? There is a cigar shop entrance with a swinging door. "What do you sell behind?" "Step in and see." Schlitz, or any other beer you want. "What is the difference between the Atlanta Schlitz," I asked, "and any other?" I never drink beer, but I was curious to know. I asked, "What is the difference between the Georgia Schlitz and the Schlitz of New York, New Jersey, or St. Louis, which prides herself upon it?" The man held up a bottle, and to all appearances to me it was the genuine Schlitz. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has the second time admonished the galleries to obey the rules of the Senate. Another violation will result in the clearing of the galleries.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then, Mr. President, I did refer to South Carolina, that splendid valiant State I have heard about since I was a boy, and under the hospitable roof of many of those loyal, grand South Carolinians have I had the delights of life. I wandered through the delightful, historic city of Charleston. I had a desire to go out on the bay. I had heard of the beauties of the Battery, and all that. I walked out there and saw the glories of Charleston Bay. I walked on the Battery. I saw, far distant, Fort Sumter, Fort Moultrie, Castle Pickney, and all those places that I had heard so much about. I then wandered up that historic street, passing many of those beautiful homes, until I came to a superb-looking, typical, hospitable, southern hotel, with columns that would fairly rival those in front of our Treasury. It was delightful to contemplate. A swinging door bade me in. I walked in. I saw many delightful gentlemen and many superb ladies. Unfortunately, time would not permit me to tarry long. I was due back here in Washington to perform my duties. I went on a sad official mission. We had a party of several temperance Senators. I said to a gentleman at the threshold of the door: "Would it be possible to buy whisky here?" "No, sir; we are a prohibition State. The only way you can get it is at the dispensary." "What is the dispensary? Is it a medical institution?" "Oh, no," said he; "look right across yonder," and there I saw a 16-foot pine board marked "Dispensary No. 1."

I did not go in, but I stepped from the desk a little way, when a good Samaritan, a splendid type of a southerner, said, "My dear sir, do you see that beautiful palm garden there?" Ah, it brought me right back to the Pan American. "Yes," said I. Said he: "Just walk in there." I walked in there, and to the right was a door, being very much used, labeled "Commercial Club." I looked in, and, as God is my judge, there is no such sumptuously fitted, velvet-upholstered saloon in the city of Washington or elsewhere. [Laughter.] I went in there and they were doing a land-office business. Three bartenders were busy. I said: "How is this? I thought this was a prohibition State." He said: "It is a prohibition State. It is against the law to sell whisky. Nobody pretends to sell it, yet many do it." Said I: "How do you manage it?" "How do we manage it? We go on and sell, and once a month we are lugged up and we pay $50. We pay $600 a year for our license, and we have been doing that for years."

So that is my justification for drawing in Georgia, that superb, grand, empire State, and for bringing in glorious, historic South Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey presents two statements to sustain his charge that prohibition in Georgia is a failure.

He refers to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to show that there have been a number of arrests made for illicit distilling in the State. Lest that statement should carry a false impression to Senators I wish to say that it is true that in the mountains of Georgia—and we have 20 counties almost entirely mountainous—there always has been a certain amount of illicit stilling carried on upon a very small scale. A mountain farmer will take a little still over near a spring and still a few bushels of corn. The actual output of the 800 persons who were arrested would not equal the amount of liquor that had been sold in the past by a single barroom of the more than 100 located in each of a number of the cities of the State. If all those barrooms have been suppressed by prohibition, it can not be claimed that because a few gallons of green corn whisky were made in the mountains prohibition is a failure.

But the Senator from New Jersey gives another reason why he says it has been a failure. He offers himself as a witness, and testifies that during his visit to Atlanta he found a place where, back of a door, not he but somebody else might have obtained a bottle of beer.

Why, if there is still a place in Atlanta where so royal a guest and so enterprising a citizen as the Senator from New Jersey might find a single stand in which to discover a bottle of "splits"—I do not know exactly what that means; I suppose it is some kind of beer——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. "Schlitz."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept the correction. I do not know whether it is "splits," in consequence of what it does, or "Schlitz," in consequence of its name. But if the Senator from New Jersey found one such place in the city of Atlanta, still I say that his charge that prohibition in the State is a failure is not sustained.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I took the general view that the State was Atlanta and that Atlanta was the State. I took the magnificent statesmen that emanated from there, and I knew the splendid hotels that have been built there.

The Senator says I took a bottle of Schlitz. No; I did not taste a bottle of Schlitz, for, as I said, I never drink beer; but I will say, Mr. President, with all the graciousness of my heart, that I would not belittle the magnificent hospitality of the Senator from Georgia nor the hospitality of that splendid State, with its splendid men and its glorious and lovely women. You did not try to tempt me with Schlitz, but you offered me something better. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator does not mean by that that I offered it to him; he means the city of Atlanta. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that when so distinguished a guest as the Senator from New Jersey reached our city of 200,000 inhabitants some citizen would offer him something with which to quench his thirst if the citizen thought the Senator from New Jersey desired it. But still, even if that be true, it is no argument to establish the claim that prohibition has been a failure. It has closed the barrooms; it has stopped the sale of liquor; it has stopped the jug trade out of the city of Atlanta and most of the other cities of Georgia. I am here to say, from watching its results carefully, that the year after it was put into effect it lessened the waste of physical energy, it increased the funds in the hands of those of limited means, it added to the receipts of the department stores and the stores that sold food, it bettered the condition of many a humble home in that city—and with that result I protest it is not a failure.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m., Friday, January 15, 1915) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, January 16, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 15, 1915.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Frederick L. Siddons to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Keep us, O God our Father, in touch with Thee throughout the remaining hours of this day, that we enter not into temptation, but keep close to duty's call, that at its close we may lie down to sweet repose, cradled in the arms of Omnipotence and in the profound faith that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN, OF NEW JERSEY.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, February 14, 1915, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. LEWIS J. MARTIN, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order which the Clerk has just read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

RELATIONS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT (H. DOC. NO. 1488).

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a House document an article prepared by Mr. John A. Johnson, an attorney in the District of Columbia, on the relation of the District of Columbia to the Federal Government. It is a matter that is being very much discussed in the Congress, and in which we were all interested, and I think this article will throw some light on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to print as a public document an article prepared by Mr. Johnson on the relation of the District of Columbia to the Federal Government. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this express the opinion of Mr. Johnson or is it an historical record?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is more an historical record than an opinion of anyone.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection if it is an historical record, but if it is simply the opinion of Mr. Johnson I would object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. GREEN of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the conferees be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement of the conferees be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1270).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6060) "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 18, 20, 22, 25, 26, 38, 58, 62, 74, and 95.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 21, 27, 29, 30, 32, 33, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 59, 60, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and in lieu thereof insert the following: "practice polygamy or believe in or advocate the practice of polygamy"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and insert in lieu thereof the following: "treaties, conventions or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 3 and 4 of the matter inserted by the Senate strike out "and aliens returning after temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and insert a period after the word "guests," on page 11, line 21; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the amendment strike out "and" and insert "or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and in lieu thereof insert a period; and on page 13, line 18, strike out "for" and insert "For"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 18, after "commissions," insert "to an alien coming into the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 19, after "alien," insert "coming into the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by the Senate insert the following: "or otherwise"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "thereto," in the last line of the amendment, insert the following: "and the provisions of this section shall be excepted from that portion of section 38 of this act which provides that this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, or the act approved August 2, 1882, entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea,' and amendments thereto"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After "officers," in line 3 of the amendment, insert: "at the discretion of the Secretary of Labor and under such regulations as he may prescribe"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After "inspectors," in line 3 of the amendment, insert: "at the discretion of the Secretary of Labor and under such regulations as he may prescribe"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and insert in lieu thereof the following: "any alien who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law; any alien who shall have entered or who shall be found in the United States in violation of this act, or in violation of any other law of the United States, the methods and measure of proof and the destination of deportation to be those specified in the law violated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and insert in lieu thereof "or who enters without inspection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate and insert in lieu thereof the following: "by the master"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

E. D. SMITH,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the House bill (H. R. 6060) regulating the immigration of aliens submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect agreed upon and recommended in the conference report.

The principal changes in existing law proposed by the Senate to which the managers on the part of the House agree are as follows:

First. The amendment which increases the head tax on adult aliens to $6, coupled with the entire exemption from head tax of minor children accompanying a parent.

Second. So much of the Senate amendment No. 24 as strikes out the House provision prohibiting the exclusion of the wife or minor children of American citizens.

Third. The amendment which substitutes a new section 11 submitted by the Secretary of Labor to take the place of the House provision relative to surgical examinations on board ships engaged in the transportation of aliens.

Fourth. The amendment which denies to alien prostitutes the privilege of obtaining United States citizenship through marriage.

Fifth. The amendment which requires transportation companies carrying immigrants from Mexico or Canada to the United States to provide suitable landing places.

The principal amendments proposed by the Senate from which the managers on the part of the Senate recede are as follows:

First. The amendment excluding persons of the African race.

Second. The amendment striking the word "solely" from the House provision which extends exemption from the illiteracy test to refugees from religious persecution.

Third. So much of Senate amendment No. 24 as exempts certain Belgians from the illiteracy test and certain other provisions of the law.

The principal amendments proposed by the Senate to which the managers on the part of the House agree with amendments are as follows:

First. Senate amendment No. 11: The managers on the part of the House agree to so much of this amendment as strikes out of the polygamy clause the words objected to which require an alien to admit his belief in the practice of polygamy as a condition precedent to his exclusion on account of that belief. The managers on the part of the Senate agree to an amendment to Senate amendment No. 11, proposed by the House managers, the effect of which is as follows: A change in the words inserted by the Senate so as to exclude an alien who believes in the practice of polygamy, whether he admits it or not, in contradistinction to his exclusion on account of an abstract article in his creed.

Second. To the amendments of the Senate which provide a double inspection and a double medical examination for immigrants, the managers on the part of the House agree with amendments giving the Secretary of Labor discretion in the matter. To these amendments the managers on the part of the Senate agree.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, there has been exhaustive debate on the controverted propositions in this bill so often that I presume the House is ready to vote upon the question. Therefore I move the adoption of the report, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his motion for the previous question for a couple of minutes?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to point out to the House a couple of amendments which have been agreed to by the conferees, which shows the restrictive policy that actuates the conferees in submitting this bill. One of the amendments proposed by the Senate is amendment No. 7, which struck out the exemption of the payment of the head tax of $6 by aliens who have in accordance with law declared their intention to become citizens of the United States on their return to this country from a sojourn abroad. I can not understand the policy of anyone doing that, unless he believes in the policy of America for Americans alone, of placing a head tax of $6 on those future American citizens who have been domiciled here and who have already declared their intentions to become citizens of this country and who temporarily depart for a visit abroad. The Senate conferees struck out that exemption and the House conferees have agreed to the Senate amendment.

Further, as showing the restrictive character of those offering this bill, I direct the attention of the House to the Senate amendment No. 23, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens and aliens returning after temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and under such conditions as he may prescribe.

That amendment provides for the admission of aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, returning after temporary absence, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. They have restricted that provision so that only those aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States can be admitted, who are admitted within the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. It has been called to my attention that in the administration of the present immigration law aliens who have lived here as long as 10 years, and who have gone abroad for a brief span of three months, on their return to this country, without any objection as to their physical qualifications, have been absolutely forbidden to land, when they have lived here and intend to make this their home for all time. I can not see how anyone can declare that to be the proper American spirit which should prompt an American Congress in the treatment of those who have not relinquished their American domicile upon their return here after a temporary absence.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It will only take a moment. Upon what theory do the conferees leave out the right of a citizen to bring in his wife or minor children? That is amendment numbered 24.

Mr. BURNETT. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. It is in reference to amendment numbered 24. Upon what theory do the conferees leave out of the bill the provision which authorizes a citizen to have his wife or minor children brought into the country?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman, the Department of Labor makes this objection to that:

The present practice of the department is to regard wives as admissible. It is suggested that, in view of the very large number of mentally defective children encountered in administering the immigration law, the exception here proposed will have very far-reaching effects—will result in introducing into the country strains of mental deficiency, both extensive and serious.

In addition to the suggestion they make, the bill says "that nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States." Now, if those words were left there, an alien might come here and, after remaining for five years, file his declaration and bring in his son, an anarchist, 20 years 11 months and 29 days old. Many of the very worst of that class of people are the younger ones. Besides, the prostitute daughters of an American citizen who had become naturalized, who had never come here, if that language were left there, could come in, and for that reason and for the reason suggested by the Department of Labor, that many of these people come here infected with the very worst kind of contagious diseases, and because they were children of an American citizen, would have to be admitted in violation of all these other wise provisions in the law.

Mr. MANN. One more question in the same connection. An American citizen, a person who comes here and takes out naturalization papers and becomes an American citizen, is it or not considered that his wife thereby becomes an American citizen and is entitled to entry regardless of the act?

Mr. BURNETT. The decisions of the courts are at variance in regard to that question. We have taken care of those who are afflicted further on by language which allows those who have declared their intention to become naturalized citizens to have those children come in and have hospital treatment, and I think, upon the whole, that the bill takes care of that class of citizens in every respect.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire to cite one case and ask how this bill will operate in that particular. Here is a citizen of the United States who has a minor child. This child has no relative or friends whatever except in the United States. Does the gentleman think this bill would operate to exclude that minor child and leave her upon the hands of strangers in the cold world in Europe when her parents were in the United States and were American citizens?

Mr. BURNETT. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The law provides further on that these people can be brought in to be treated. These are matters that are left in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, in regard to the admission of even those under 16 years of age; and if they are children of these people, they can be admitted under the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, as the bill now provides.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. I would like to have an answer to the question from the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. There is a distinction between the wife of a naturalized alien who married him prior to his naturalization and the wife of a naturalized alien who married him since his naturalization. If the wife married him prior to his naturalization and he comes out here and becomes naturalized, then it is a question whether he may send for his wife that he has left behind pending his naturalization and bring her in here notwithstanding that she may not be admissible under the immigration law. Court decisions vary, but the department regards such wives as admissible. Wives who marry naturalized citizens are, of course, admissible, and continue so under the proposed law unless they are of dissolute character. Now, if the gentleman would have it otherwise he would find himself faced by this situation: That a man might come here into the United States and after a residence of five years become naturalized and then send for his prostitute wife or prostitute minor daughter and bring them into the United States. I am sure that the gentleman from Ohio would not advocate anything like that.

Mr. BATHRICK. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts knows that I have been a consistent and persistent advocate of this measure——

Mr. GARDNER. Absolutely.

Mr. BATHRICK. And a friend of this legislation.

Mr. GARDNER. I did not mean to put it that way. I endeavored to make clear to the House exactly the distinction between one who has attained citizenship by naturalization and one who has citizenship because born to it.

Mr. BATHRICK. I want to state one specific case a little more thoroughly. There is in the hospital at the port of New York at the present time a girl 11 years of age, the daughter of a citizen of the United States, who has been a citizen for over seven years and a very honorable citizen, too. That daughter was brought to this hospital and is being treated. She has no relative in Europe, she has no place to go, none to whom she can turn except her parents in the United States. I want to ask the gentleman if leaving out this clause, which I was glad to see in this bill, would preclude the admission of that daughter?

Mr. GARDNER. Provided she was born before her father's naturalization. She would not be admissible unless she were physically and morally qualified.

Mr. BATHRICK. Suppose she was born after her father's naturalization?

Mr. GARDNER. Assuming that she is physically qualified to come in.

Mr. BATHRICK. I am going to state another fact. I have investigated this case thoroughly respecting the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. One Secretary of Labor decided that that child being the offspring of a citizen of the United States was a citizen of the United States and entitled to entry if she was conceived in the United States.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Now, another Secretary of Labor decided that she would not be a citizen of the United States unless she was born in the United States. That illustrates the conflict of opinion and the difference of the exercise of the discretion of these Secretaries of Labor on these very important matters. Now, this was so drawn that these children who had no one to depend on except their citizen parents in the United States could come into this country, and I think they should come in, but, as it appears to be now, a parent who is loyal to the ideals of American citizenship will be prevented from bringing children into the United States.

Mr. GARDNER. Only if those children were born before naturalization. And if you have it otherwise, the Secretary of Labor tells us that it will result in introducing into the country strains of mental deficiency, both extensive and serious. I do not know about the gentleman's particular case. I should want to look into the evidence myself.

Mr. BATHRICK. I cite this case myself——

Mr. GARDNER. To quote the letter of the Secretary of Labor addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Immigration February 21, 1914:

> The circuit court of appeals and the Supreme Court have held that the minor children of a naturalized citizen born prior to the parents' naturalization are aliens within the meaning of the immigration law. (U. S. ex rel. Di Bienzo v. Rodgers, 185 Fed., 334; Zartarian v. Billings, 204 U. S., 170.)

Clearly they ought to be aliens. Now, let us see what the practical situation is. If a man has become a naturalized citizen that means he has been five years in this country. If he is trying to bring in his children, it means that they have managed to get along without him, for five years at least, on the other side. There is no such hardship as the gentleman describes in making them continue to get along without him until such time as they are cured of all dangerous diseases.

Mr. BATHRICK. In this instance this child was cared for by her grandparents, and when they died she was thrown upon the world.

Mr. GARDNER. You have got to have those hardships if you want to keep away from this country aliens with mental deficiency strains. Like a great many other laws, the immigration statutes often are the occasion of great hardships, but they prevent even greater hardships. One resident of my district was obliged to pay his daughter's expenses in Liverpool for over a year trying to get her cured of trachoma. These cases are arising all the time. All these restrictions are put in to safeguard American children, and it is a matter of regret if sometimes they run counter to the merciful inclinations which we feel toward foreign children. Nevertheless these restrictions must be maintained.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman please inform the House the reason for striking out the words "and aliens returning after temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile"?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. We allow those who have filed their first papers to come. But we believe it would not be right to allow those who come and perhaps go into some industry and build a little shack, and get a frying pan or two, and then want to go away and then come back, any such privileges of evading the provisions of the law. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] referred to that, and he thought it would be a hardship on the man who had stayed here for 5 or 10 years and had not declared his intention of becoming a citizen and who had then returned to Europe not to be permitted to come back. But, Mr. Speaker, as has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], we ought to be trying to take care of our own, and certainly that man who has been here for 5 or 10 years and has never declared his intention even, has never filed his first papers, which he could file the very day he arrived here, ought not to have any more privileges than any ordinary alien.

Mr. STAFFORD. Even the man who has declared his intention to become a citizen, after his sojourn abroad, has no right to come in here. Under this provision it will be in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor to exclude him. The man who has expressed his intention to become a future citizen, and who goes abroad for a couple of months, when he comes back has no right to land here. The Secretary of Labor on his ipse dixit can say he has no right.

Mr. BURNETT. It leaves it with the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman also opposed such a liberal provision as exempting him from the literacy test when the bill was before the House.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I want the chairman of the committee, if possible, to explain why section 11 or amendment 50 was struck from the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the question of the gentleman. I think that section 11 as the House passed it was a wise provision. It provided for matrons and surgeons on the ship bringing immigrants. It raised a perfect storm among the other nationalities. They said it would bring about confusion and division of authority on their own ships, and that we ought not to be permitted to put these people on their ships. Now we have provided for them, I think, by the addition at the end of that section of a provision to the effect that when those ships reach our port they may be detained until this very kind of an inspection and all other inspections can be made. That reaches the trouble, it seems to me, by allowing the inspection before the ships are ever permitted to land, and at the same time does not bring about that conflict of authority with other nationalities.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield me a minute?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BURNETT. For a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; for a question.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I notice there has been a change in amendment 17 in reference to treaties, conventions, and agreements.

Mr. BURNETT. No. 17—it was merely by inserting——

Mr. MOORE. The words "conventions or" seem to have been inserted.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; "treaties, conventions, or agreements"; and it was merely for the purpose of covering cases that "conventions" only could reach that that word was put in—"treaties, conventions, or agreements."

Mr. MOORE. That was to conform to the phraseology later on?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman explain, before he moves the previous question, whether the insertion of these treaty and convention paragraphs means that the treaties had with other nations—"treaties, conventions, and agreements"—with respect to passports are to be observed, so far as the rights of the foreign nations are concerned?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. MOORE. That is to say, if any question like that of the Jewish question coming up from Russia should be raised, there would have to be a respect for the treaty or agreement had with that nation, and notice of abrogation would have to be given in the usual way?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. MOORE. Would that apply to any agreement had with respect to the Chinese and Japanese?

Mr. BURNETT. I think "treaties, conventions, and agreements" would apply to what the gentleman understands is a gentlemen's agreement as to Japanese.

Mr. MOORE. Yes. There is a gentlemen's agreement there, though I understand there is a dispute as to its binding qualities.

Mr. GALLAGHER rose.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] one minute before I ask for a vote on the previous question, and will yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, Judge GOLDFOGLE, and at the end of that time I shall move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the chairman of the committee with reference to section 11. Personally I am opposed to all legislation of this character, because I believe it to be undemocratic and unfair. But if there was any one feature of this bill that ought to have received the most careful consideration it is that which provides for the medical inspection of these immigrants. The very fact that this section was stricken out shows the powerful influence exerted in the premises by the combined agencies of the shipping trust. That section was objected to by the shipping trust, and everybody knows that the shipping trust has been more directly responsible for the objectionable conditions prevailing in matters of immigration than any other particular influence. The greatest complaints at all of the different ports relate to the time allotted to medical inspection, which is woefully insufficient. And if there is any one thing that should be most carefully safeguarded it is the medical inspection of those people.

Poor but refined immigrants from Poland, Italy, and other parts of Europe, through the inefficient system of inspection that now obtains in the administration of the immigration laws of the country, have been subjected to great annoyance and irritation on their arrival here. All this could be effectively avoided if section 11 of this bill were permitted to become law. No better people, no more useful citizens can be found anywhere in these United States than the Italians and Poles who have cast their lot in the great city of Chicago and contributed so much that is good and meritorious to its civic virtue and industrial enterprise.

I can not fathom the animus back of legislation of this character when I realize what great good has been done to my city in particular and the country, as a whole, by the industry, frugality, and thrift of the sturdy sons of patriotic Poland and cultured Italy. Wherever industry requires the touchstone of labor, the brain, the brawn, and the genius of the Poles and Italians are there to enhance our wealth and conserve our progress. In view of these indisputable facts this legislation—unjustly discriminative in its logical effects—is a formidable menace to the welfare of our country and a distinct handicap to her financial, commercial, and industrial progress.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to prolong the discussion on this report or to discuss in detail—for that could not be done in the few minutes allotted to me—the points in difference between the two Houses; but I desire particularly to emphasize again the views so often expressed on this floor in opposition to the literacy test.

It has been well remarked that the test neither determined the fitness nor the character of the alien. It is a test that is un-American and undemocratic. It has been condemned in veto messages by two Presidents of the United States. An attempt was made in the last House to have the President's veto overruled, and that effort failed. Now it is again proposed that this literacy test be injected into the immigration bill.

The fact is that the conferees on the part of the House are not unanimous on this proposition. Two of the conferees, known to favor the literacy test, have, it is true, agreed with the Senate conferees. One of the conferees on the part of the House, who has always been a very earnest and consistent opponent of the literacy test, of course has disagreed with the conferees. The entire metropolitan press of New York and, generally speaking, the press of the larger cities, have condemned the literacy test. These cities from which this condemnation so largely comes abound with immigrants and those who have been of the immigrant classes and who have come from every part of the habitable world. The people of these cities have not been apprehensive of the imaginary dangers that have been mooted and have not shared the fears that the advocates of the measure have expressed on the floor of this House about the influx of immigration. They have rather found that immigration has been in many ways helpful to the land and served to promote the general upbuilding and welfare and contributed to the prosperity of our country.

The hand of toil is still required to further develop the resources of our land. I do not wish to repeat, but desire only in a word to refer to what I so often said during debates here on the immigration question, that the American boy is fast leaving the farm and is allured to the cities, and there is consequent necessity, especially in these times when crops are getting less and cost of living is ever on the increase, to bring to the agricultural districts those who are willing to work on the farm and till and cultivate the soil. We still require those who must help to dig the mines, tunnel the mountains, lay tracks, build railroads, and do the hundred and one things that enter into manual labor. If the immigrant coming from abroad, hopefully looking forward to making his way decently upward and onward in our communities and to assimilate with us in our American life, is healthy in mind and body, is law-abiding, is free from those objections which under existing law would make him excludable, what reason, except for arbitrary restriction, can be offered to his admission to this country, where he can, through the multitude of our agencies which go to the Americanization of the foreigner and through the manifold educational opportunities we afford almost everywhere, though he come here illiterate, in time qualify himself for worthy citizenship, as have the thousands and thousands of others in the past whose situation has been similar.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that it is useless here to continue the discussion. I realize that argument which will demonstrate by facts and figures the absurdity and injustice of the literacy test will at this time be unavailing. The vote of the House heretofore taken on the Burnett bill foreshadows the result to be expected on the present motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] to concur in the conference report. But I would not let this opportunity to voice my objections pass, even in the few minutes now yielded to me, without in the line of the course I have heretofore steadily pursued to again emphasize my views and enter my protest against this unfair literacy test. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on agreeing to——

Mr. BURNETT. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I withhold my motion for just one minute, in which to read the statement of the Secretary of Labor.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] stated that the Shipping Trusts are the ones that were interested in striking out section 11. The Secretary of Labor states:

> I am inclined to believe that, as the plan there contemplated would be somewhat in the nature of an experiment, it might be well to defer consideration thereof, at least for the present. I am led to this opinion by reason of the fact that if it should be advisable (later) to resort to it, it will possibly be better to inaugurate it by cooperation, for which purposes authority exists in the exercise of the general powers of this department.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman state what he is reading from?

Mr. BURNETT. The report of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask when that report was made?

Mr. GARDNER. That was in 1914.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GALLIVAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] both demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. I was not in at the time the report was made, and I should like to know whether a vote for the conference report will also include a vote for the literacy-test provision?

The SPEAKER. It includes everything that is in the conference report. The Chair does not know what is in it. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 46 Members seconding the demand and 69 rising in opposition.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 227, nays 94, not voting 103, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. LANGLEY (for) with Mr. SABATH (against).

Mr. KEISTER (for) with Mr. WINSLOW (against).

Mr. DUNN (for) with Mr. GORDON (against).

Mr. Moss of West Virginia (for) with Mr. MORIN (against).

Mr. GUERNSEY (for) with Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts (against).

Mr. GRIEST (for) with Mr. LOFT (against).

Mr. BELL of Georgia (for) with Mr. SCULLY (against).

Mr. BARTON (for) with Mr. METZ (against).

Mr. POWERS (for) with Mr. PATTEN of New York (against).

Mr. FAISON (for) with Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island (against).

Mr. AVIS (for) with Mr. EDMONDS (against).

Mr. WILSON of Florida (for) with Mr. RIORDAN (against).

Mr. MONDELL (for) with Mr. HOWELL (against).

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia (for) with Mr. FAIRCHILD (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada with Mr. ESTOPINAL.

Mr. DALE with Mr. AINEY.

Mr. CARR with Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania.
Mr. ALLEN with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.
Mr. BOOHER with Mr. DAVIS.
Mr. CAREW with Mr. FALCONER.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.
Mr. FLOOD of Virginia with Mr. KAHN.
Mr. GARD with Mr. HULINGS.
Mr. HAMILL with Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa.
Mr. IGOE with Mr. KREIDER.
Mr. MAHER with Mr. NELSON.
Mr. MORRISON with Mr. MANAHAN.
Mr. TAGGART with Mr. SCOTT.
Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. PETERS.
Mr. TAYLOR of New York with Mr. VARE.
Mr. STANLEY with Mr. WOODRUFF.
Mr. DOOLING with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, in the Sunday Magazine of the Evening Star there is an article by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, relating to the military preparedness in this country, a very valuable and interesting article by reason of the information it contains, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article by his colleague [Mr. HAY] relating to the military preparedness of the United States. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to couple with that a request that an article by myself be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that anybody would object to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but is it not too late?

The SPEAKER. If the rule was strictly construed, yes; but if all the rules of the House were strictly construed, we would have a riot here in a week. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to object to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an article by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] requests unanimous consent to print an article on the same subject by himself in the RECORD.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us have those two requests put separately.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remark in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print 10,000 copies of the immigration bill, with the law as it now stands and the law as it will be as amended, in parallel columns. There is a great demand for it and they are soon exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to have printed 10,000 copies of the immigration bill just passed and the old law, printed in parallel columns. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Alabama know how much it will cost?

Mr. BURNETT. No; I have no idea.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman had better first find out. I do not think anyone will object.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made recently by the gentleman from Missouri, Judge ALEXANDER, on the ship-purchase bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by Judge ALEXANDER on the ship-purchase bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think you ought to have also a speech made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from former Senator McLaurin, of South Carolina, on the warehouse system in that State and in regard to the cotton situation in the South.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from ex-Senator McLaurin, of South Carolina, on the warehouse system and the cotton situation in the South. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Are all of these extensions of remarks to go in at the end of the RECORD and not in the proceedings of to-day?

The SPEAKER. They should all go in at the end of the RECORD.

Mr. GARNER. I think the Speaker should give instructions to that effect, so that the RECORD will not be made so cumbersome.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, the Speaker has no control over that matter, but he has requested the Public Printer two or three times to print these extensions of remarks at the end of the RECORD.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] on the same question which was discussed by the gentleman from Missouri, Judge ALEXANDER—the ship-purchase bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SAUNDERS, on the other side of the ship-purchase bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read at the desk certain resolutions by the Legislature of the State of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to have read at the Clerk's desk certain resolutions passed by the Michigan Legislature. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not think we ought to begin that practice. The gentleman can ask leave to extend his remarks and print them in the RECORD.

Mr. CRAMTON. The subject matter of these resolutions, I think, is one in which the people of Michigan are especially interested, affecting the State in a peculiar way. The resolutions present certain facts which I believe should have the consideration of this House. The gentlemen on the other side have expressed a desire that all these matters go under extension of remarks at the back of the RECORD, where no one will ever see them. I do not like to have these resolutions printed in that way, for I want them read here in the House.

Mr. MANN. In the course of the year the legislatures of the various States probably pass a thousand resolutions telling Congress what it should do, which is not within the province of the legislature, and I am opposed to the practice of wasting time reading the resolutions, and I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, looking at the RECORD of yesterday, page 1585, I find some comment there upon the bill H. R. 11178, the apple-box bill, and certain proceedings taken by me or in which I am alleged to have participated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to get the permission of the House.

Mr. RAKER. I want to make the statement and then ask permission.

Mr. MANN. I said yesterday that the gentleman from California would need an hour; why not give it to him?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] having one minute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask time later to be heard on this matter, but I want to say now, in justice to myself, that I was absent from the House yesterday on account of sickness in our family, in which I was compelled to send my wife home.

As to the suggestion as to why the bill H. R. 11178 was not taken up, I will take up that matter later. I want to say that the bill will eventually receive proper consideration and will be considered by the House this session.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the gentleman from Ohio changed his remarks yesterday in order to take care of the gentleman from California.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], delivered at the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] upon the subject of rivers and harbors. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 19076. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The message also announced that the President had, on January 11, 1915, approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 2824. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891;

S. 2651. An act providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing the minerals kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, china clay, and ball clay in Tripp County, formerly a part of the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota;

S. 6106. An act validating locations of deposits of phosphate rock heretofore made in good faith under the placer-mining laws of the United States;

S. 7107. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Metropolis, Ill.;

S. 6454. An act to authorize the Government Exhibit Board for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to install any part or parts of the Government exhibit at the said exposition in the exhibit palaces of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. or in the Government building at said exposition; and

S. J. Res. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present the bell of the late United States steamship Princeton to the borough of Princeton, N. J.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, with Mr. RAINEY in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after line 24, insert the following:

"Harbor at Bridgeport, Conn.: For completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 898, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $111,300.

"Unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for improvement of the harbor at Bridgeport, Conn., is hereby made available for continuing improvement of said harbor in accordance with the report submitted in said House Document No. 898, Sixty-third Congress, second session."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the demand of the gentleman from Connecticut for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DONOVAN and Mr. SPARKMAN to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Thames River, Conn.: For maintenance, $14,500.

Mr. MAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 5, on page 5, add the following:

"For improving the harbor at New London, Conn., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 613, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $170,000."

Mr. MAHAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the bill which I have just offered is taken verbatim from the rivers and harbors bill which passed this House during the last session of Congress.

Nearly four years ago the Legislature of the State of Connecticut passed a bill concerning steamship terminals at New London. That measure appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 and authorized the commissioners of rivers and harbors of that State to use the same in the construction of a dock or pier for the purpose of expediting the interchange of railroad and water traffic. The commissioners were given power, on behalf of the State, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, land necessary for the construction of said pier; in section 5 of this act authority is given the rivers and harbors commissioners of Connecticut "to enter into agreements with authorized representatives of the Federal Government relative to sharing in or apportionment" between said Federal Government and the State of Connecticut of the cost of constructing said canals, basins, channels, or other facilities hereby authorized.

This act was approved July 25, 1911.

On December 14, 1911, the Hon. Edwin W. Higgins, a Member of this House from Connecticut, introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make a survey of New London Harbor, Conn., and its approaches.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause examinations and surveys to provide a uniform depth in the harbor at New London, Conn., of 45 feet, and make such surveys, examinations, investigations, and reports as will insure the full cooperation of the United States with the State of Connecticut in the improvement of the New London (Conn.) Harbor and its approaches.

This bill became a law, and, in pursuance thereof, the matter of improving the harbor of New London was referred to Maj. G. B. Pillsbury, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and I read from his report:

From: The district engineer officer.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army (through the division engineer).
Subject: Report of survey of New London Harbor, Conn.

First. In compliance with the provisions of the rivers and harbors act of July 25, 1912, and with departmental letter of December 12, 1912, I submit the following report on the survey of New London Harbor, Conn., with a view to securing increased depth of channel and for report upon the question of cooperation on the part of the State of Connecticut in the improvement of said harbor and its approaches.

Second. The survey was made during the past summer. It embraced a complete hydrographic survey of the harbor and a topographical survey of the shores. The nature of the bottom, along the line of the proposed channel, was investigated by forcing down by hand a suitably supported pipe. A map of the harbor, in three sheets, is submitted with this report.

Third. The improvement of New London Harbor now desired is an entrance channel of size sufficient to accommodate ocean-going steamships; the natural depth available, 26 feet at mean low water, not being sufficient for vessels of that class. The harbor is, in many respects, admirably adapted to development as an ocean port. It is approached by deep water over a route that does not offer any grave dangers to navigation; its waters are sheltered, and it is rarely, if ever, closed by ice. The small tidal range is advantageous from the standpoint of terminal construction and operation. The harbor bottom is of soft material and the cost of securing an entrance channel of sufficient dimensions for the present purposes and of enlarging it to meet future needs will be very small in comparison with that necessary for the development of other harbors of the United States. The railroad connections with tributary territory are ample. Its disadvantages lie in its limited area of natural deep water and in the topography of its shores. While the hills bordering the harbor are of no great elevation, the amount of lowlands easily and cheaply adaptable for commercial and manufacturing enterprises is somewhat limited.

Fourth. The present commerce of the harbor is practically entirely coastwise. It amounted to 907,990 short tons, valued at $107,688,345.90, during the calendar year 1912. The proposed improvement will not appreciably benefit the greater part of this commerce, as the existing depths are ample for vessels engaged therein. A small portion of the amount, amounting to certainly not over 15 per cent, but probably less, is received in New York Harbor from over-sea ports and thence shipped to New London for consumption and railroad distribution. It is possible that this portion might be shipped direct to New London were the harbor an ocean port.

Fifth. The commerce to be benefited by the proposed improvement is, except for the small amount just mentioned, entirely prospective. Its volume will depend upon a number of factors, among which the activity of the mercantile interests who may identify themselves with the port is, perhaps, the most important. The attached letter from the rivers, harbors, and bridges commission of the State sets forth the view of those interested in the commercial possibilities of the harbor.

Sixth. In anticipation of such commerce the State of Connecticut has purchased lands, prepared the designs, and is about to enter into the first contract for the construction of a pier and terminal in the harbor at the location shown on the accompanying map. The pier is to be of most modern construction, is to be 1,000 feet long, and the slips alongside will be excavated to 35 feet at mean low water. It is to be provided with cargo-handling facilities, and there are to be constructed in conjunction therewith terminal railroad yards and warehouses. The appropriation made by the State for the purpose is $1,000,000, and it appears likely that the actual cost will approach that figure. The expenditure of this large sum by the State for this purpose was not without opposition, and during the past session of the legislature a somewhat vigorously supported, but unsuccessful, proposal was made to withdraw the appropriation.

* * * * * * *

Tenth. The cooperation proposed by the State of Connecticut in the improvement of the harbor and its approaches, as set forth in the attached letter, to which reference has previously been made, consists in the construction of the pier and terminal and in the dredging necessary to connect this pier with the channel. It appears that the State authorities have never contemplated any contribution toward the cost of improving the main channel of the harbor as a part of this cooperation. * * *

Eleventh. While the commerce which is expected to follow the proposed improvement can not be forecast with certainty, yet it is highly improbable that such a large and well-appointed terminal as that which the State proposed to provide will go unused, and a considerable commerce may be expected to follow the improvement. In view of the natural advantages of the harbor and the relatively small cost of improvement, I am of the opinion that New London Harbor is worthy of improvement by the General Government to the extent of providing a channel 33 feet deep at mean low water from the natural deep water in the upper harbor to Long Island Sound, at a cost of $330,000 for original construction and an amount estimated at $2,000 per annum for maintenance. The work should be prosecuted at such a rate as to secure its completion in two years. If the project is adopted by Congress, the amount of $170,000 should be provided as an initial appropriation and a continuing contract authorized to include the remaining amount of $160,000.

Twelfth. In compliance with the provisions of the act, I further report that the cooperation by the State of Connecticut in the improvement of New London Harbor and its approaches should consist in the construction of a pier and terminal, of the character proposed by the rivers, harbors, and bridges commission of the State, and in the excavation of the channel to connect this pier with the main channel, and I recommend that the entering into contracts covering the essential portions of this work by the proper agencies of the State of Connecticut should be a condition precedent to the expenditure of the funds that may be appropriated by Congress for the excavation of the main channel.

G. B. PILLSBURY,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

This report, known as Document No. 613, was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; was favorably reported by that committee, as follows:

Improving harbor at New London, Conn., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 613, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $170,000.

Now, I submit, we have here an implied obligation between the State of Connecticut and the United States Government, in which the State of Connecticut invites cooperation with the United States Government with a view to improving the channel and the harbor of New London. We have the bill introduced by the Hon. Mr. Higgins, which became a law; we have a favorable report by the Army Engineers, representatives of the United States Government; and a favorable report from last year's Rivers and Harbors Committee and favorable action by this House during the last session accepting the report; and the favorable report to the Senate of the United States by the Senate Committee on Commerce, and failed to pass the Senate only by reason of the substitution of an amendment striking out all of the items contained in the original bill and appropriating the sum of $20,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the State of Connecticut has done its part and has fulfilled each and every one of its obligations. It has met with the conditions prescribed in the Army Engineer's report.

After this act passed this House the contract was let by the rivers, harbors, and bridges commissioners of Connecticut for the excavation of a channel from the pier to the proposed main channel, and to-day the State is obligated in more than three-quarters of a million dollars.

As the case now stands, the State of Connecticut, relying upon the favorable report of the Army engineers, the approval of the Secretary of War, the favorable report of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this House, and the favorable action by this House during the last session, has gone forward in good faith and expended more than three-quarters of a million dollars in the purchase of real estate, awarding contracts for the construction of the new pier, and the excavation of the new channel, and by the middle of the coming summer the State of Connecticut will have expended in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

This is not only for the benefit of the State of Connecticut, but for the direct benefit of the United States, for the reason that 2 miles above the end of this proposed new channel the United States Government owns nearly 1,000 acres of land, with a mile of water front, which was presented by the State of Connecticut and accepted by the Government for use as a naval station, with ample depth of water to float the largest ships of our Navy. The Government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in improving its property, erecting thereon many substantial buildings, a large wharf, and a coaling station for the ships of war. The deepening of this channel will enable the largest ships of our Navy to sail up the harbor of New London to the naval station, where, should trouble ever come, our ships of war could retire for repairs and coaling.

The harbor of New London, which has a fine, clear entrance from the ocean, is accessible at all times and all seasons, and from it vessels can proceed to sea and be clear of land within a few hours. The entrance to New London Harbor, across Long Island Sound, is protected on both sides of the channel by fortifications of such strength that it might justly be called the Gibraltar of America. These fortifications guard the opening of the eastern end of Long Island Sound, the importance of which may be seen from the fact that it is one of the two approaches to the city and harbor of New York and Brooklyn, as well as protection to many large cities in Connecticut on the shores of Long Island Sound.

More than 50 years ago the harbor of New London was recommended for the site of a great naval station by a committee appointed by Secretary of the Navy Gideon Welles, under authority of a joint resolution adopted by Congress August 12, 1862, as possessing greater advantages for a naval station than any other site mentioned in the resolution.

In view of all these facts, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it would be but the part of wisdom for this Government at this time to make this appropriation, which would enable us to make use of these natural advantages for a harbor of refuge and the possible use as a naval station as a site for the construction and repair of naval ships and the manufacture of munitions of war.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the length of the river from the Sound in?

Mr. MAHAN. Our river is navigable from New London for 14 miles. The harbor for which this appropriation is sought is known as the harbor of New London and is 3 miles long and a mile wide, and it is known and always has been known as one of the finest natural harbors on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. GOULDEN. I believe the gentleman claims that this is not a new project, but has been appropriated for in a previous bill?

Mr. MAHAN. Last Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the present depth of water?

Mr. MAHAN. The harbor has an average depth of 24 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. And the proposed depth is 33 feet?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes; and for this reason——

Mr. MADDEN. Just one moment. How much of the million dollars has the State of Connecticut expended?

Mr. MAHAN. The State of Connecticut has already contracted for more than three-quarters of a million, and before this year is over the contract will be completed at the expense of practically $1,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And you are only asking in this bill what was, as a matter of fact, appropriated last year?

Mr. MAHAN. That is all, $170,000, which was appropriated by this committee last year, which passed this House and went to the Senate and received a favorable report from the Senate committee.

Mr. LOGUE. Are we to understand that the State of Connecticut either has expended, or is expending, a million dollars for which this appropriation is necessary to cooperate?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes; more than that. The report of the engineers made it a condition precedent that before Congress appropriated any money the State of Connecticut should go forward and award the contracts.

Mr. LOGUE. And the State of Connecticut has started to do her share?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes. The State has purchased over $100,000 worth of land and let the contract for a pier that will cost between six and seven hundred thousand dollars, and the lower structure alone will cost more than half a million.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be permitted to proceed until he finishes his remarks.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should have to object to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Make it five minutes.

Mr. MAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up much of the time of this House since I have been here, and I hope you will give me sufficient time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to speak for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONERGAN. With the permission of the Chair and the House, I desire to modify my request and ask to make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut that his colleague be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. How does the State of Connecticut get the money, by private contribution or taxes?

Mr. MAHAN. The State of Connecticut makes appropriations, and it has borrowed the money.

Mr. COX. Sold bonds?

Mr. MAHAN. Sold bonds, and is paying nearly 4 per cent interest on the money.

Mr. COX. State bonds?

Mr. MAHAN. State bonds. The State will practically have no return on its investment for the next three years. Contracts were awarded because of the express condition contained in the report of the engineers, making it a condition precedent that the State should first award contracts for pier before favorable action of Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the tonnage at New London?

Mr. MAHAN. Nearly a million of tons a year. The commerce now is local, but what we are bidding for is foreign commerce. The present value of the tonnage is nearly $125,000,000 annually.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHAN. I will.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Were the contracts approved by the Board of Army Engineers prior to the appropriation of this money by the State of Connecticut?

Mr. MAHAN. Oh, yes, sir; not until the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was the contract awarded to dredge the channel, and the dredging of the channel was conditioned on the report of the engineers, which made it our duty to do so. The report of the engineers found that the cooperation between the State of Connecticut and the United States should consist in the State of Connecticut building a pier and excavating a channel from the pier to the proposed new channel.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Then we are to understand that prior to the appropriation of this money by the State of Connecticut this project was approved by the Board of Army Engineers?

Mr. MAHAN. It was approved by the Board of Army Engineers.

Mr. MOORE. Was it not actually reported in the last river and harbor bill?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes; it was.

Mr. MOORE. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors approved it?

Mr. MAHAN. And it passed this House without opposition.

Mr. MOORE. Now, will the gentleman indicate what kind of commerce enters the port of New London; it is a large coal port, is it not?

Mr. MAHAN. It is, and at New London the commerce——

Mr. MOORE. It is at the upper end of Long Island?

Mr. MAHAN. It is at the upper end of Long Island. It has a large and diversified commerce. We are shipping hundreds of thousands of tons of sugar that come into the harbor of New London from the harbor of New York, sugar coming in large ships to New York and there placed upon a lighter and put upon the boats owned by the Central Vermont Railroad and the Grand Trunk and taken to New London, where it is reshipped to Chicago and points North and West.

Mr. MOORE. Is any railroad interested in this improvement?

Mr. MAHAN. No. On the contrary, to show the attitude of the railroads, we asked the two railways to have the engineers of the respective railways meet with the commissioners of Connecticut at New London and help them select the best site for the location for this pier, so that the railroads might connect their tracks with the tracks on the proposed new pier, and the reply of one corporation was that there was no land in New London suitable for connecting the two railroads. It is a State-owned pier, which will be operated by the State, and not a dollar or penny will any railroad anywhere have an interest in it. We have provided at large expense that this will be connected with the tracks of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad and the Grand Trunk Railroad. That is absolutely necessary to make this project a success, as we believe it will be.

Mr. MOORE. Has the Grand Trunk come in yet?

Mr. MAHAN. It is there. It owns a pier not far away from New London. I want to say in connection with this—and it is one of the evils and curse of most cities along our coast—that the city of New London lies on the west bank of the Thames River. From where the river narrows, at Winthrops Point below the fort nearly three-quarters of a mile, is the business portion of the town, and a greater part of that land is owned by the Central Vermont Railroad and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and they have got docks lying idle and rotting down that they have no use for, which they will not use themselves and will not permit anyone else to use. Now, as to the economy part of it. New London has always been a dividend payer and breadwinner for this Government.

From the beginning of the Government until 1871 no record was made of the amounts collected at each customhouse, but I have here the report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce as to the customs collected in Connecticut. I will not take time, gentlemen, to read it, but I want to call your attention to the fact that the first 10 years since 1871 the amount of money collected in the customhouse at the port of New London averaged over $60,000 a year; and the State of Connecticut is paying into the United States Treasury from moneys collected at the ports of Connecticut $1,000,000 a year. I want to say further that during all this time, since the organization of this Government, there has been but $157,000 expended for maintenance of this harbor. So I submit to you, gentlemen, that this is not a question for the committee to idly or quickly decide. We will not entertain new projects. It is an obligation of honor on the part of the Government of the United States to keep its part of the agreement. The State of Connecticut asks for the cooperation of the Government. A bill was introduced practically assuring the Government's full cooperation. In the report of the engineers they make reference to cooperation between the State of Connecticut and the Federal Government, and they find it is for Connecticut to build a pier and dig the channel and ask the Government to appropriate this money. I submit to you that the State of Connecticut has gone forward, relying on the good faith of the Army engineers, upon the report of this Congress, and not until then was the contract let. Now, then, this act passed the House last year, and I submit to you that there is no other proposition like it before Congress. While there may be other meritorious amendments that will be proposed, there is nothing just like this, in which the State of Connecticut invites cooperation of the Government. This Government, through its Army engineers, its proper officials, practically agrees, and did agree, to cooperate with us.

Mr. BURGESS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman says it was included in the last bill. Does he mean the bill that went over to the Senate and failed?

Mr MAHAN. I mean the bill in the last Congress, that passed this House and went to the Senate.

Mr. BURGESS. And failed?

Mr. MAHAN. Went to the Senate and received the favorable report of the Senate Committee on Commerce, but failed.

Mr. BURGESS. I am sorry it failed, but it comes up as a new project now.

Mr. MAHAN. It is a question for this House as to whether we are not in honor bound to observe our agreement between a sovereign State and this Congress.

Mr. BURGESS. There is no agreement entered into to put it in the bill.

Mr. MAHAN. I submit that this amendment ought to be put in the bill by the Members of this House, assuming that you gentlemen are doing the best you can for the Treasury of the country.

Mr. BURGESS. There have been about $20,000,000 of new projects gone out just as this has. I am very friendly with you——

Mr. MAHAN. So am I with you, and I dislike to differ with you, but I feel bound to do so.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman secured my sympathy the other day upon the statement from him that Congress had pledged its cooperation with the State of Connecticut on this proposition. Does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. MAHAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman handed me the bill referred to, but I find that in the act passed there is no such cooperation pledged nor is it mentioned.

Mr. MAHAN. If I said "pledged," that is a pretty strong word. I——

Mr. LENROOT. It merely calls for a report upon the question of cooperation.

Mr. MAHAN. Yes, sir. It calls for a report. That report is embodied, so far as this report is concerned, in the report of the Army engineers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHAN] has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, after listening to what the gentleman from Connecticut has said, I feel as if the House should act favorably upon this project. Here we have a harbor of 24 feet of present depth, 600 feet wide, with a commerce valued at $125,000,000 annually. The proposition is to increase the present depth to 33 feet. The survey has been made by order of the Congress. The engineers have made a favorable report. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have acted favorably upon the engineers' report. The House has acted favorably upon the report of the committee The State of Connecticut has pledged its faith to the expenditure of a million dollars, with an understanding that the Government of the United States would cooperate whenever they had so pledged. Contracts have been let as a result of that pledge of faith. The work is now in progress. The question is whether——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. I refuse to yield at present. The question is whether the State of Connecticut ought to be allowed to proceed with the expenditure of this $1,000,000 for the improvement of one of the great harbors of America and to allow the expenditure of that million dollars to go to waste, when by the action of this House and of the Senate $170,000 in this bill and $160,000 in some succeeding bill will enable the city of New London and the State of Connecticut to establish a harbor that will accommodate foreign commerce, increase the opportunities for the transportation of the world's goods at lower rates, and enable the city of New London to employ men who otherwise might be idle, and whether, as a matter of fact, we are not in honor bound to do the thing that has been reported in favor of, as the result of which the State of Connecticut has gone forward and expended this $1,000,000.

Now, I submit that the State of Connecticut must have felt justified in contracting such a large expenditure of money; that it must have felt it had some reason to hope and believe the Government of the United States was to cooperate with that State in the development of this harbor. New London is at a point on the Atlantic coast where shipping can be readily done. The harbor proposed to be improved, in my judgment, is one of the needs of navigation. And, aside from all that, I can not help but believe that, after the State has pledged its faith and contracted its obligations, we who represent the other States of the Union can do no less than to encourage the State of Connecticut in the development of this port which ships from every other port throughout the world may enter. It seems to me there is nothing more to be said about it. They have made a case, and that case seems to be in favor of the appropriation of the money by the Government of the United States through the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHAN].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I have no navigable rivers in my district, and therefore have never had occasion to go before the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Hence I have not suffered any disappointments at its hands, and am in a position to dispassionately consider any amendment to this bill on its merits.

I have looked into the facts connected with this amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

This proposition almost, if not entirely, reaches the point of being a moral obligation on the part of this Government to take up at this time its part of this particular work. A joint resolution was adopted some years ago by which the Secretary of War was directed to make such investigations, inquiries, and surveys as would enable the United States Government to come into full cooperation with the State of Connecticut with respect to the improvement of this particular harbor. Not only were these investigations to be made pursuant to this resolution, but they have been actually completed. The Board of Engineers that investigated this proposition have given it their support in the most unqualified terms. It is pointed out in the report of the board, a report which I hold in my hand, that a most enormous traffic annually pours in and out of this port.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is it not true also that this port of New London is a transcontinental port?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman may be right on that point. I am not particularly advised in that respect however. But the fact is not disputed that this is a port at which an enormous aggregate of traffic is done.

The State of Connecticut acting on the intimation that on certain conditions the Federal Government would cooperate with it, went ahead with its part of the understanding, and has expended a very large sum on the improvements of this harbor. The amount asked from the United States Government for this project in comparison with the amounts that have been recommended by the committee in favor of other and far less deserving projects, is almost negligible. Compared with the amount expended by the State of Connecticut, and having in mind the volume of traffic justifying this expenditure not only present, but prospective, I am justified in saying that there will be no more meritorious amendment offered to this bill than the one under consideration.

The only argument that I have heard against this amendment is the suggestion that the committee has decided not to take up any new projects. Really, in essence and in substance, this is not a new project, having in mind the work done, and the money already expended by the State of Connecticut. But that is merely a dictum of the committee, which enables many projects included in the bill to be taken care of, while other and far more meritorious projects are excluded from consideration, projects that have not a tithe of the merits of the pending proposition. It touches the dignity and the authority of this House, when it is asked to disregard a proposition that is presented on its merits merely because that committee has adopted a rule of convenience in its own deliberations. If we can not exercise the superior authority that attaches to this body, but must act merely on the report of a committee—which is merely the instrument, or hand of this House—then why this farce of continuing further under circumstances of apparent deliberation? Why not at once rise, and report the bill to the House just as it has been brought before this House by the committee, and thus end this discussion? Why waste our breath in the farcical effort of pretending to consider propositions on their merits, when in reality we are doing nothing of the sort?

Mr. Chairman, the figures in this connection emphasize and support in the very strongest way all that I have said. Permit me to bring these figures to the attention of the committee. Mind you, they are not capable of contradiction, because they are contained in the report of Col. W. M. Black of the Corps of Engineers, and senior member of the board. This report was made in 1913. In that report he says:

> 2. The present commerce of the harbor is practically all coastwise and amounts to about 900,000 tons, having a value of about $107,000,000. It consists principally of steamboat freight, coal, and lumber. Some foreign commerce is carried on, it being reported that 3 foreign vessels entered and 15 cleared from the port, and 2 American vessels entered from and 4 cleared for foreign ports.
>
> 3. The district officer states that the harbor is in many respects admirably adapted for development as an ocean port. It is approached by easily navigated deep water, is in a sheltered position, has a small tidal range, which is advantageous from a standpoint of terminal construction and operation, is rarely, if ever, closed by ice, and is used extensively as a harbor of refuge. The improvement now desired is an entrance channel of sufficient size to accommodate ocean-going steamships. The natural depth of 26 feet now available is not deemed sufficient for vessels of that class.
> 4. It is stated that in anticipation of a foreign commerce the State of Connecticut has purchased lands and is about to enter upon the construction of a commodious and modern pier 1,000 feet long, with suitable connections, and to excavate to a depth of 35 feet at mean low water slips alongside and connecting with the main channel, this work to be done under a State appropriation of $1,000,000. The furnishing of this modern terminal and its connection with the main entrance channel is the cooperation offered by the State in the development of this port. The district officer states that the commerce will be carried in vessels not exceeding 30 feet in draft, and for their accommodation he proposes a channel depth of 33 feet at mean low water and a width of 600 feet. The estimated cost of securing such a channel is $330,000 and $2,000 annually for maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, if any confirmation is needed of what has been said by my colleague [Mr. MAHAN] and by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], I wish to read very briefly what Maj. Pillsbury, Corps of Engineers, has to say on this project and concerning the commerce of that harbor. I read:

> While the commerce which is expected to follow the proposed improvement can not be forecast with certainty, yet it is highly improbable that such a large and well-appointed terminal as that which the State proposes to provide will go unused, and a considerable commerce may be expected to follow the improvement. In view of the natural advantages of the harbor and the relatively small cost of improvement, I am of the opinion that New London Harbor is worthy of improvement by the General Government to the extent of providing a channel 33 feet deep at mean low water from the natural deep water in the upper harbor to Long Island Sound, at a cost of $330,000 for original construction and an amount estimated at $2,000 per annum for maintenance. The work should be prosecuted at such rate as to secure its completion in two years. If the project is adopted by Congress, the amount of $170,000 should be provided as an initial appropriation and a continuing contract authorized to include the remaining amount of $160,000.

In compliance with the provisions of the act, I further report that the cooperation by the State of Connecticut in the improvement of New London Harbor and its approaches should consist in the construction of a pier and terminal of the character proposed by the rivers, harbors, and bridges commission of the State, and in the excavation of the channel to connect this pier with the main channel; and I recommend that the entering into contracts covering the essential portions of this work by the proper agencies of the State of Connecticut should be a condition precedent to the expenditure of the funds that may be appropriated by Congress for the excavation of the main channel.

Those contracts have been entered into by the State of Connecticut to the extent of three-quarters of a million dollars, and by next year the entire amount of the appropriation by the State—$1,000,000—will be expended and those piers and docks built; and the result will be, unless you make the appropriation to the extent asked in this amendment, the State will have provided these magnificent piers and terminals, and you can not get to them, because the United States Government has failed to keep at least its implied agreement with the State of Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is essentially a new project. It is not a new project because of the dictum of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but it is such a project as has been uniformly considered and treated by Congress as a new project. So that, in dealing with this, do not get the impression that you are not dealing with a new project, because you are.

I am not going to say anything about the merits of this proposition. We passed upon it last winter, when we were dealing with new projects. When we were preparing the bill of 1914 this matter was presented to us. We went over it and regarded it then as a good project, as one that should receive the favorable consideration of our committee and of the Congress. We passed the 1914 bill with this in it, subject to the conditions imposed.

When we came to prepare this bill we were confronted with the question as to whether we would take on any new projects at all. We considered the question very thoroughly, from every angle, from every standpoint. Perhaps I violate no confidence when I say that before beginning the preparation of the bill we consulted with the President of the United States about the policy to be pursued; and while he was emphatic in his statement that we should allow a sufficient amount of money to maintain projects, that we should take no chances on that, he cautioned us to be very careful in the matter of prosecuting work on old projects, and asked us, because of Treasury conditions, to allow only enough money to carry on those projects economically and with a fair degree of dispatch until another bill could be framed. So far as new projects were concerned, he advised against taking them on at this time.

I further talked with gentlemen on both sides of this House as to what should be done. Other members of the committee did the same thing, and the result of this discussion and deliberation was that we decided to have no new projects in this bill. I do not mind saying that if we were taking on new projects this is one that I would favor. At first we thought it would be advisable to make some exceptions, but when we came to draw the line it was difficult to do so. Where could we draw the line? Other projects would come up for consideration. I know of several others that I think just as urgent as this; in fact, I am sure that they are just as urgent as this particular project. If this were to be taken on, those ought to be taken on also. In fact, along with this project that we adopted in the 1914 bill we adopted 75 other new projects, quite a number of them being adopted subject to conditions of local contribution of one kind or another.

This is a very commendable work these people are undertaking to do there. But let me call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this fact, that up to this present moment the House is under no moral or other kind of obligation to the people there to respond to their proposition. We had provided for a survey and invited suggestions as to what cooperation should be furnished by the people there, but that does not commit Congress to any action. We are standing here to-day in a condition where we may or may not proceed with it, as Congress sees proper.

Mr. CONRY. Does not the gentleman think that under all the circumstances of this case there is an implied obligation on the part of the Government to make this improvement?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not sure but I could answer that either way and tell the truth. It depends altogether on the way a man looks at it, whether he thinks it is an obligation or not. I know the people out in California claim, with reference to the Sacramento River, that we are under obligation to them to take on a project in this bill that would call for over $5,000,000, and so far as local cooperation is concerned that is on all fours with this. Perhaps it presents a stronger case, because this proposition which we are now discussing is not to aid the Government in doing the work the Government is called upon to do but is to furnish terminal facilities, a very commendable thing to be sure. The Government ought to respond liberally to cases of this kind whenever it can.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Just a question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. The gentleman spoke about a question that he could answer either way. If an authorized agent of the Government, charged with certain work, should recommend that before the Government does this particular work the State of Connecticut shall do a certain thing, and the State of Connecticut goes ahead and does that thing, is there not an implied obligation on the part of the National Government?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I do not go that far with this particular project, though it is commendable in them to undertake that. They have anticipated the action of Congress. They assumed that Congress would act favorably, and I think they were justified in that assumption, for whenever we reach new projects I, for one, shall favor this particular project. But as I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, this is not to assist the Government in the work. The intention is to furnish terminal facilities for public use.

Mr. MAHAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MAHAN. Does the gentleman think that he is justified in asking Members of this House to vote against this project and to uphold the committee in the determination that no new project shall be considered this year, and for that reason not to include this project, when this matter received the favorable report of your committee and passed this House at its last session, and received the favorable report of the committee of the Senate, and upon the failure of this Congress to act the State of Connecticut will lose the interest on a million dollars for three years?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not think the gentleman's premises are correct.

Mr. MAHAN. They are absolutely accurate, and the gentleman knows they are.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not consider them so.

Mr. MAHAN. Then the gentleman has not examined the facts.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not believe the failure to adopt this project is going to keep the State of Connecticut from doing whatever work it can do there, and I do not think the failure of Congress to adopt the project at this time, provided we do adopt it in the next bill and have a bill at the next session of Congress, is going to delay the State of Connecticut one minute.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I want to ask the gentleman whether it is a fact that there are no new projects in this measure?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No new projects in the bill up to date, and I call the attention of the committee to what will confront us if we open the door. As I said a minute ago, I at first thought it was advisable to make some few exceptions, but on talking with the members of the committee to that end they did not know where to draw the line. Nobody could say. We had 76 new projects in the other bill. If we take up this project, every Member who had a new project in the bill of last year will come back on us and say, "If you put in this one, put in ours."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want anyone here to suppose that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is disposed to regard a bill prepared by them as a sacred one that can not be amended, for of course it can be if this House wants to do it; but I wish to call attention to this one thing, that if you open the door here perhaps it ought to be opened in some other cases, just how many I would not undertake to say now.

I have three or four or five in my mind, so have others, no doubt, and there is no predicting where the matter would end.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. The gentleman thinks there is merit in this proposition, but thinks it ought not to be taken on at the present time. Why not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Because we are not adopting new projects, as we do not think Treasury conditions will justify us in taking on new work. We have $250,000,000 of old work on our hands now, and I believe the amount we are appropriating is as much as we can afford now.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. The gentleman thinks it might be taken on at the next session?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; if we have new projects, this will probably be one of them.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. What assurance has the gentleman that the condition of the Treasury will be any better then than now?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no assurance as to that, but I should hope the Treasury situation would be better. I believe it will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is pertinent to this inquiry, because I believe the gentleman from Connecticut did not attack the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as was done yesterday by one or two others, on the ground of alleged favoritism by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to its own members, but I do want to say that while it is not a pleasant thing to talk about, especially not so to me, I nevertheless wish to notice these charges briefly.

I wish to say that if there is such discrimination, then you have not the kind of a committee you ought to have, and you should reorganize it and have another one appointed at once, for this great committee should be composed of men not capable of such action or practices. If the men on the committee are not honest and honorable enough to conduct the affairs with which they are charged without discrimination and favoritism, then they are in the wrong place and others should be placed in their stead.

But let me say to you there was no favoritism anywhere, certainly not with reference to the new projects, because every project is placed on the same footing, for none have been adopted, and if you want to consider States, every State was placed on the same basis so far as new projects were concerned.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me finish first. There has been no new project taken on for Florida, Alabama, Texas, or any other State, whether represented on the committee or not. Therefore there can not have been any discrimination along that line.

Mr. MAHAN. Will the gentleman kindly state what the appropriations in this bill are for Florida?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am coming to that, though it has nothing to do with new projects. Take the State of Connecticut. I am now replying to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] more particularly. There are seven new projects pending in Connecticut. The State of Florida had 12. Therefore, while we left off 7 for the State of Connecticut, we left off 12 for the State of Florida. There were 2 new projects for Maine, 3 for Massachusetts, and all those were left out. There were 9 from New York, and all those were left out. There were 8 from New Jersey, and all those were left out. Eight from Maryland, 2 for Alabama, 5 for Louisiana, and 6 for Texas. So, I say, there has been no discriminations along that line.

Now, so far as old projects are concerned, how did the committee act with reference to those? We acted upon the recommendations of the engineers in the main.

There were recommended for the State of Florida appropriations for old projects of a little over $1,400,000. Over $500,000 of that were eliminated by the committee at my suggestion, and there has been, I believe, no criticism of my action in that regard, though one Member did on the floor yesterday criticize the improvement at St. Lucie Inlet. But we kept off over one-third of the estimates furnished by the War Department for work in the State of Florida. For the district I represent, which has a commerce of approximately 5,000,000 tons, there are $187,000 recommended in this bill. There are $926,000 in all, and my district out of that gets only $187,000. Certainly I did not discriminate in my own favor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The reduction in the State of Florida was 36 per cent. That in Maine was 18 per cent. For Massachusetts there was no reduction, because while there was a reduction in one place there was an increase in another, the latter being more than an offset to the former.

In Texas the reduction was 36 per cent, the same as Florida, although there was no intention to make them just the same. Now, the gentleman from Connecticut on the floor yesterday took up Texas and Florida, and said: "See what you have done in Texas and Florida; they have got so many million dollars." That is no argument and no fair illustration. He could have made the same argument by taking up the States of Ohio and Florida. He could have said the Little Orange River in Florida gets $1,000 while Ohio gets $5,000,000, and thus show that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] and myself, who were on the committee, received $5,001,000. That is a more striking illustration than the one he used. But there is nothing in such an argument. We are dealing with projects, not with States. We have not discriminated in favor of members of the committee. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman said there was no new project in the bill, but only old projects to be cared for. I would like to know how much the appropriations are for old projects for certain States represented by members on the committee as compared to the old projects in other States not represented on the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have the list here that I started to read, but it would take up too much time.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I call to mind my own State, and I have in mind others. Take the Ouachita River. There is the case of the Ouachita River, which the engineers recommended, $706,000. That is an old and continuing project, 15 years old, and it receives by this bill $25,000. Then there is the Red River on which the engineers recommended a scheme of $6,000,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And I want to say to the gentleman that that is a project that will need very careful consideration before it is adopted.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman has fortified himself behind the Board of Engineers on old and continuing projects, but it seems from rather a cursory observation of the bill on its face that it happens that most of these old and continuing projects are cared for in those States that are represented on the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I deny that. We have only followed the estimates of the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to get some information. I do not understand the definition of "new projects." I want to ask the chairman of the committee or some man on the committee the meaning of that phrase. I find here, in looking at the RECORD, of yesterday, that a member of the committee stated that for a project in Florida the bill recommends an appropriation of $100,000, and there had been expended only seventy-odd dollars on that. I presume the chairman of the committee will call that an old project, continuing an improvement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is an old project——

Mr. DONOVAN. I am not ready to have the question answered yet. Let me continue.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thought the gentleman was asking a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to have the gentleman answer the question when I am through with it. One hundred thousand dollars for a place with practically not a dollar expended upon it. That is termed an old improvement. A member of the committee, I believe, stated yesterday that some seventy-odd dollars has been expended upon this. I notice further in looking through the bill some thirty-odd projects in the same State, all called continuing an improvement—a peculiar terminology, a new school of grammar—continuing improvements. The report of the district engineer, the report of the Board of Engineers, in language of their own, stated in the Connecticut proposition that it was a modification of three different years, but that is a new project under the committee's dictionary, while in Florida it is a continuing improvement; and it strikes me that the average boy in school will say that a modification of a report of 1909, 1907, and 1910 is an old project, continuing an improvement, or continuing a work, and where there has not been a dollar spent on a hundred-thousand-dollar project, as asked for, it is somewhat doubtful if any disinterested person could be found who would say that it was an old improvement. It is a bit of legerdemain in English that I can not appreciate. But I notice there is a lot of fertility, just the same, in the committee's action when you find in Florida thirty-odd propositions, totaling nearly a million dollars. Ah, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman from the Orient, sometimes known as a "Chink," would look with envy upon the blandishments of the committee and wish that he was a resident of Florida or a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. That is a project adopted some two years ago, and has not been modified in any manner or form since its adoption. The money appropriated for it was tied up there, because they said they did not have money enough to go on with the work, but that if additional funds should be authorized or furnished the work would proceed. That is therefore the justification for the appropriation in the bill for St. Lucie Inlet.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It might be well for this committee to understand that the Board of Army Engineers has indorsed and recommended 133 new projects in which we are all more or less interested, and which would amount to more than $100,000,000. I can state personally that five members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had new projects that they wanted adopted, but the committee turned them down. If the committee sees fit to adopt new projects, I think it should treat all of the Members alike and adopt the 133 new projects and add another $100,000,000 to the bill in place of the $34,000,000 that the committee has reported to this House. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has given its time and study to this bill and in every way has cut down so as to bring it within reason and within the present condition of our finances.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I am the friend of all river and harbor improvements, but the condition of the Treasury and the country forces me to take the position that this is no time to take on any new projects. There were six in my State that went out under that rule. They were included in the bill last year, as was this project, but the bill failed in the Senate. There were 76 new projects taken on in the bill last year which went out of this bill for this reason. The engineers, in making the estimates for old work, recommended $49,000,000. We realized, and every man must realize, that no such bill of that kind could pass at this time. So, after six weeks of earnest work on this matter, cutting everywhere, as the chairman has stated, cutting 36 per cent off the recommendations for Texas alone, we succeeded in reporting this bill to the House carrying $34,000,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. May I ask the gentleman if it is a fact that no project which was considered new in the bill last year, although it was incorporated in that bill, has been carried in this bill?

Mr. BURGESS. No project at all.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In the view of the committee, what is a new project? I ask this in all sincerity, because I am having trouble at home upon the subject.

Mr. BURGESS. Work that has never been adopted in the law before.

That is as plain as can be. There is no occasion for any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. CONRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Certainly.

Mr. CONRY. The gentleman says that a new project is one that has never been adopted, I believe.

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. CONRY. Now is it not true that the gentleman from Connecticut has reference to a project that had been approved in the House bill?

Mr. BURGESS. No; only by the House.

Mr. CONRY. The gentleman means not by the Senate?

Mr. BURGESS. I mean it never became a law. In order to be an old project it must be approved by the House and Senate and be signed by the President.

Mr. CONRY. The gentleman did not make himself clear in the first statement.

Mr. BURGESS. Then I will make myself clear now. Now, of course, the House can do as it pleases, and I reckon it will. It has the power to do so. It has the power to take on any new project, defeat the bill, or anything else that it chooses. I am only one instrument, 1 Member of 435, but I will tell you I am getting very tired of being skinned by Members who do not know "straight up" on this floor. I have been on this River and Harbor Committee for 12 years. I have worked faithfully and tried my best to do the best for the rivers and harbors of the country, but I am tired of all this ceaseless rattletrap nonsense.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I think the membership of this House want the right thing done, and if we are in the wrong we want to be put right as to any erroneous conclusions we may have drawn; but in looking over the estimates made by the Board of Engineers and the appropriations carried in this bill, it strikes one upon first blush, as we generally say, that there has been some discrimination, and that idea pervades the House. Whether it is true or not, I think this debate should disclose it; but in looking over the bill the estimates made by the engineers and the amounts carried in the bill in States represented by gentlemen on this committee seem to correspond largely all along the line, whereas in those States not represented on the committee few projects are cared for in the bill.

Mr. BURGESS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; he is greatly mistaken about that.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. If I could take the time to do it, I could call them off here one after the other.

Mr. BURGESS. Well, I hope the gentleman will ask his question.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will say this: In the State of Texas——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. In the State of Texas the engineers estimated $100,000 for Galveston Channel and the bill carries $250,000. Now, I would like to have some one explain why the committee gave two and one-half times as much as the engineers estimated?

Mr. BURGESS. They did not; the gentleman is greatly mistaken about that.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I do not think I am mistaken in the figures.

Mr. BURGESS. I know the gentleman is.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. What are the proper estimates for the item carried in the bill at Galveston Channel?

Mr. BURGESS. There was recommended $200,000——

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Galveston Channel? The estimate for Galveston Channel for 1916 was $100,000.

Mr. BURGESS. We have not got to Galveston yet, and we will discuss that when we get to it. We are discussing the proposition of New London, Conn., and I do not want the gentleman to get off from that. The question for the committee to determine is whether new projects go in this bill or not. That was the question raised by my friend DONOVAN; that is the question raised by my friend MAHAN; and that is the question to be settled by the committee—whether new projects go on the bill. Everybody ought to understand what a new project is, although it seems some do not, but if this new project goes on, why, it opens up the floodgates, because that will be discrimination. That is what we want to try to avoid. If we adopt this project the others, just as meritorious as this, will want to go on. Then what are you going to do?

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to ask if it is the custom of the committee to appropriate for maintenance of new projects. The gentleman calls this a new project, and yet the committee is appropriating $14,500 for maintenance.

Mr. BURGESS. That is the maintenance for an old project.

Mr. GOULDEN. An old project, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. LEVY. The gentleman says this is a new project, and yet at the same time the House passed it once before.

Mr. BURGESS. That is true, but the House only passed on it and the bill failed; it did not become a law, so we are back just where we were before.

Mr. LEVY. Well, I do not call it a new project.

Mr. BURGESS. The gentleman can call it what he chooses, but it is a new project. [Laughter.]

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Certainly.

Mr. JACOWAY. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks all old projects that have been approved by the Board of Engineers of the War Department should in some way be taken care of? What is the gentleman's opinion on that?

Mr. BURGESS. My opinion is that they ought to be taken care of the best we can, and we have tried to do that in this bill.

Mr. JACOWAY. If any in this bill have been left out, I will ask the gentleman to state to the committee the compelling cause as to why they were omitted from the bill?

Mr. BURGESS. Because we thought there was money enough to take care of them.

Mr. JACOWAY. From what source, might I add?

Mr. BURGESS. From funds on hand——

Mr. JACOWAY. That is all.

Mr. BURGESS. And available.

Mr. BALTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Certainly.

Mr. BALTZ. I notice the Committee on Rivers and Harbors oppose any amendment which is offered on this floor. The committee wants the bill to pass as it came from the committee. Now, has the committee any assurance from the Senate that the bill will pass in its original form?

Mr. BURGESS. I am glad the gentleman asked that. We have not, but we hope that it will; but if the committee puts amendments on, amendment after amendment, I think you will defeat all river and harbor legislation.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Does not the gentleman think it is rather an indication of weakness on the part of the House to stand by a policy of economy like that merely because of danger of defeat in the Senate?

Mr. BURGESS. Well, no; I think that is prudent. We have to consider the way legislation is carried on. We must, if we are sensible men, do that. No bill can become a law unless it passes the House, passes the Senate, and has the signature of the President. That may be the difficulty with our system of legislation, but that is the fact, and everybody ought to recognize it.

Mr. MOORE. I agree with the gentleman that the committee ought to be supported and upheld in the recommendations it has made so far as possible, but it does appear to me that a fixed policy of no new projects is a dangerous thing, and that the committee may not always be able to maintain it, because it invites a condition in the Committee of the Whole that the committee does not want.

Mr. BURGESS. That is true; but a delicate situation comes up in regard to that matter. If we are going to take on a new project, then how will we keep from another new project, and another one, and another new one, and so on, endlessly? So, the only way is to adopt a straight rule against all individuals and all projects.

Mr. MOORE. In the case of the project we are now considering the Senate acted favorably, we are informed.

Mr. BURGESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE. So this might be distinguished from the general run of cases?

Mr. BURGESS. It might be, but could not be. It is a new project just as much as any of the others. There were 24 projects in the last bill that had conditions. There were 74 new projects. All of those have gone out, every one of them, without discussion of the merits. Nobody is opposed to the New London proposition at all. We reported it unanimously the last time. It will get the money if there is another river and harbor bill, and the contribution made by the State of Connecticut can go ahead just the same. There is no cooperation except in a general way, because that was for terminals, and all that, independent of an appropriation for dredging out the channel which they will get next year if there is an appropriation bill. And now it is better——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the time of the gentleman from Texas may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a further question now?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The point I was trying to make was not in opposition to the committee.

Mr. BURGESS. I understand that.

Mr. MOORE. I will not join in any attempt to overthrow the work of the committee or saddle down its work so that the bill will be defeated. I do not believe in undertaking now to stampede the committee; but the committee, having taken its position, has invited the opposition of those who were unable to get their new projects recognized, and therefore some such discussion as this was to be expected. My point is that when we are considering the element of time in the completion of a contract, for instance, like the proposition at New London, whether the committee, yielding to the House, might not make such an exception without in any way prejudicing its stand for the bill as reported. It does not mean a stampede. It means the treatment of an individual case from the floor of the House by way of suggestion to the committee.

Mr. BURGESS. There were 24 projects in the last bill that did not become law, but that were similar to this. If we break down this bill, you will know the result. It is not that I oppose New London. It is not that I oppose Mr. DONOVAN and Mr. MAHAN. I have not two better friends in the House than they are. It hurts me to oppose them, and I feel as kindly to them and their districts and their States as anybody in this House; but I insist that we ought to think of what we are doing.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman and other members of the committee have had a great deal to say about new projects. Is it not a fact that a new project could remain a new project indefinitely until it was provided for by the committee?

Mr. BURGESS. Of course.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Following that up, I will say that I have in mind a great many projects that were recommended strongly a good many years ago by the Board of Engineers that have not yet been inaugurated or provided for by appropriations hailing from the gentleman's committee.

Mr. BURGESS. That is true. If a man serves 8 or 10 years on a committee, he will see what difficulty he is in, and he would get restless against all the kinds of criticism that are being offered on this floor. It makes me sorry that I am in Congress, sorry that I am on any committee. I get disgusted, when a man tries to do his best and serve his country faithfully, when I come here and get abused and called a "grafter," and all that kind of thing. I tell you it is wrong. This bill is as fair a bill as ever came from any committee, and was drawn with the greatest care.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes; a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. A question.

Mr. BURGESS. Well, ask it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Would he call it an old project if it had been passed by Congress, had become an act, further amended the next year in another continuing act, and a third time passed Congress, continuing the improvement, which would make three acts of Congress? Would that be an old or new work?

Mr. BURGESS. It looks to me like it would be three years' old.

Mr. DONOVAN. The Bridgeport act was enacted by Congress in 1899, and was further continued by an act of 1909, and further in 1910.

Mr. BURGESS. No.

Mr. DONOVAN. And if there was such a thing as an old act, that was one. As I understand——

Mr. BURGESS. You are entirely mistaken.

Mr. DONOVAN. Oh, I see.

Mr. BURGESS. That has been threshed over. We want to go on with the bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. I see.

(Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!")

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this project that is before the House for consideration is a meritorious one. There is no doubt about that. It is probably one of the most meritorious new propositions that has come before the committee. But it is not any more so than several others throughout the country.

But it is not a question of merit in this case. It is a question of what you are going to do under present circumstances when you have no money, or have not sufficient money, to take on new projects. You have to draw the line in this bill somewhere.

Here is the situation which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors meets: We find that, due to certain conditions—we will not discuss why, but due to certain conditions—we have not the money to carry on the present river and harbor projects and take on new ones. We all know we are to-day paying a direct tax; $100,000,000 of direct taxes is being levied on the people to pay the expenses of Government. We had to take into consideration that fact.

What did the committee do under the circumstances? We said, "The thing to do is to take care of the Government property, to keep it from deteriorating, to keep the Government from losing money, and to take on no other new projects."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not now. We said, "The thing to do is to take on no new projects." We could not refuse to appropriate very well to maintain Government property and let millions of dollars worth of property be destroyed, or places where contracts were already let, where the work was already being done. We could not refuse to appropriate for it without tying up those plants and without bringing millions of dollars of loss to the country, so that the committee, not on the basis of merit, had to draw the line somewhere. We said, "We will take on no new projects. The Government has no property in new projects that is being lost, no contracts have been let, and no material assembled, and no men are there for the purpose of carrying on this work."

It is not a question of merit, although this is a meritorious proposition. We will take it on when we can reach it. But when you go to work and pick out one project and say that this project must receive the special favor of Congress, it would be inconsistent. Why, there is a gentleman on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Mr. KETTNER, of California, whose constituents are interested in a project already under way on the Sacramento River. In California they are offering to pay $3 for every dollar that the Government will pay on that project. It is a project of great merit. We said, "No; you must wait," although they have $35,000,000 worth of commerce on that river and carried last year 212,000 passengers. There is a project of great merit in my own State, at Willapa Harbor, that has two-thirds of the tonnage of New London, but I did not ask that the work there should be begun, although it was being urged by my people. I said, "You must draw the line somewhere. We have not the money."

Do you want to defeat the entire bill and load it up so that it all goes out? Do you not think the committee does right in keeping the Government's property intact and caring for work already under construction?

I can point out in Oregon a new project calling for only $1,800 expenditure upon a small creek that has $102,000,000 worth of commerce upon it, and they are asking for only $1,800, and the city of Portland is appropriating half a million dollars each year for the commerce that goes on it. If you are talking about merit, I call your attention to that. Half a million dollars is appropriated by the local authorities each year, and $102,000,000 worth of commerce is carried on that stream.

That is in my own jurisdiction, so far as representation on the committee is concerned. It is not a question of merit. Let us treat everybody alike in this House. If there is any member of the committee who is receiving undue favor in this bill, I will vote to take it away if you point it out. We ought not to do it. The men on the committee, if they favor themselves, are unfit to serve upon that committee, and unfit to be Members of this House. [Applause.]

This is not a "pork barrel," gentlemen. But if you are going to come here on the floor of the House and pick out certain projects and stand up here and say the appropriations must be made for the States, not for merit, and that we must favor this project because it is in a State where the Representative has not received anything, that would be putting it on a "pork-barrel" basis. It is not a question of States. It is a question of the necessity of commerce; and I ask this committee to vote down that amendment for that reason, in order that we may appropriate only sufficient amount of money to take care of the projects where the work is already in progress. Let us treat everybody alike. Every man ought to be willing to this. [Applause.]

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a few minutes. I am sure when gentlemen charge that there has been discrimination in this bill they do so under a misapprehension. I am sure no gentleman wants to be unfair to his colleagues.

The question under consideration at this time is the New London (Conn.) project, and the district in which it is located is ably represented by my good friend, Mr. MAHAN. We have made no discrimination thus far in favor of any member of the committee or any Member of the House as to new projects, and no gentleman can rise in his place and point out a single new project in this bill.

Now, because we have a kindly feeling for our good friend, Mr. MAHAN, are we going to say to the country that because Mr. MAHAN, who is popular with the membership of this House, has a new project that he wants put on, a discrimination will be made in favor of him and his district?

Why, my friends, in the State of Georgia there are four new projects. My friend from Texas [Mr. BURGESS] defined what a new project is. A new project is one that has not heretofore been approved by law.

The committee had to draw a line somewhere. The proposition came up as to whether any new projects would be put on. I for one favored new projects, but we knew that in the interest of economy this bill had to be held down, so we did not appropriate for any new projects.

Now, if you put on this new project, because of Mr. MAHAN'S influence in the House, what answer have I to give to the people of Savannah, the great city that I come from, a city with a commerce of 3,154,087 tons, valued at $360,536,275 a year? They have a new project for a turning basin. I would have been delighted to see it go on, but we could not get it because they were putting on no new projects. Yet gentlemen come in here and offer their amendments on the floor of the House for new projects, and charge the committee with discriminating against them. Why, gentlemen, it has not been in the mind of any member of the committee to discriminate against anybody. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHAN] has no better friend on the floor of the House than I am to him; but what answer can I give to the people of my district and the people of Georgia when they say to me, "The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHAN] was able to rise on the floor of the House, and although not a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to put an amendment on the bill for a new project, while you, a member of the committee, were not able to get a new project that we so much desired"?

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. RUSSELL. Can the gentleman inform us what is the amount of new projects that have been proposed and favorably recommended?

Mr. EDWARDS. There are 134 of them, approximating, I understand, something like $150,000,000, favorably passed upon by the engineers.

Mr. RUSSELL. And there are new projects that have been shut out by the committee which, if put on, would increase it about $150,000,000?

Mr. EDWARDS. Approximately it would increase it about $150,000,000 if all of them were put on.

Mr. RUSSELL. And the committee thinks that the bill, as now reported to the House, containing old projects, is just as much as the condition of the Treasury will permit?

Mr. EDWARDS. Absolutely, and in trying to frame the bill on an equitable basis we have treated every project upon its merits. We have not observed State lines, but we have taken up the report of the engineers and appropriated for the various projects of the country as their necessities seemed to urge and upon the merits of each project itself.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. With pleasure.

Mr. RUPLEY. What is the difference between a project in which the Government has invested its money, which project is not completed, and a project in which a State has invested its money upon recommendation of engineers of the Government in compliance with a resolution of Congress? Why is not the project in which the State has its money invested, upon those inducements, in the same category as a project in which the Government has its money invested?

Mr. EDWARDS. The New London (Conn.) project has never been approved by Congress. It has never been approved by law. It is a new project, and you can not get away from it. If you want to break down this bill, load it with these new projects and fix it so that it will never become a law; just open the gate and put them on. I should really like to see the project of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHAN] passed, and I should like to see every other new project that is worthy put on the bill if that were possible, but it is not possible if we really hope for the passage of the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. With pleasure.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to ask the gentleman, in whom I have the utmost confidence——

Mr. EDWARDS. Which is reciprocated most heartily.

Mr. DUPRÉ. If he will give me the assurance that no project for which no appropriation has heretofore been made is provided for in this bill?

Mr. EDWARDS. I understand; there is no new project in this bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. No project for which no previous appropriation has been made by Congress?

Mr. EDWARDS. There is no project in this bill that has not heretofore been adopted by Congress.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How about the question I asked, whether there is any project for which no appropriation has heretofore been made by Congress?

Mr. EDWARDS. I think it is true that there is no such project in the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am not hostile to the committee. I am trying to ascertain what the facts are.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman from Louisiana is friendly to river and harbor improvements.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I should think so, living, as I do, behind the Mississippi River.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not the committee has ever considered discontinuing some of the unmeritorious projects which have been started, and whether it would not be advisable, instead of stopping all new projects, to shut off for awhile the flow of money which is going to certain projects which have been universally condemned as having no merit behind them?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Which one?

A MEMBER. Name one.

Mr. EDWARDS. I will say to the gentleman that we have not only considered that, but we have cut off some that did not meet the approval of the committee because of an apparent lack of merit to warrant appropriations.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I wish to say that it is just such statements as that made by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] which throw discredit on river and harbor legislation. When he denounces certain projects as unmeritorious he ought to designate which ones they are, and not becloud the whole issue in that manner. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. On the subject of there being no new project in the bill I do not question the correctness of the gentleman's statement, but my research has led me to a different conclusion. In the State of Mississippi, Pascagoula Harbor, as I see it, is a new project, and there is an appropriation of $110,000 for it. Now, if that is an old project and a continuing project, I would like information upon that.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is an old project.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That project was adopted in bills heretofore passed.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. What appropriations have been made for it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The project was adopted originally for $387,000, on condition that the local communities contribute a certain amount, approximately $100,000.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Have these conditions been met and complied with?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They have.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I have not been able to run that down. When was that done?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The bill of 1912 or 1913, I forget which, made the appropriation.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will now ask the gentleman from Georgia about the Delaware River, where it says there was no estimate, but $1,500,000 was appropriated.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is an old project.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that the committee had discontinued some nonmeritorious projects. I am going to ask him to name one of them.

Mr. EDWARDS. I will not say they were not meritorious projects, but we have failed to appropriate for a few since I have been on the committee because we did not see merit in them. I can not designate them without reference to the records of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet, I ask permission to print as a part of my remarks a letter written by Mr. Thomas Purse, secretary of the Board of Trade of Savannah, Ga., to the editor of Pearson's Magazine. That magazine stated there was no commerce on the Savannah River, except once in a while a log was floated down. Now, as a matter of fact, there has been a commerce of $75,000,000 over that stream, as appears from Mr. Purse's letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The following is the article referred to:

SAVANNAH, GA., October 31, 1914.

EDITOR PEARSON MAGAZINE,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: In your November (1914) issue appears an article entitled "The pigs and the pork," written by Mr. Judson C. Welliver, and in which the author criticizes severely appropriations made by the United States Congress for improvement of our rivers and harbors. Expenditures for the improvement of the Savannah River are referred to in the following language:

"Uncle Sam has expended $773,527 on improvement of the Savannah River, according to the engineering authorities. As a result, an insignificant commerce, most of it in floating logs, is carried on this river. It looks like another of the wastes or near wastes of the system."

A part of this statement is misleading, and the remainder is entirely erroneous.

The expenditures on the entire Savannah River, both below and above the city of Savannah, have amounted to a great deal more than $773,527. The "insignificant commerce" which is "carried on this river" is indicated by the fact that in 1912 the exports from Savannah exceeded in value those of any other port of the United States on the Atlantic coast, excepting New York alone.

What the writer no doubt had in mind was that portion of the Savannah River north of the city of Savannah, more specifically the waterway between Savannah and Augusta. The language used by him, however, carries to the mind of the casual reader the idea that he was referring to the expenditures on the Savannah River from the ocean as far up as river navigation goes, and that his reference to "an insignificant commerce, most of which is floating logs," embraced all of the commerce passing down the Savannah River to the sea.

The United States engineers' reports show that the total expenditures to June 30, 1913, on the Savannah River between Savannah and Augusta, both for improvements and for maintenance, amounted to $773,528.04. Since the author of the article in question manifestly obtained from the engineers' reports the figures used by him in his article, it is difficult to understand why he failed to secure from authoritative sources of a similar nature his figures as to the commerce carried on the Savannah River.

According to the engineer's report, the Savannah River above Savannah is navigable to Augusta, a distance of 202 miles. Previous to its improvement there were numerous shoals in the river with less than 3 feet at normal low water. Other obstructions consisted of overhanging trees, snags, and sunken logs. The original project, submitted September 22, 1880, provided for securing a channel of 5 feet in depth and 80 feet in width by means of removing snags, trees, sand bars, and protection of banks, at a cost of $93,480.09. The amount expended upon the work under the project of 1890 to June 30, 1913, was $680,046.95 (of which $148,426.14 was for maintenance), which, added to the amount previously expended, gives a total expenditure on this work of $773,527.04. In other words, for an expenditure of $680,047 from 1890 to 1913, the amount of commerce that has been handled on the Savannah River by boats between Savannah and Augusta, Ga., has amounted to approximately 2,000,000 tons, of an approximate valuation of $75,000,000. Cotton alone was valued at about $8,000,000.

The effect of the improvements upon freight rates has been a reduction of from 30 per cent to 50 per cent, according to the nature of the commodities.

The part of Mr. Welliver's article reading, "As a result, an insignificant commerce, most of it in floating logs, is carried on this river," certainly is not based on facts, because, if he will take time to investigate, he will find that the value of the timber rafted down the river averages only $300,000 annually. Take, as an illustration, the year 1910. In this year less cotton moved on the river steamers than for any year during the past 24; the value of diversified freight, excluding cotton, amounted to $4,814,200, whilst the timber rafted for the same period amounted to $250,000. To be more explicit, during the past 24 years the value of commerce between Savannah and Augusta was as follows: Cotton, $8,000,000; diversified freight, $67,000,000; total, $75,000,000; whilst the value of timber rafted for the same period was approximately $7,200,000.

The foregoing facts are most convincing of the fallacy of such a statement that most of the commerce handled on the Savannah River between Savannah and Augusta is floating logs. To further illustrate the benefits that have accrued by the deepening of the Savannah River between Savannah and Augusta, there is now in course of construction two steel barges 150 feet long, 30 feet beam, with a capacity of 400 tons each, at a cost of $40,000 apiece; and it is contemplated in the near future that two more barges will be built to handle the increasing commerce that has developed, due to the increased depth of water. The barges in question will be self-propelling and are of the most modern design, operated by twin screws, with producer-gas engines, and will operate between Savannah and Augusta on a regular weekly schedule, with a speed of 7 miles per hour against the current.

As to the criticism directed generally upon the river and harbor improvements, we may state that the Federal Government has expended on the improvements of the Savannah River and Harbor from Savannah to the ocean within the past 10 years an aggregate sum of $3,358,263, during which time foreign exports handled at Savannah have increased from $53,770,382 to $90,738,842, or 69 per cent. At the time of the commencement of this expenditure in 1904 the customs duties collected by the Federal Government at the customhouse at Savannah amounted to $54,725.44. The amount collected for the past fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, amounted to $141,358.88, which represents an increase of 158 per cent. The customs duties collected for the past 10 years amount to $835,595.99, which represents a direct return to the Government on the capital invested, to say nothing of the indirect benefits to the population and industries of most of the southeastern States, whose commercial interests are served through the improved facilities offered at this port. Coastwise commerce has likewise shown a most remarkable increase during the past 10 years, due to construction of larger vessels by the steamship interests making this port their terminal, brought about by the greater depth of water, thereby enabling vessels of deeper draft to proceed to the docks and depart at any state of the tide. For information it might be stated that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, the coastwise commerce handled through the port of Savannah was approximately $280,000,000 in value.

In view of the fact that such a misleading statement was published in your issue of November, it is hoped that this article will receive the same courteous treatment.

Yours, respectfully,

THOMAS PURSE,
Secretary Savannah Board of Trade.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman said a while ago that the committee was taking on no new projects, and if they did take on new projects they would have to treat all alike, and it would amount to $150,000,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. That would be with the House, of course. They would hardly put on that much. I take it that if the House opened up the new projects they would consider all the new projects on their merits, and if meritorious, the House would take some of them on.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman said it would amount to $150,000,000. That means projects recommended by the engineers, and after the most scientific investigation. Now, some of us here are opposed to wasteful river and harbor appropriations, and have been for two or three years. What I want to know is if we may expect that the committee will next year take on these projects and bring in a $150,000,000 bill?

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not speak for the committee, but for myself. No project would go into the bill unless it showed merit, and if it is meritorious it ought to be improved in its turn. If it is not meritorious, it will not get into the bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman said if we took the meritorious projects it would amount to $150,000,000. He said the committee did not consider them on account of the condition of the Treasury. I want to know if we people who are opposed to these wasteful and worthless river and harbor appropriations may expect that next year, when they take on new projects, the bill will carry $150,000,000?

Mr. EDWARDS. Oh, no; the committee will, no doubt, put in the most urgent and the most meritorious of the new projects.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is not the effect of the gentleman's answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas that the committee will exercise judgment and weed out of the new projects those that are the most meritorious?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes; not only in the committee, but it ought to be done also on the floor of the House. The meritorious ones ought to be selected.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That means that you will accept the more urgent of the new projects. Now, why can not the House do exactly the same thing—accept those that are the most meritorious and vote out those that are not?

Mr. EDWARDS. The committee, of course, is but the instrument of the House; but after we have passed fairly upon these projects there is no reason why we should be charged with favoritism——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am making no such charge.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this Congress has been in session about five weeks. If we exclude the time taken for holidays, call it four weeks. During that time we have passed in the House four appropriation bills—the District of Columbia, the Post Office, the legislative, and the Indian appropriation bills. Last Saturday we commenced the consideration of the river and harbor bill. It is now Friday of the next week and we have read 4 pages of the bill out of 55, and have read, I believe, five or six lines to-day in addition to the amendment which has been offered. It is now 10 minutes past 3 o'clock. Congress will come to a final end at noon on the 4th of March next. Between now and then, unless we are to have a special session of Congress, there remain to be considered the Army appropriation bill, the Agricultural, the Navy, sundry civil, pension, the Military Academy, Diplomatic and Consular, and the general deficiency bills. We have passed four bills in four weeks, and we have nine bills to pass in less than seven weeks and have them become a law. I merely want to suggest that if we are going to spend three or four hours on an amendment, or if this House is going to endeavor to make up a river and harbor bill in the Committee of the Whole, we may as well take all the time we want, because we will be here all next summer. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment again reported?

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REILLY of Connecticut) there were 44 ayes and 61 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Connecticut River, Conn.: Completing improvement and for maintenance below Hartford, $30,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to strike out lines 6 and 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, strike out all of lines 6 and 7.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, before addressing myself to the particular amendment, which I intend to do in a moment, I wish to suggest that the remarks just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in reference to the bill before us are very pertinent, and that we all agree with them, but we have a bill before us aggregating $34,000,000, covering 250 items, and it is not right to fail to give such a bill fair consideration. This bill has been sidetracked, as he well says, for other bills. An apple-barrel bill took two days of this House, and there was not a question about it except as to the merit of the measurement, and I voted for it. For weeks we have been spending the time of the House over a printing bill, by which it was hoped to save the Government $750,000 a year. But here is a bill carrying $34,000,000, with 250 items, and will you slide it through to-day or to-morrow? I agree that it is not a proper thing to take up so much time about an amendment, and I voted against the particular amendment, not that it may not have merit, but I believe, with the committee, that this is no place to build up a river and harbor bill. It strikes at the very methods of construction of this kind of legislation.

Speaking to this last amendment that was struck out, the condition there is just like the condition in the harbor of New London, of which I am now speaking. All of the wharf facilities have been owned by the railroads. We have expended $159,000 for that harbor, 23 feet in depth it is to-day. There is no foreign shipping. Read the reports which I have here. That report shows that the steamboats carry most of the traffic outside of the coal, and who owns the steamboats? The New Haven Railroad. These improvements are largely for its benefit, as it is at Hartford. Just the same situation occurred with Portland, Me., yesterday. Read the report of the commissioner of commerce. In practically every case I have questioned thus far the harbor facilities have been controlled by this system of railroads, and they have not only controlled the terminals, but they have controlled the shipping as well. That is the condition that confronts us at New London and Hartford, and that is the reason I move to strike out, because it is a large appropriation, comparatively, $30,000. The balance available July last was $70,988. Past appropriations for this project reach $873,170.

The report of the Commissioner of Commerce in this case shows that of the Hartford frontage, 18 per cent, or 1,280 feet, are owned by the New Haven road, and about the same is owned by the gas company, the Hartford Electric Light Co., and two private estates. The balance is owned by the city for park purposes. There are no piers, unless they have been constructed since this report. The New Haven Railroad owns the greatest part of the frontage on the opposite bank. What is true of that is true of the other two cases that I have cited. I do not care to present to the House at this time all these various cases, but I wish to give you one or two so that you will know that this type of harbor is for railroad terminals and railroad shipping, and this Government has continually made appropriations for such projects in the past. I believe all such propositions ought to be stricken out.

One word further. I realize that it is a disagreeable duty to raise any question in regard to these projects. I do not know in whose district they are located, and I am perfectly innocent of any personal feeling about it. I simply wish to call the attention of the House to conditions shown by Government reports. Let me say that we passed through this House a $43,000,000 bill last year, which went over to the other side and was loaded down to the extent of $53,000,000. That bill was killed. You would not give much time for discussion and you laughed at discussion here. You laughed at those who raised points against it, but we were and are sincere. Simply as a question of procedure, is it not well to give some time to these different items? Defend them if you choose. All that we care to do is to quote the Engineer's report, as a rule, and show what the conditions are, and give to the House and to the country the benefit of the information thus gained. Make the appropriations if you believe them to be right; but I assure you this bill, as I view it in some particulars, is not much of an improvement over the one of last year, which was defeated.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman know how many stopping points there are between the Sound and the city of Hartford, where the steamers stop?

Mr. FREAR. I do not, but I know the steamboats conducting the business are or were practically all owned by the New Haven Railroad, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Commerce.

The navigation company which owns the stock was controlled by the New Haven Railroad Co. at the time the commissioner made his report. I have all of the statistics here.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, between Hartford and Long Island Sound, a distance of 52 miles, there are 14 points along the river at which the regular steamers of the Hartford & New York Transportation Co. usually stop. They are the Hartford, Glastonbury, South Glastonbury, Middletown, Middle Haddam, Rock Landing, East Haddam or Goodspeed Landing, Hadlyme, Deep River, Broadway Landing, Elys Wharf, Essex, Lyme, and Saybrook Point. In addition to these points, there are a number of others where stops are occasionally made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hudson River, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $1,500,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would hesitate to move to strike out an appropriation of that size without much study, irrespective of the fact that it may have no weight with this House; but I wish to acquaint the House with some facts that may be known to the committee, but which I do not believe are known generally. Here is an appropriation of a million and a half dollars to carry on a channel of the Hudson River to meet the canal that is being constructed in the State of New York at a cost of something like $150,000,000. The question was submitted recently to a vote of the people of the State of New York, and they decided to build that canal. I know that there are many very able men in the State of New York who doubt very much whether there will be proportionate good results from that, but few people will question the advisability of causing the Hudson River to connect with that canal at the same depth of 12 feet in order to make the canal effective. But there are in this bill new surveys to be had. A committee that is going to economize proposes a 27-foot channel, as I now remember, for this additional distance, to cost presumably from ten to twenty million dollars. A 30-foot project is proposed up the Hudson, and this particular appropriation under which this item of $1,500,000 is named was started at $5,000,000, and the engineers within four years increased the estimates 50 per cent. To be accurate and give the actual figures, I find it was $5,186,064, and inside of four years the estimate was increased to $7,530,000. This is a large river and it has a large traffic, presumably more will come from the canal; but I call the attention of the House and the committee to the fact that in these new surveys which you are putting in you have some tremendously large items. If you want to economize, why put them in at this time?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR (continuing). In a moment. In relation to the statement of the chairman that we are gradually going to remove the waterway obligations to which we are being committed, why, it is increasing very fast, and all you have to do is to study the road you are traveling to see you are traveling fast into deeper debt, and the obligations are becoming greater constantly.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Just one question. As I understood the gentleman, he stated that New York bonded itself to the extent of $110,000,000 for the deepening——

Mr. FREAR. Increased it $150,000,000 to complete.

Mr. COOPER. Well, $150,000,000 to deepen the Erie Canal. This proposition is for the United States Government to connect up that magnificent canal with the Hudson River, and so have a means of getting freight from Buffalo and the Great Lakes right straight on down to the ocean?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Now, is not that a very wise thing for the Government of the United States to do?

Mr. FREAR. Has the gentleman finished his question? If the gentleman had been listening to what I said, he would have known I said it was; but the surveys ordered will in all probability require twenty or thirty million dollars, and which have no relation to this 12-foot canal. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understand that this $150,000,000 is to deepen the Hudson River up to the mouth of the canal?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. That is $150,000,000. Now, what is the estimate on the $5,000,000 project to complete that?

Mr. FREAR. Seven million dollars. It was originally $5,000,000, and the engineers, those gentlemen on whom we depend so strongly, jumped it 50 per cent in four years.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Now, they want to make that Erie Canal a 12-foot canal. How many years will it take them to get that canal deepened to a 12-foot canal? Have they ever made any estimate of that at all?

Mr. FREAR. I can not answer the question.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Why do this work prior to the time they have made a success of digging that canal, if they ever do?

Mr. FREAR. I could not answer the gentleman.

Mr. CALLAWAY. One further question I wanted to ask. I did not get the other project of which the gentleman spoke.

Mr. FREAR. A 27-foot depth is proposed for the Hudson River up to, as I remember, Watervliet.

Mr. CALLAWAY. To the mouth of the canal?

Mr. FREAR. Practically to the mouth of the canal.

Mr. CALLAWAY. A depth of 27 feet when the canal has only a depth of 12 feet?

Mr. FREAR. I am suggesting that in reference to the survey.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I wanted to answer the question of the gentleman, but I will do it in my own time.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman finds fault with the proposition to have a survey at this time?

Mr. FREAR. That, practically, is in response to the chairman's statement that we are going to get out from under debt, whereas we are getting in deeper constantly and rapidly.

Mr. MOORE. I do not understand the gentleman to find fault with the work already done on the Hudson to connect that up with the canal?

Mr. FREAR. No; but just one word in reference to that. I talked with one man recently in the city of New York at the board of trade, in the presence of very responsible men, and he said to me substantially that he carried most of the freight on the Hudson River to-day on his boats. That is Mr. Kuykendahl. He further said there was sufficient depth for all purposes, and that the proposal to deepen the Hudson, as has been suggested, to this depth of 27 feet was, in his judgment, of no value.

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask the gentleman this: Why is this not a proper time to ask for a survey to obtain the information upon which the Board of Engineers and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can act?

Mr. FREAR. In the judgment of the gentleman from Philadelphia, who favors all these appropriations, that would be his judgment, but with me it is different.

Mr. MOORE. If I were going to investigate the condition of the Hudson from Troy to Albany, I assure the gentleman I would not go to the steamship companies of New York to obtain my information. I would go along the Hudson River where the people are engaged in industries, who seek an outlet for their freight to the sea.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, as most of my time has been used in questions by others, I would ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. I have agreed with the gentleman that, so far as the canal is concerned, the 12-foot improvement is right. So far as digging for the purposes of carrying great vessels through it, I think it is wrong to do so at this time. And it is for this reason: In almost every European country, take it in the case of Hamburg and in the case of Bremen, all these cities there have their lighters come up for 60 miles. I know that in the case of Philadelphia they have dredged a 35-foot channel way up to the city. Possibly we have been justified in it. It has been a question, though, whether or not that is of great benefit to the public at large. It benefits some people, it is true. But here is a proposition to run 150 miles, I believe, and that is the case of the survey that is proposed, and it seems to me that we ought——

Mr. MOORE. I wanted the gentleman to take it from the viewpoint of Troy, Albany, and the great West, and the traffic that would come through the canal, rather than from the viewpoint of Hamburg. That is the gentleman's trouble.

Mr. FREAR. I understand. Troy has had these opportunities for all these years. The railroads have driven the Erie Canal out of the business of carrying, practically reducing the proportion from half of the traffic down to 2 per cent.

Mr. MOORE. Let them work again. That is the very point, namely, to get competition.

Mr. FREAR. If they work this project and not take the money out of the Treasury and work Uncle Sam, I have no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; if I have the time.

Mr. COOPER. Would the gentleman convey the impression that the completing of the Erie Canal did nothing for the people of the country? Does not the gentleman know that it brought the price of carrying a bushel of wheat down from about 20 or 26 cents to 2 or 3 cents?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman makes an argument. I will say, yes; that it helped to do it. But when the railroads were built they put the canal out of operation. And the belief of the people there to-day, many of them, and people of good judgment, is that the same condition will result when $150,000,000 is placed in the canal.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I wish to answer first the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY], who apparently is laboring under the impression that the barge canal is "to be" constructed. I wish to state that the question was submitted to a referendum, and it was voted by the people to bond the State for $101,000,000; and then we submitted a second referendum that bonded the State for over $30,000,000 for terminals. Now, of this work approximately 60 per cent has been completed.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You mean that 60 per cent of the making of that 12-foot channel from Buffalo to Albany has been completed?

Mr. PARKER of New York. I do; yes. I make that statement. Sixty per cent of the work has been completed for the barge canal. But still you must bear in mind that that takes in the Champlain Canal, too. That canal is about completed. But about 60 per cent of the entire work has been completed.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If they completed 60 per cent for $101,000,000, why do you——

Mr. PARKER of New York. They will do it with the $101,000,000; the $101,000,000 was to complete the canal. The $30,000,000 was for terminals at various places along the canal and along the Hudson River.

Now, to take up the question of the appropriation of $1,500,000. You ask if this was to be extended to $5,000,000. It is a completion, practically, of the $5,000,000 which the United States Government must spend to make effective the expenditure of $140,000,000 of our money.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How much has been expended there already by the Government?

Mr. PARKER of New York. I am unable to answer that question, but will answer the gentleman in this way, that it is nothing in comparison with what we ourselves have spent, not for the benefit of the people of the State of New York alone but for the benefit of the people of the West, who wished to send their produce through the canal which we built and which we paid for.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How much more, after this $1,500,000, will be required to make the original estimate complete?

Mr. PARKER of New York. If I am not misinformed, this $1,500,000 will practically complete what is called the Troy Dam, which must be put in to keep a uniform depth of water over the bars between Troy and Albany, and the channel will be deepened to a 12-foot channel down over the whole of the river.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Now, the thing I was most interested about was this survey provision on page 41——

Mr. PARKER of New York. I am going to take the survey up when I get through with the canal. I will take that up when I finish with the barge canal project.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I am simply asking these questions for information.

Mr. PARKER of New York. If you will ask me the questions when I come to the subject, I will answer them with a great deal of pleasure, because I think I shall be able to do so. I am addressing myself now to the question under discussion. I am perfectly willing to debate the million-and-a-half proposition with you.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I am not debating. I am trying to find out.

Mr. PARKER of New York. This million and five hundred thousand dollars that we are asking is to make effective what is costing the State of New York about $140,000,000. I do not say that we are doing it entirely in an altruistic manner, for we are not. We are doing it for the benefit of the commercial supremacy of New York City. We do not say that we are doing it all for you gentlemen in the West. Nevertheless, you will derive the benefits. You can not help it. On account of the Erie Canal you have had cheaper freight rates. If you should to-day fill up this canal which we are digging, your rates on all commodities that are grown in the West would immediately go up, and you know it. And we are willing to spend our money to get those rates down. Why question an appropriation of $1,500,000 to the State of New York?

Now, about the survey. I wish to state that the survey is to ascertain this fact.

You know, of course, that one of the things that interfere with the efficiency of the barge canal is the tremendous dockage charges.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. We are ready to vote now, I will say to the gentleman, and vote it in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I wish to state that your dockage charges increase your freight rates to a tremendous extent. Now, the dockage in Troy and Albany are very much lower. This survey is for the purpose of ascertaining if the Hudson River can be deepened to a 27-foot channel at a reasonable expense, and therefore get the corresponding reduction in freight rates.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the largest items in the bill, and one of the most meritorious.

I just wanted to call attention to this fact that a few moments ago, when we were voting on the proposition of inserting new projects in the bill, which would undoubtedly have led to its defeat, on the Democratic side there were a number of gentlemen from the State of New York voting against the committee. Now I notice that there are only two gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle from the State of New York present when we are about to vote on this provision, of such importance to that State. I did not see how the New York delegation stood on the Republican side, but I now see only two.

Mr. MANN. If you had stayed on this side, where you belong, you would know how many there were on this side.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What was the gentleman's remark?

Mr. MANN. I say if the gentleman had stayed on this side, where he belonged, he would know how many there were. I regret to part with you. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. On this occasion I disagree with my distinguished leader. I do not think that there is any politics in this bill. [Applause.] The gentleman is mistaken about that.

As I was about to say, only two Members of the New York delegation are present—my friend BROWN of New York and Mr. DRISCOLL, a distinguished member of the committee; both voted with the committee. But here is one of the largest items in the bill, and those gentlemen who were here a while ago and were so anxious to overthrow the committee and lead to the defeat of the bill are not here now to advocate their own item. [Laughter and applause.]

That is the kind of treatment we receive from certain of these distinguished gentlemen. They are very anxious that the committee shall take care of their projects, but they are not around to look after them themselves, but when there is an occasion to overthrow the committee you find them all here.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins let me ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who has just criticized the New York Members for not being here to support this particular item in the bill, that Mr. PARKER of New York has just spoken in defense of this item, and Mr. CALDER and Mr. MOTT and a number of other gentlemen from New York are here, including Mr. PLATT, Judge DANFORTH, and——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not attempt to take away any credit from the gentleman. I saw the gentleman. I was speaking of gentlemen from New York on the Democratic side.

Mr. MOORE. There are more gentlemen here interested in this legislation than there are interested in the projects affecting the State of Washington. In fact, they have to be here, because the gentleman from the State of Washington alone is very well qualified to look after Washington matters. But he is now on the Democratic side, where he ought not to be, in view of the violent speech he made yesterday criticizing the President of the United States. [Laughter.] I call attention to the fact that Col. GOULDEN, of the twenty-third New York district, is present.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me. I stepped out for a few moments and have missed a part of this interesting discussion.

Mr. MOORE. Yes. I will say of the gentleman from New York that I know of no more faithful or zealous Member on that side of the House. He did not leave the Chamber until after the Harlem River item was safely passed. [Laughter.] After he had seen that item go safely by, he retired for a brief moment, of course, to answer the call of a constituent. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOULDEN. If the gentleman will pardon an observation in regard to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], whom I know and like very well, I desire to apply this to him in explanation of his being on the Democratic side, that—

While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.

We welcome him to this side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, referring to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], let me remark that the reason why we accept the gentleman's presence so complacently to-day is that we took his speech yesterday as a joke. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. I understand you are satisfied with him to-day, although yesterday you were not quite so fond. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has raised an interesting question with regard to channel depths. He objects to the introduction at this time of an item authorizing a survey for a deeper channel for the Hudson River. If ever there was a time when a survey should be asked for a deeper depth, it is at this time, because if the request were not made now a year's delay would result. The survey is the first step. The gentleman knows that a survey does not bind the committee or bind the House or bind the Engineers to the project, but is simply a request for data which the Engineers and the committee and the House must have before they can consider a project.

Now, with respect to the Hudson River, if they have not yet got a depth of 12 feet up to Albany and Troy, which they are trying to get through this appropriation, and they feel a necessity for a greater depth by reason of their great population and commerce, this is the time to ask for a survey for that increased depth. It is simply a matter of information, and does not involve a cent of expense except the cost of making the investigation.

As to the project itself, which the gentleman has criticized mildly, although he approves of the connection between the Great Lakes and the river and the ports of the Atlantic coast, it has come to my personal knowledge that within the last few months a vessel carrying passengers from Albany to Troy struck bottom three times on the way because there was only a 9-foot or less depth in the channel between the two great cities—cities with a great industrial output at the very center of communication between the Great Lakes on the west and the Atlantic Ocean on the east. And I wish to say—and I say it with some degree of shame, and it ought to shame the Government of the United States—that one of the small torpedo boats of the Government, upon which for a time was the Secretary of the Navy, went aground in front of Albany because there was not sufficient water for such a vessel of the Government to pass. Now, in the event of it ever being necessary—which it could not be now under our treaty relations—for the Government to pass one of its smallest craft, either to carry supplies or munitions of war from the Atlantic Ocean to the Great Lakes, if this channel condition prevailed, it could not get through to take advantage of the more than $150,000,000 that the State of New York itself has already spent in providing a passageway from the West to the Atlantic Ocean in order to hold down the railroad rates and afford the very competition which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has not yet appreciated is the crux and the essence of the waterways agitation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Staten Island Sound, N. Y. and N. J.: Continuing improvement, $500,000; for maintenance of improvement of Arthur Kill and the waters connecting Raritan Bay with New York Harbor, including channel north of Shooters Island, $5,000; in all, $505,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is seldom that I take up any time to make a speech before this body. I desire to say that I am to blame for the absence of the Members from the State of New York, as referred to by the gentleman from the State of Washington. They remained here for about 3 hours and 40 minutes, as they generally do, always attending to the business of the House. At my suggestion they went down to lunch, and I am to blame for their absence. As a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from the State of New York, I thought I had the right to advise my colleagues to go down to the restaurant.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is the gentleman responsible for the way they voted on the amendment awhile ago?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am not. I did my best to get my colleagues from the State of New York to vote with the committee, as I do not believe that the work of a committee is of much account in the House of Representatives if, after bringing in a report of procedure, the other Members of the House can not take the word and advice of the committee, especially in respect to new projcets.

I do not claim that everything submitted by the committee to the House is in just exactly the form in which it ought to go to the country, but I do believe in a case like this, where men have been on the committee for 12, 14, 16, or 20 years, their judgment, after working on the bill for six weeks, is entitled to great credit and consideration.

This project for the improvement of the Hudson River, after the State of New York donated about $150,000,000 for the Erie Canal improvement, should, in my judgment, receive the favorable vote of every Member of the House of Representatives. Only $3,000,000 or thereabouts has been spent up to the present time by the United States Government on the Hudson River project. As the gentleman on the other side of the House stated, it will reduce freight rates. There is no question about that. Every man in this country knows that the river competition will reduce freight rates, and when a further depth is given to this improvement freight rates are bound to go down much lower than they are at the present time, because we will have competition with the railroads, and that must and will reduce freight rates.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What does the gentleman think we are going to do about the freight rates, when the Interstate Commerce Commission is allowing the railroads a 5 per cent raise and the gentleman is asking us to spend millions of dollars to push the rates down?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I say that in competition with the water rates the rail freight rates must go down in that locality; and naturally, if they go down in that locality, it will be of great benefit to all parts of the country.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that if the rates go down in that locality, and the statement of the Interstate Commerce Commission is correct, that the railroads must have a higher rate generally in order to live, the railroads will have to raise their rates at interior points in order that the railroad companies can meet their losses at places where they have water competition?

Mr. DRISCOLL. In certain localities and under certain conditions I think the gentleman is right, but as a general proposition I think the gentleman is in error. I believe the reduction of freight rates that will be made by the completion of the Erie Canal will be of great benefit to the entire country.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If water competition cuts the rates down along the canals and rivers, the railroads must raise their freight rates at interior points to meet that deficit, as the Interstate Commerce Commission has just held in allowing a raise of 5 per cent. The people at interior points who are called upon to make these contributions will make their freight rates greater?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No; because the railroad goes to so many places which can not be reached by water. I am glad to see the New York Members returning from lunch.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Raritan Bay, N. J.: For maintenance, $20,000.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to say with regard to this Hudson River item, over which there has been so much discussion, that I do not wholly agree with my colleague about the barge canal in New York State. I think the State of New York has been altogether too free in spending its money for the benefit of the rest of the country. I do not believe it ought to have built the barge canal with its own money, without any contribution from the United States Government. With regard to the Troy dam, the State of New York wanted to build it, and offered to build it, but the United States Government would not let the State of New York build it. That is why this item of $1,500,000 is in the bill. The United States Government held it up last year, and it looks as though the whole barge canal might be held up by the failure to complete the Troy dam, which the United States Government would not let the State of New York build.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Do you mean that the United States Government would not let the State of New York contribute the money necessary to do that work, but insisted on doing the work itself in these hard times?

Mr. PLATT. I mean that the War Department would not allow the State of New York to build it, on the ground that it was in a navigable river, although the present dam was built by the State.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Newark Bay and Passaic River, N. J.: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out lines 16 and 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, strike out all of lines 16 and 17.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do this because of reasons based on the report of the engineer. We have expended upon the bay and river something like $2,192,350. In October last there was on hand $253.217. We are asked in this item to appropriate $150,000 more. This is for a 20-foot project, and here is the engineer's report:

This improvement is necessary to the great industrial interests and has reduced freight rates, and its continuance is necessary to the successful carrying on of the business of this locality.

The point to which I wish to call attention particularly is that this improvement is necessary to the great industrial interests along the wharves. If that be true, if that be the function of government to look after special improvements, for special private interests as distinguished from the general public, then the case of Matawan Bay, which I criticized last year, ought to have been allowed, although the Senate struck it out. It was for the benefit of one fertilizing factory; and in the case of the Northeast River, for the benefit of three fertilizing factories. It is for the great industrial interests, and not for the people at large. There is no showing that it is necessary for commerce for the people of Newark, or that it will reduce their charges one cent, or that it will benefit anyone except the great industrial interests there located.

There is one phase of this question that occurs to me in this case. The Commissioner of Commerce, from whom I have quoted, showing the character of the surroundings of these harbors where they are owned by railroads, as I have shown, in this case presents an interesting state of facts. His report, volume 3, page 102, shows that the New Jersey Dock & Implement Co., incorporated in 1905, acquired the Hackensack Meadow Co., which owns 33.095 acres near Newark, and so forth.

This piece of land is at the junction of the two rivers directly opposite the city of Newark. This property is being benefited by the dredging of this channel. There is no contribution, and it seems if there could be any case requiring contribution from the riparian owner and from great industrial interests, it seems proper to ask for it in this case.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask the gentleman if he is familiar with the industrial condition around Paterson, N. J., on the Passaic River?

Mr. FREAR. Only slightly.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman bases his amendment on the fact that it would benefit large interests?

Mr. FREAR. For the benefit of large industrial interests states the engineer.

Mr. MOORE. That is rather a harsh term around here just now, but the large interests referred to, I wish to inform the gentleman, is the great industrial center that takes in large quantities of raw material, fabricate them, and turn them out to the public in the form of the finished products, which go all over the United States. I call the gentleman's attention to the further interesting fact that where Paterson, with its great industrial interests, or, to use the phrase of the gentleman, "with large industrial interests," is taking on raw material from all centers of the country and sending out the finished product, that at times the mills are positively hampered in their work because it takes so long to transport the raw material to the mills 10 miles away, and if the river is open, then relief along that way would be obtained.

Mr. FREAR. Then they ought to make a contribution, and there would be no objection to it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be from the city of Newark. It is a city of 350,000 people. It has in it more different sorts of factories than any other town of the same size in the whole United States. When it was included in my district it had the largest production, both in amount and variety, of articles of any town in a single district. It is made up chiefly of people working in the various factories. I had the honor to introduce an amendment years ago for the survey of the Passaic River for a greater depth. It was then about 9 or 10 feet deep, and we are now to have 20 feet up to the city, because it has been found that the commerce, foreign and domestic, has increased by leaps and bounds. Instead of bringing simply limestone and cement blocks to Newark, as we used to do, and coal or grain, we now bring ores from Mexico and goods from all over the world. We have to bring the ships of great draft into the bay, and they now have to lighter to the wharves in the city of Newark. We have from 35,000 to 50,000 people working in the mills. It is for the benefit of the people there that they should have that commercial connection by water. It is for the reduction of freights on goods that come there. It is to enable the town to thrive and the country to thrive, because the country thrives when we have cheap materials going to the city of Newark and cheaper manufactures sent from that city.

I have only one other thing to say in respect to this, and that is with reference to that meadows improvement company. I did not know that there was an improvement company. I did know that years ago, when we had to lighter the mud out to sea upon our dredges it cost us some 40 cents a cubic yard, and I know that we made a remonstrance—and I was active in that—against granting any dredging contract at any such price; and it was finally discovered that the dredgers could buy salt meadow, which was worth in the market a very small amount, and that by pumping the mud on those salt meadows they were able to do the dredging for the United States Government at a small fraction of the original cost, so that we are really able to make our improvements in an economic way. I do not object to the fact that the men who do the dredging buy land in order that they may do the dredging work in the river at a cheaper cost to the Government. I believe that is good business. They might have put that mud on anyone else's land or on their own land, as they thought to their advantage. There is plenty of other land that they could put it on.

Something was suggested about local contributions to such work. The city of Newark has recently appropriated something over a million dollars in buying lands to establish at its own expense and dig a deep ship canal from the bay up to the city. Newark has expended quite an amount of this appropriation, and that fact has been brought forward in recent hearings before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I understand that that committee was of the opinion that it was a most unusual thing—the energy and the earnestness with which the people of Newark had done their own share in trying to help the work of the United States Government and to encourage the commerce, which really redounds to the benefit of the United States. I believe that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monongahela River, Pa.: Completing the reconstruction of Lock and Dam No. 6, $211,200.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, strike out all of lines 14 and 15.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I feel sure that there are Members of the House who are interested in this proposition. Here is a two hundred thousand dollar appropriation. We passed a New York appropriation. In fact, I did not move to strike out anything in New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. For which I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. And I did not do so because I thought most of those projects are justified. But in the case of the Monongahela River, I think I ought to present the statistics in order that we might know some of the facts, if time permits. There is a large traffic on that river, and I appreciate that fact. It is largely in the hands, as I understand, of one company, the Monongahela Coal & Coke Co., a company that also largely controls the coal output.

Mr. BARCHFELD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman——

Mr. FREAR. In just one moment. This company owns, or did own and control, as I understand, some time ago some 60 different boats. It handles practically all of the coal that goes down that river and the coal that goes down the Ohio River. That brings me to the point of the traffic on the Ohio River about which I was criticized yesterday by the gentleman who sits at my left, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER]. He called attention of the House to the fact that in 1912 the engineer's report only showed 9 months of traffic, whereas in 1913 it showed 12 months, and he endeavored to draw a conclusion that from that I had misstated—I believe he thought unconsciously—the facts. Let us see, because it is very important to know if we understand the condition on the Ohio River. Is it alone those who live on the Ohio? Here are the statistics. In the engineer's report of 1913, page 981, in nine months the commerce was 8,618,369 tons. On page 1052 of the 1914 report in 1913 it appears that it was 9,814,123 tons, about a million tons increase. But the average in each case at the same rate makes a loss of 14 per cent. But let us go further. Take the statistics we can find on the Ohio Rver at the Ohio River and the Louisville & Portland Canal, and we find that the loss has been about 30 per cent in 10 years, counting open river and the canal, which includes coal, that makes up nine-tenths of the commerce. Take the Ohio River at the mouth—at Cairo. The only reports of the engineers that I have found show that 1,250,000 tons went out of there and down the river in 1907.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Just one moment. Before I pass from that, the claim that 8,000,000 tons goes down the Ohio is farcical when we learn that at the Portland Canal it is only a million tons, or a little over, that comes out of the river at Cairo. When it reaches New Orleans it is less than 900,000 tons, according to the same engineer's report. Apparently the continuous trip has been counted, as the chairman so well said, by adding together at different points, or quadrupling, as he said, the traffic. In that way the engineers have, as they say, duplicated commerce reports, but even if that be true, here is the engineer's statement itself that shows the comparative loss.

Mr. BARCHFELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] regarding this appropriation for $211,000 for the Monongahela River. He said that the commerce on that river is absolutely in the hands of one company——

Mr. FREAR. I said, largely.

Mr. BARCHFELD (continuing). The Monongahela Coal Co.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. What is the difference if it is?

Mr. BARCHFELD. Why, it would be a crime, according to the gentleman's idea, if the commerce of that river were in the control of one company. I do not belong to that class of economists who criticize and are ready to crucify people because they are doing something for the people for the benefit of mankind. This stream, the Monongahela River, canalized from Pittsburgh to Morgantown, W. Va., a distance of 115 miles, has 17 locks and dams and is a living example of what canalization can do for streams. That small stream carried last year 15,000,000 tons of commerce, not the property of one concern, but the property of two dozen concerns doing business at Pittsburgh. That is why Pittsburgh is the hub of industry of the United States and the largest manufacturing and industrial city in the world. Pittsburgh needs the improvement of this Lock No. 6 on the Monongahela to get her ready for a greater and a broader prosperity that confronts that great city. I want to inform the gentleman who comes from Wisconsin that in my community we know what cheap transportation means along water routes. We have the cheapest water transportation on this planet in the Pittsburgh district. To-day we are bringing coal from the mine to the furnace, a distance of 50 to 60 miles, at the ridiculous freight rate of 5 cents a ton, only made possible because this stream is navigable 10½ months in the year. [Applause.]

When this stream is closed by ice and we have our spring and fall freshets six weeks is taken away from that city in the advantage obtained by water transportation. Then we are compelled to go to the railroads to bring the coal from the mines to the furnaces in order that our men may have an opportunity to labor in the mills, which we do not consider a crime. Then we are compelled to pay 62 cents for every ton of coal that comes from the mine to the furnace. [Applause.] My colleague from Wisconsin should live in that city, which does things. My own county mines one-fourth of all the bituminous coal mined in the United States. We are taking out in western Pennsylvania 30,000,000 tons annually. We produce one-half of the coke of the United States in that community. We are the greatest manufacturing center on earth, and it is water transportation that has made Pittsburgh great, and as an evidence to our competitors in the future greatness of that great industrial city we are ready and anxious and willing by our own funds, raised by our own people, to construct the Lake Erie & Ohio River Ship Canal, at a cost of $60,000,000, to make it possible for Pittsburgh to maintain the mighty prestige that she holds at this hour in order to bring the ore from the mines in Minnesota and Michigan, and also in the gentleman's own State of Wisconsin, to the great, big manufacturing center located at the headwaters of the Ohio at the junction of the Allegheny and the Monongahela, and we in turn transport our coal, making it possible for the people in that section to weather the storms of winter; we, in order to maintain our mighty prestige, are ready to build that canal so that we can reduce the freight rates from the Lakes to the manufacturing plant and in turn give those people cheap fuel.

I will inform the gentleman what this expenditure of $211,200 means. It is a little over one-third of the actual cost of the locks, it is for modernizing these locks according to modern ideas, and we propose to send through these locks steel barges 200 feet long, 20 feet wide, and having a draft of 9 feet, each vessel carrying 1,000 tons of coal. We propose to be in a position to deliver that coal from the mine to the people of New Orleans—in spite of the prediction that there are less than 900,000 tons that pass Cairo to New Orleans—we propose to carry that coal from western Pennsylvania down to New Orleans, a distance of 2,167 miles, for the ridiculous figure of 60 cents a ton. [Applause.] To-day we have a cheaper rate from Pittsburgh to New Orleans by rail than they have from Birmingham, Ala., to New Orleans by rail, only made possible because the great and mighty Ohio, La Belle Rivière, the beautiful river, named by the French over a century ago, is a competitor with the railroad. We in western Pennsylvania believe in the improvement of our streams. We believe in cheap transportation by water, and I want to say to my friend that when the Panama Canal is completed—and our Government is spending millions of dollars in order to be in a position to furnish coal to the fleets of the world—we expect to furnish the coal from the Pittsburgh district that will carry the commerce from the Occident to the Orient and from one end of this planet to the other through the Panama Canal. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to apologize to the committee for taking up their time at this time in order to answer any argument that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] might make against this river and harbor bill. I think the argument that he makes is not on the merits of this bill at all, but simply to give him some notoriety in the papers, which seems to be fascinating to him, because the newspapers have taken it up and in that way have given him, as he thinks, a great boost as a great Member of Congress. And I want to say that the argument that he used——

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I will call the gentleman to order only for the purpose that I may be privileged to answer him. He is not talking about the matter under consideration. I have not indulged in any personalities, and I would ask unanimous consent for five minutes in order that I might answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia has the floor now.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is going to get permission, I would like to have at least three minutes to answer what the gentleman from Wisconsin said——

Mr. FREAR. I have not been attacking the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. If the statement was true that freight on the Ohio River has been reduced in late years, it is easy to account for that. There are now several months in the year that freight can not be carried by water on account of the low stage of the river. When this river is improved, then suitable boats will be provided and the volume of traffic will greatly increase, because freight can be carried for 25 per cent of what it now costs.

The shippers patronize the railroads now, because they can use them every day in the year. When this improvement is finished the advantages will be shown as clearly as the statements made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARCHFELD].

Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I am not entitled to the floor, and I have been held very strictly to the text by the Chairman. I wish to say this, that the gentleman's charge that I appealed to the newspapers may be true. [Applause.] I realize this, Mr. Chairman, that no man on this floor can raise his voice so as to be heard outside. It must come from the press, and the press of this land is the agent that killed the last river and harbor bill by exposing the conditions contained in that bill and calling attention to the fight in the Senate, where the bill was finally defeated. We were only too glad to ask for the aid of that agency. When the bill went to the Senate men who knew more about these facts than I do, by far, took the same projects, exposed the worthlessness of many of them, and on the strength of their action, aided materially by the press, the bill was defeated. True, we ought to get light fixed upon the bill, but it was not for personal reasons. The gentleman imputes that. That, of course, is his privilege. But without the aid of the press, I believe that bill of $53,000,000 could not have been defeated. As it was due to that help, you have the results before you. A bill was placed in this House; not a single amendment could be added, not a single item could be struck out, nor can they be struck out to-day from this bill, no matter what facts are presented. A committee of 21 members holds this House in its hands, and it always will under the present system.

Mr. MURRAY. That is socialistic talk.

Mr. FREAR. I do not know what the gentleman speaks of. Oklahoma has had its socialists. They have been known throughout the country, some of them amiable and some of them estimable men. I felt that when a personal attack is made—I do not know whether the gentleman meant it so or not—I should reply to it, but I do not wish to resent it in a personal way. I want you to know that we did appeal in every fair way to the journals of the country for their aid, and it was given in no uncertain way.

Mr. CALLAWAY. It is a very rare thing that any Member of Congress ever tries to get into the newspapers, is it not?

Mr. FREAR. I thank the House for the courtesy of listening.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FREAR. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Following up the rates on the Ohio River, you put some figures in the RECORD showing that the rates had been increased on the Ohio River since 1906?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Just allow me to ask this single question. [Cries of "Regular order!"].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have not been given a minute to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph end in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph end in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] will proceed.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin, laboring under an exaggerated ego, believes that he and the newspapers of this country killed the river and harbor bill in the last session of Congress. I can not see it in that way. When the last river and harbor bill was passed by the House, in the month of March, 1914, I was up in Michigan helping to investigate the copper strike; but at that time, if I recollect rightly, we had over $100,000,000 in the Treasury, plenty of money on hand, and, while I had my misgivings about it, we were assured by the gentlemen who were proponents of the Underwood tariff bill, that had become a law, that this condition would continue; and the Rivers and Harbors Committee, acting under conditions that then existed, took on the projects that went out at this session, for instance, like the Connecticut projects and others. Things went on, and I have no doubt that the bill would have been passed by the Senate, but on the 4th day of last September the President of the United States appeared here in person and notified us that there was a decline in our customs receipts and that we would soon be confronted by a serious condition in our national revenues; and from that moment the rivers and harbors bill was killed as dead as a doornail, but not by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Does the gentleman from Wisconsin undertake to make me believe that the great newspapers of this country influenced the Senator from my State in fighting the rivers and harbors bill? Does he intend to lead this House to believe that it was the newspapers of this country that influenced the Senate in killing the rivers and harbors bill that we had passed through this House and for which they finally substituted a lump-sum appropriation? Does he for a moment think that it was his work or the work of the newspapers? Why, it was nothing more than the great falling off in our revenues and the filibuster carried on in the Senate. And the gentlemen, the leaders of the majority in this Congress, seeing there had to be retrenchments somewhere, and all the appropriation bills having been passed, and the rivers and harbors bill being the only appropriation bill remaining, they visited their entire retrenchment on the rivers and harbors bill.

Now, the gentleman says that I have been erroneous in quoting the figures representing the annual tonnage of the Ohio River. I thought I made it clear yesterday when I spoke of the tonnage on the Ohio River and stated that prior to April 1, 1912, the statistics are unreliable, and that the engineering bodies in investigating those figures for 1905, when the statistics showed that there was a tonnage of 13,000,000 tons, found that there was only a 9,000,000-ton traffic, and they said that the traffic up to that time was 9,000,000 tons annually. The same method was pursued up to April 1, 1912. Since that time, under the improved method of taking the statistics of the commerce on the Ohio, the tonnage has run more than 9,000,000 tons a year. It has run to 10,000,000, and I am satisfied in the year 1912 it was at least 12,000,000 tons.

The gentleman says that this tonnage that comes out of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers and down the Ohio, this nine or ten million tonnage, does not go entirely down the river. Why, is the tonnage of any harbor or bay or any stream computed or estimated by counting only the tons that traverse the entire length of the river or that go across the length of the bay? Why, no. Have we not the right to compute every ton in making the estimates on the Ohio River—every ton that floats on the river, whether it goes 10 miles or a hundred miles or a thousand miles? It seems the gentleman's criticism is folly and his position is untenable. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the Chair understand that the debate under the five-minute rule must be confined to the subject matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. And there can be only two talks—one for and one against? Is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. That is right as to each amendment.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then I want to give notice, Mr. Chairman, that I am going to object hereafter, and shall ask that the rule be carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ice harbor at Marcushook, Pa.: For maintenance, $1,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, we have just passed the Delaware River item. A question of navigation has arisen with respect to the upper Delaware River. It affects the shipment of coal and the ability of the Navy colliers to use the river. I have already spoken on this question, but there is some additional information and correspondence which I should like to extend in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Broadkill River, Del.: For maintenance, $5,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE offers the following amendment: Page 10, between lines 7 and 8, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Improving inland waterways from the Delaware River to Chesapeake Bay, Delaware and Maryland, by the purchase of the existing Chesapeake & Delaware Canal and appurtenant property, in accordance with the project recommended by the Chief of Engineers in paragraph 3 of his report dated August 9, 1913, and published in House document 196, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $2,250,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase said canal and appurtenant property at a cost not to exceed the amount herein appropriated for such purpose."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this is the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal project, which was discussed on the floor of the House very fully last year. It was included in the last river and harbor appropriation bill. It went to the Senate and met the fate of other provisions which went out as a result of the filibuster. It seems to me it is proper to offer it again at this time. I do not expect to discuss it at length now, but I shall ask for a vote upon it, and pending that I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. May I ask whether this section of the inland waterways canal has ever been previously provided for by Congress?

Mr. MOORE. It has been the subject of two or three favorable reports by the United States Army engineers.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am asking the gentleman whether there was a provision for this section of the inland waterways system in the House bill of last year? I want to get it straight in my own mind.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; it was provided for in the House bill at another figure, which was raised in the Senate. I have taken the Senate figures in the amendment which I offer now.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is it a part of the general proposed system from Boston to the Rio Grande?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, so far as the Atlantic coastal part of it is concerned; but it stands on its own bottom, because it happens to be what most of us on the Atlantic coast regard as the most important link in the chain, not only for commercial purposes but also for the purposes of national defense.

Mr. DUPRÉ. From the standpoint of Congress and the War Department, is not each project in this chain of inland waterways a proposition which stands on its own bottom?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and each one can be legislated on as a separate provision.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And that has been done in the past.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and very properly so, because no advocate of this Atlantic waterways chain contemplates for a moment appropriations covering the entire project at any one time. The only sensible way to proceed with work of this kind is to proceed link by link, and that is the manner in which it is being done. I am glad the gentleman put that proposition up to me, because it enables me to say that very many Members who discuss this project, and who have the idea that it is going to deplete the Treasury, simply do not understand the method of procedure. It is not unreasonable.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The reason why I ask the gentleman the question is because he and I and other Members are being denounced by certain gentlemen from the southern section of this country for not regarding each link in this canal as one part of a grand whole which Congress ought to provide for all at once.

Mr. MOORE. I shall use whatever time remains to me to take up the thought expressed by the gentleman from Louisiana. What we need in this country more than anything else, and what the Rivers and Harbors Committee needs, in my judgment, more than anything else, is a comprehensive plan of development, and that is what we lack. There is no general system for developing the waterways of this country. We are told by gentlemen who presume to be scientific on this waterway question that we ought to have a comprehensive and scientific plan. When we propose such a thing, when we show how nature itself has pointed the way for the connecting up of the waterways, so that there may be one continuous procession, to be acquired at reasonable expense, then they say to us, "It is too big to contemplate." If in a time like this these gentlemen will simply bear in mind what is actually going on in Europe, where every country engaged in war is utilizing every waterway it has, and every waterway is completed and improved to perfection and indispensable for the purposes of commerce and the transportation of supplies and the movement of vessels, they will understand what some of us are driving at in trying to get some comprehensive plan worked into the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; because I think the gentleman from Texas is one of those gentlemen who do not yet comprehend the system.

Mr. CALLAWAY. My comprehension of the inland waterway system is that it is to run from the mouth of the Rio Grande to Boston; that that is the comprehensive scheme when it is ultimately completed.

Mr. MOORE. I am only speaking for the system along the Atlantic coast; the gentleman has not got that yet. But if the gentleman were to ask me whether in the course of time, in view of the increasing population, in view of the development of commerce, it should extend along the Gulf, up the Mississippi, to the Great Lakes, I should say yes; but that, of course, would be too expensive to undertake now or at once. Any man in Congress or out would be a fool to think we could at this time appropriate enough money for such a great scheme as that. But if you have a populous section, great business, and opportunity for greater development, then it would also be foolish to say that we should not apply a portion of our money to the improvement of such a waterway factor, providing for the national defense and developing the commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] asks that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment end in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that there is now a waterway from the Rio Grande, by the Gulf of Mexico, to Boston?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; on the Gulf and the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And you are going to dig a canal to furnish an inland way?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly, because it is absolutely necessary for the protection of life and property and the promotion of commerce.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is not that a good deal like the old lady that cut a big hole in the door for the big cats and a little hole for the little cats?

Mr. MOORE. There have been some gentlemen, in times past, that have built harbors of refuge in the sand, and the ocean has swept in and closed them up. That may be likened to Mrs. Partington sweeping back the waves with her broom. The gentleman from Texas wants to get away from the high-tops of Texas and come along the seaboard and see the waste and destruction of property. There is a lumber-laden vessel from the South lying now on the shoals of Barnegat that need not have been there if we had had this inland waterway. Now, I want to thank my friend and colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] for asking for an extension of time for me, because this may be the last time in this House that I shall have an opportunity in the discussion of this matter to pay him tribute for his courtesy and the good work that he has done on the river and harbor committee.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania know that there is an inland waterway canal system in the State of Texas?

Mr. MOORE. I do.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And that there is a great demand that it shall be extended?

Mr. MOORE. I do; and I know that there are some streams that might be cut through and an interchange of commerce made, but the gentleman from Texas does not yet understand it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman understand that this system will never develop its largest possibilities until the canal is cut through the State of Louisiana to the Mississippi River and the city of New Orleans?

Mr. MOORE. That may be. Louisiana ought to be taken care of, because Louisiana has suffered at the hands of its friends more than any other State in the Union, and if it had not been for the courage and ability of her Representatives here I do not know but that she would have been sunk in the bottom of the sea. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] is one of the men that I like to talk to, and if he wants to know about the splendid waterway that we have outside on the ocean, I will tell him again what I have stated here several times. During the period between 1900 and 1910 we lost $40,000,000 in property by taking this open course. We lost 2,200 lives by taking this open course. We had 5,700 disasters in ships by taking this open course, and I think in order to save much of that life and property it would have paid to spend the $40,000,000 lost in 10 years in opening an inside waterway where trade and commerce might have floated easily and safely, and where human lives might not have been subjected to so great a risk. I will tell the gentleman another thing about this 13-mile canal that I am talking about now. During the Civil War——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Oh, let me ask the gentleman a question about the matter that we have just gone over.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, that is too far back.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Do not talk interminably. Heavens and earth——

Mr. MOORE. Do not go back so far. During the Civil War that I am talking about [laughter] this little canal was the means practically of saving the Union.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Well, thank Heaven that the Union is saved, but let it go at that.

Mr. MOORE. If it is saved, let us spend a little more money on it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is the gentleman arguing to anybody in this country that any ships are going to go through that inland waterway?

Mr. MOORE. Why, yes. Has the gentleman been up to Cape Cod lately, or is he so devoted to the sand hills in his own country that he will not go? If he will go there, he will find a private enterprise has opened up a canal 8 miles long, and that his own Secretary of the Navy, who is a peace-loving man, has been sending torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers through that canal, and is raising his hands on high and saying, "Thank God for the private enterprise that put this cut through this sand bar, so that we do not have to send these boats out to sea and have them injured or any lives lost." Why, do you know several years ago I tried to get the department to send a few of these boats through the canal that I am speaking of now—the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal—and they wrote back that they could not do it because there was not sufficient depth of water? Then they sent them outside from the Philadelphia Navy Yard down to the gentleman's own section of the country, and they went ashore outside of Cape Hatteras, and the property of the Government was damaged and the lives of men were endangered. Some day, even down yonder in Texas, away back in the hills, up in the country the gentleman so ably represents, he may discover that in order to protect the life of the Nation it would have been wise to spend some of the income that comes through our own ports to provide these very means of communication. This little canal and others like it were the means during the Civil War of protecting the whole coast line, and just now we would do well to prepare ourselves to protect it again. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have been very greatly interested at different times reading the reports of the engineers in reference to the proposed inland waterway from Boston to the coast and along the coast to Texas. It seems to me, however, that the gentlemen who are proposing the scheme do not go quite far enough. I live in a city which is on the western edge of the Great Lakes system. We have water communication from there to the Atlantic Ocean. It would be a great saving in freight rates, and it would be a great saving in lives now lost on the railroads because of wrecks if we were to build a canal from Chicago to San Francisco over the Rocky Mountains [laughter], and it is quite possible to do this, because there are places in the mountains where there is a sufficient and ample supply of water to operate the canal. We could reduce freight rates across the continent probably 50 per cent, and we could save all of the wrecks that now occur upon the railroads, destroying life, and could carry the freight and passengers safely and economically by this waterway across the continent. I hope that the gentlemen who wish to deplete the Treasury for an inland waterway along the Atlantic Ocean, where they now have cheap freight rates and easy water connection, will join with us so that we will make a proper loot of the Treasury. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. May I at this point move to strike out the last word, or is all time exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired under the agreement. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE offers the following amendment: Page 10, between lines 7 and 8, insert new paragraphs as follows:

"Improving inland waterway from Delaware River to Chesapeake Bay, Delaware and Maryland, by the purchase of the existing Chesapeake & Delaware Canal and appurtenant property, in accordance with the project recommended by the Chief of Engineers in paragraph 3 of his report dated August 9, 1913, as published in House Document No. 196, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $2,250,000. And the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase, at a cost not to exceed $2,250,000, the said canal and its appurtenances. And the said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for consummating said purchase, the same to be paid on the warrant of the Secretary of War upon full and absolute conveyance to the United States of the said canal and its appurtenances.

"In the event of the inability of the Secretary of War to make voluntary purchase of said canal and its appurtenances for said sum of $2,250,000, or any less sum fixed by him, then the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to institute and carry to completion proceedings for the condemnation of said canal and its appurtenances. Such condemnation proceedings shall be instituted and conducted in, and jurisdiction of said proceedings is hereby given to, the District Court of the United States for the District of Delaware.

"The sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary costs of said condemnation proceedings; and upon final award or judgment therein the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant on the Treasury for the amount of said judgment and costs, and said amount for the payment thereof is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. When said canal and appurtenances shall have been acquired by the United States, whether by purchase or condemnation, the Secretary of War shall take charge thereof and operate, manage, and control the same, under such rules and regulations as he shall from time to time prescribe, with a view to its ultimate improvement and operation as recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

"The proceedings for condemnation aforesaid shall be substantially as follows:

"The Secretary of War, in the name of the United States, may apply to the district judge of the United States for the district of Delaware, first giving the president of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co. at least five days' notice, in writing, of the intended application, and the said district judge shall appoint five judicious and impartial persons to view the premises and assess the damages which the owner or owners will sustain by reason of the taking thereof. The said persons shall be sworn or affirmed before some judge, justice of the peace, or notary public, before entering on the premises, faithfully and impartially to perform the duties assigned them. They shall give 10 days' notice, in writing, to the president of the corporation owning the premises of the time of their meeting to view the premises; and the said commissioners shall certify their finding and award to both parties, but if either party is dissatisfied with the damages so assessed, such party may, on application to the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the District of Delaware, within 30 days after such assessment, sue out a writ of ad quod damnum, requiring the United States marshall for said district, in the usual form, to inquire of 12 impartial men of his district of the damages as aforesaid, and their report shall be final; the said commissioners shall assess the least actual cast value of the canal and its appurtenances, and the United States, upon paying the damages so assessed, shall become entitled to have, hold, use, and enjoy the canal and its appurtenances forever. And in case the owner of said canal and appurtenances shall be incapable of receiving, or unwilling, or neglect to receive said damages, or call upon the United States for the same, the United States may deposit the amount of said damages to the credit of such owner in the Farmers' Bank of the State of Delaware, at Wilmington, Del., subject to its order, whereupon the United States shall be entitled to have, hold, use, and enjoy the said canal and appurtenances forever. The expenses of the assessment by the said commissioners of the damages aforesaid and all costs incurred in the execution of the writ of ad quod damnum shall be paid by the United States."

Mr. MANN. On that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, my main purpose in introducing this amendment is to follow up the other, so as to obtain the advantage of at least that time which will elapse between now and the passage of another river and harbor appropriation bill. This is one of the things we have to prepare for in advance, and I am hoping and expecting, as I think all of the friends of this project are, that ultimately the River and Harbor Committee, in view of other approved projects with which this links up, will accept it. The adoption of the amendment would place the project in that position where proper court proceedings could be had with a view of ascertaining the value of the property to be taken.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How many miles of this canal are there that are proposed to be bought under this resolution?

Mr. MOORE. Thirteen miles.

Mr. MADDEN. How wide is it?

Mr. MOORE. Twenty-four feet at the locks.

Mr. MADDEN. How deep is it?

Mr. MOORE. Ten feet.

Mr. MADDEN. What kind of traffic can go on a canal 20 feet wide?

Mr. MOORE. About a million tons of commerce go through the canal every year which pays tolls substantially equivalent to railroad rates. There is an advantage in shipping bulk by boat and having it move more expeditiously than it would if it were shipped by rail. I explained briefly, in answer to the questions of the gentleman from Texas a little while ago, some of the advantages of this canal, and under leave to print, which I understand has been granted, I shall explain it more fully later on; but in passing I desire to say that in the distribution of our favors in this House—referring to the gentleman from Texas and others; yes, and to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who was upon the Democratic side and out of place a little while ago—that I believe we should not forget to pay our respects even to our party leaders. Now, there is no man in the House who has a higher personal regard for the leaders of the House——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. I was speaking of leaders and am glad to place the gentleman in that category. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking the gentleman if he will yield for a question.

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman as one of the leaders of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I do not care in what capacity the gentleman yields, but I want to know why the present owners of this canal want to sell it.

Mr. MOORE. They have expressed no desire to sell it. The great difficulty from beginning to end has been to get any information or proposition from them. The canal is a paying canal, and they do not want to get rid of it. There has been no movement of any kind in the interest of the company to sell the canal, none whatever, so far as I know. I am glad the gentleman puts the question so pointedly, because it can be answered with directness.

As I said, in the distribution of our favors in this House we ought not to omit our friends. I am an admirer of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and there are reasons why I like all the members of that committee. Some of them oppose projects that I believe worthy, and we fight that out; but I am amazed that my own leader, the gentleman from Illinois, whom I respect as much as I do any man in this House, should rise and oppose a suggestion so wholly meritorious. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests inferentially what the gentleman from Texas suggested, that this coastal project is a great big expensive and possibly a chimerical scheme, which ought not to be pressed while we have the broad bosom of the Atlantic on which to come and go. I think I can understand why the gentleman from Illinois takes that ground. He comes from out yonder in the Middle West, and his heart is loyal to his surroundings. He believes that all things tend toward the West, and that ultimately the Pacific coast will be the scene of all our activities.

Well, there are those of us along the Atlantic seaboard who started there and whose forefathers started there before us. From the beginning of the country we have contributed to the western trend. We are willing to admit that most good things went out of the East before they passed to the West. Some of them lodged in Chicago, and there some of them remained. But the gentleman from Illinois has his eye to the westward. I do not accuse him of doing that which is being done in another Chamber, where some of our friends are at play in a presidential game, but I do believe that the gentleman from Illinois, much as I admire and readily as I follow him, would make the mistake of his life if in any platform of his he should put a plank that would provide for a transcontinental canal from Chicago across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean. [Laughter and applause.] It would be a dream, and as a vote producer would not succeed. Admiring the gentleman from Chicago as I do, I hope he, too, will come down from the interior and join hands with the people along the coast line where the great population is, where the great industries are, and where the constant trend of commerce arising in the East must flow on to the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman from Philadelphia thought I was opposing his proposition a while ago. I was endeavoring to make a speech on behalf of it by offering a trade.

Of course the gentleman from Philadelphia, who never was in the country west of Washington, knows nothing about the West. In an official capacity I have been required to come East, so I know both parts of the country. The gentleman from Philadelphia, of course, believes that all the great works and the great men come from along the Atlantic Ocean; and that may be true. And yet those of us who come from the far West, who have constantly paid the taxes which have been spent along the Atlantic Ocean, believe that when we construct a new Atlantic Ocean just inside the shore line we ought to join with it a really valuable canal, which would be of some real benefit, so as to connect Chicago with the Pacific Ocean, it now being connected with the Atlantic Ocean. I hope the gentleman will join with us in this great undertaking, of equal merit with his.

Mr. MOORE. I would on the basis of appropriations already granted, if the gentleman would.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has suggested that the population is along this coast. I would like to make the observation that the center of population is about 75 miles from the home of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Philadelphia will never understand that.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. MOORE. I will say to the gentleman that I have been West, as far west as the Pacific coast. The latest census statistics justify the statement that fully one-third of the population of the country is still east of the Appalachian chain, and that is more than 30,000,000 people. Notwithstanding the trend of waterways appropriations is west, we are doing business in our congested area on one-quarter of the railroad mileage of this country. And while we have two or three railroads to come and go on in the city of Philadelphia and only one system in a city like Boston, the gentleman from Chicago, very largely at the expense of the investor in the East, has 15 or 20 trunk lines running to and from his city.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason we have the trunk lines. That is where the business is. If we had not the business we would not have the railroads.

I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. Chairman. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has conferred upon it the jurisdiction in reference to the improvement of rivers and harbors. That is paragraph 8 of Rule XI. The matters are referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, as follows:

To the improvements of rivers and harbors—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Paragraph 56 of Rule XI:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: * * * The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

There is a committee of this House which has jurisdiction of canals, and that is not the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It has been held by chairmen in the past that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not have jurisdiction of bills providing for the construction of canals, and under the rule giving the committee privilege, this bill being a privileged bill, it would not be in order, even if they had jurisdiction over the subject matter, to offer an amendment in reference to the construction or the purchase of canals, because the only privilege they have is in regard to the improvement of rivers and harbors. The gentleman's amendment shows that his proposition relates neither to a river nor a harbor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] on the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. I am going to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN]. It is a very important point of order. He is chairman of the committee and has made a study of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is well taken. In fact, similar questions have been passed upon by the various chairmen who have presided over the Committee of the Whole when the various river and harbor bills have been before us in days gone by. I concede that wherever a canal is being constructed, a canal pure and simple, the River and Harbor Committee has no jurisdiction of the work, but wherever the purpose of a canal is to connect waters through which boats may go from navigable waters, a river or a harbor, for instance, into other navigable waters, whether a river or a harbor, the River and Harbor Committee has jurisdiction of the proposed improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any authority on that subject?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I did not anticipate this question would arise to-day, and have no authorities at hand. However, some years ago—I think it was when the bill of 1905 was before the House; it may have been the one of 1902—a similar question was raised here, and I am under the impression that the gentleman from Illinois at that time agreed to the proposition I am now laying down, although I would not say positively, but I am under the impression he did. I know I took part in the discussion at the time. It was this kind of a question: A survey, I believe, was proposed for the purpose of constructing a canal from the waters of St. George Sound across the intervening piece of land out into the Gulf of Mexico.

The point of order was then raised upon it by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] who was trying to get a similar proposition before the House for surveys in that State.

Mr. MANN. Where a point of order had been sustained against his proposition, which was on all fours with this.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; the point of order at that time was overruled.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And the provision for the survey was permitted to remain in the bill, notwithstanding the fact that a similar point of order was made against it. It was nothing but a provision for a survey, as I recall.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Was not one of the points made at that time that the canalization was taken over for the purpose of continuing a waterway, as in this instance?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It was for the purpose of continuing a natural waterway, but in a sense it was a canal.

Mr. MOORE. Here were two bodies of water, both improved, and the proposition was that they should be connected by another body of water, which happened to be in the form of a canal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid my recollection is a little better than that of my friend from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN]. On the occasion to which he refers Gen. Keifer, of Ohio, either had in the river and harbor bill or offered as an amendment, I do not remember which, a proposition for a canal in Ohio from one point to another, a proposition exactly like this. I made the point of order that the committee had no jurisdiction, and the Chair sustained the point of order. Subsequently in the bill there was a provision with reference to the improvement that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] speaks of, and Gen. Keifer made a point of order on that. It was a question of fact, of course, and on the statement of the chairman of the committee that it was not a canal, but was an improvement of an existing waterway, which had been constructed under the authority to improve rivers and harbors, the Chair overruled that point of order. I helped to sustain the Chair in that attitude, it being a question of fact; but that Chairman held, in the ruling on Gen. Keifer's proposition, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not have jurisdiction over canals.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong the discussion as to the point of order. There was some discussion of it in the committee last year. But I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that canals have been taken over, as, for instance, the Hennepin Canal. As to whether points of order were raised with respect to them I do not know.

I also call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in this instance there are two bodies of water, both subject to improvement and being improved by the Government, and that this proposition is to take over an existing waterway to connect these two existing bodies of water, the connecting link being at the present time an artificial waterway called a canal.

The taking over of the canal would simply mean the continuation of the work on either side of it. It would mean that that which has already been provided for on both sides of the existing stream would be connected up. That is a physical condition which I assume the Chair ought to consider before he decides a question of this importance.

I wish again to say to the Chair that I think if a little time be given it could easily be shown to the Chair that several existing canals have already been taken over and that no objection has been raised. I think the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will bear me out in the statement that there have been several instances of this kind, and that if there should be an unfavorable ruling on this point it would very seriously affect many other improvements throughout the country which are now in contemplation, and some of which are actually under way.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. May I suggest to the Chair, with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that he reserve his decision on the point of order until our session to-morrow? That would enable us to proceed, and perhaps it would be more agreeable to the Chair.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that connection, would not the same proposition come up when a point of order is made to the next paragraph, providing for the condemnation of a railroad bridge?

Mr. SMALL. I think not. That is work already in progress. That has heretofore been adopted. It is not a new project.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that if the position of the gentleman from Illinois obtains, the Rivers and Harbors Committee could recommend no work that would connect one navigable waterway with another. All work of that class would have to go to the Committee on Railways and Canals. We could not deal with waterways at all unless they were navigable waters throughout.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he will be perfectly willing to reserve his decision until to-morrow. There are ample decisions on the question. It is only a determination of the question whether this canal is in fact a canal. If it is, the Chair thinks, under the decisions which he has before him, that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Chair will pardon me, I do not think that alone settles the question. Where a canal is for the purpose of connecting one body of navigable water with another body of navigable water with a view to having free intercourse between the two bodies of water, so that water craft, for instance, starting in one can run the artificial waterway to another, I think the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction——

Mr. MOORE. Which connecting body of water is itself navigable.

Mr. MANN. It is not a difficult proposition. We have a Committee on Railways and Canals. A while ago some one referred to the project of joining the Great Lakes with the Ohio River at Pittsburgh. The proposition has been before this House at various times authorizing the construction of a canal from Lake Erie to Pittsburgh, and that is work that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors never had any jurisdiction over. It has gone to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The only proposition of that kind that I know about went to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, where it was investigated.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is badly deficient in knowledge, then, because we have had here several bills reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals. We reported one once or twice from the Committee on Railways and Canals while my friend from Florida was probably thinking about some improvement in Florida.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I know that the Committee on Railways and Canals has jurisdiction of some of those propositions, but I do know that the most of them have come before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that committee has passed upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair realizes that the question is an important one, and he will reserve his decision until to-morrow, by unanimous consent, if there is no objection.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection. There is not any question but that the Chair will have to decide it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that after reserving his decision until to-morrow he will probably decide against it.

Mr. MANN. We have had this question up before at least five Chairmen, and they have always decided one way.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the Chair reserves his decision until to-morrow?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others can submit what authorities they please.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent, then, to withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment to this section. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to acknowledge the graceful tribute paid me by my colleague, Mr. MOORE, as to my humble services on this committee. I am sorry that it comes rather late to be of use to me. [Laughter.] I am inclined to believe that it springs from sympathy because of my "lame" condition. I am sure, however, that it is well intended and I appreciate it as such. I want to say at this time a word or two as to what has been done since I have been on the committee for certain projects to which my friend and colleague, Mr. MOORE, has devoted his splendid talents as a Member of this House.

We have frequently heard the statement made that sectionalism and favoritism play a part in the making up of these bills. Therefore, I deem it well to give the House some figures relating to the Delaware River, in which my colleague, Mr. MOORE, and I are so deeply interested.

No one in this House who knows the facts will question the advisability of the Government making generous appropriations for the maintenance and improvement of that great river. The commerce on the Delaware River amounted to over 26,000,000 tons, with a value of $1,229,000,000, last year Surely so important an avenue of commerce as that should not be neglected, especially when we consider the large amount of revenue which the Government collects at the port of Philadelphia.

Our present project calls for a 35-foot channel from Philadelphia to the sea, and we in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania and neighboring States hope that liberal appropriations will be made by this committee in future to make certain the completion of that project within the next five years. Since my friend and colleague Mr. MOORE came to Congress there have been appropriated for the improvement of the Delaware River the following sums:

In 1906, $1,000,000; in 1907, $895,000; in 1908, $375,000; in 1909, $515,000; in 1910, $800,000; and the following sums since I was elected, in 1910——

Mr. MOORE. Will my colleague say, as a matter of history, that the 35-foot project was adopted in 1910?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes. But in 1911, after the adoption of the project, there was appropriated by this House for the improvement of the Delaware only $800,000.

Now, note what appropriations have been made during the last four years for this river, although it is a northern waterway, and although we have occasionally heard the charge of sectionalism offered:

In 1912 there was appropriated for the Delaware $1,750,000; in 1913, $2,000,000; in 1914, $1,000,000 in cash and $1,000,000 in authorization, the latter having been lost in the Senate; this year we carry $1,500,000. In the six years that my colleague was fighting for the improvement of the Delaware River, before my time, the average amount appropriated was $731,000 per year. In the four years that we have been here the average amount has been over $1,800,000, or, in other words, under this Democratic House the Delaware River, this great northern project, the worthiness of which no one has questioned, has received more than twice as much per annum as it received in former years.

Mr. MANN. And the Treasury is empty as a consequence. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DONOHOE. The gentleman will not say that that is the cause of the emptiness.

Mr. MANN. That is one of the causes to empty it.

Mr. DONOHOE. It helps to do it, of course.

Mr. MANN. There are other causes that prevent its filling up. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DONOHOE. I understand the gentleman is in favor of removing bars everywhere; why not those in the Delaware River?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, what is the question before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired, and there is nothing before the House.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I would like one minute more.

Mr. DONOVAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Delaware River had received more money than ever before on account of his membership on the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. DONOHOE. Not at all. On the contrary, it is because this Government and this Congress have at last recognized the worthiness of the project to a greater extent than ever before.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I did pay tribute in a few brief lines to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how much time the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants?

Mr. MOORE. Five minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes all debate be closed.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, in a few brief words a while ago I did pay a compliment to my friend and colleague——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I think I had better make the point of order of no quorum, if we are going to do no business but sit here and listen to hot air.

Mr. MANN. We got used to that this morning, when the gentleman was talking. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOHOE. I trust the gentleman will not make that point, in view of the patience we displayed this morning.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, as I stated, in a few brief words a while ago I did pay a compliment to my friend and colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE], and I did that because during the last four years there have been times when it has been said by busybodies outside that he and I did not thoroughly agree on rivers and harbors matters. He came into this House rather unexpectedly four years ago, and he duly appreciated the compliment. On his arrival he was placed above the heads of all others on the very important Committee on Rivers and Harbors. That was a great tribute to his genius and ability. Prior to that time, however, some of us had been working for the Delaware River earnestly, and had been striving for a 35-foot channel. The effort was successful, and the project was written into the law shortly before my friend appeared upon the scene. But, nevertheless, I undertook, to the best of my ability, to aid him in his new position as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. The work which had been mapped out under a Republican administration, partly at my instance, was to secure for the Delaware River an appropriation, in accordance with the project report, of $2,000,000 per year.

The gentleman doubtless did the best he could to secure the $2,000,000 per year, but coming into a great body like this and meeting distinguished men from all over the country, who had kindred projects, some of them coming from the Pacific coast and some of them from the shores of the Great Lakes, he found that other influences tended to operate against his ability and genius. There were times when the $2,000,000 were cut down to $1,000,000 and then to $700,000, so that when the cost of maintenance of the river was taken out, there was very little left for original work. The result of that has been that, strive as he did and earnest as he was to carry on the work that the Republican administration had mapped out for him, the appropriation under the Democratic régime fell short of the schedule, and last week the Navy Department decided it would not send up the Delaware River any of its 19,000-ton colliers to bring away coal from Philadelphia, which it could do at a cost of 20 cents per ton less than from any other point.

Mr. Chairman, I would not have my colleague go away with a bad taste in his mouth, nor would I feel true to myself if I permitted him to go without saying these kind words, but nevertheless he followed so well as he could the program that was mapped out for him by a wise and provident Republican administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to condemn a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co. where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks, the basis of condemnation to be the building, maintenance, and operation of a proper drawbridge by the United States, or the payment by the United States to the railroad company of such sum of money as may be awarded in the condemnation proceedings, as full compensation for such right of way, including actual cost of constructing such bridge and the capitalized cost of its maintenance and operation, whichever method may, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, be deemed most advantageous and economical to the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order, or I will reserve it, if anyone desires to talk to the matter.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. This improvement is entirely different from the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal project, in that this waterway connects the waters of the Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, a distance of about 12 miles, and through much of that distance it simply connects up other streams. True it is that a part of the way it will be necessary to make excavations through the highland. On page 368 of the report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, 1914, part 1, we find a description of this improvement under the title "location," which is as follows:

LOCATION.

This canal, situated in the southeasterly part of Sussex County, extends from Rehoboth Bay northward through the highland west of the town of Rehoboth Beach to Gordon Lake; thence through the marshes back of Cape Henlopen to Lewes River. It follows the latter and Broadkill River, emptying into Delaware Bay about 5 miles above Cape Henlopen. The length is about 12 miles.

That shows that we would have the waters of the Gordon Lake and the Broadkill River and the other part of the way through the marshes and through some highlands. This is a project that was adopted several years ago. In the act of July 25, 1912, an appropriation of $50,000 was made, and in the act of March 4, 1913, $41,725, for carrying on this improvement. During the year last passed this work has been actually going on and is going on now. Dredging is being done. It is a project adopted by this Congress, appropriated for, and the work of excavation nearly done. This provision provides for extending this waterway under the tracks of the railway company.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BROCKSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. While I am satisfied that the item is clearly subject to a point of order, I have no desire to make a point of order on a thing that ought to go through. I really had another matter in my mind on this paragraph. What is the object of this paragraph beyond what it says? What is the necessity of extending this waterway across the line of this railroad?

Mr. BROCKSON. Part of it lies on one side of the railroad and part on the other side.

Mr. MANN. Is it constructed up to the railroad?

Mr. BROCKSON. On one side it is constructed all the way up to the railroad.

Mr. MANN. And how near on the other side?

Mr. BROCKSON. I do not know the exact distance, but very near.

Mr. MANN. Under authority of United States law?

Mr. BROCKSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, under what sort of a plan has the Government been proceeding——

Mr. BROCKSON. Under acts of Congress.

Mr. MANN (continuing). To build a canal up to one insurmountable object on one side and then jump over that obstacle and go ahead with the canal on the other side. Were the vessels supposed to be leaping vessels to go over this?

Mr. BROCKSON. No. Back in 1896 there was a provision of law, an act providing for the condemnation of the right of way through the land of the railroad company. There was a condemnation proceeding had and an award of something over $37,000, but my recollection is the money was not provided for the award. That was in 1896.

Mr. MANN. Now, this provision is that the Government shall maintain and operate a drawbridge, as I understand.

Mr. BROCKSON. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I think there is no other place in the United States where the Government does that. Is that a cheaper proposition than to pay for crossing the right of way?

Mr. BROCKSON. Well, I am not informed about that. Just why they determined upon that plan I am not informed.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman, the Government did condemn, but we never paid the money?

Mr. BROCKSON. Yes. That was long ago. Now, it is estimated that the award is not sufficient to pay for the damages.

Mr. MANN. Well, this provides that they shall go across, as I understand, and build and maintain a bridge. Oh, I think it ought to have further consideration before we undertake to maintain a railroad bridge at the expense of the Government. If it is subject to a point of order, I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this item has nothing to do with the improvement of rivers and harbors. It is an authorization for the Government to build and operate a railroad drawbridge for the benefit of a railroad company.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman there is a great deal more than that. It has everything to do with the improvement of a harbor. This is a waterway that has been under the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for many years, and many appropriations recommended for it by that committee have been made by Congress. In some places perhaps you go through land, but the canal, I believe, has been dug—that is, where any canal is necessary. The improvement goes through navigable waters at one place, cutting through shoal water at another, through land at still another, and so on to the end. Now, there happens to be a railroad there under which or over which we have to condemn a right of way. The purpose of this provision is to condemn that right of way; and I can not agree to the proposition that every time in the improvement of a waterway where we happen to strike a piece of land, even the cut off of a corner, or run through a piece of land to cut off a bend in a river, that we have to turn such work over to the Committee on Railways and Canals and confine ourselves alone to the channel of the river. Why, we did the same kind of work in the Calumet River in the gentleman's own district years ago, and the same point of order could have been raised against that work that the gentleman is making here to-day.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman is not correct at all. I know more about the Calumet River than anybody else here. If such a thing was ever done or proposed to be done——

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is quite likely that the gentleman knows more about the Calumet River than I do, but I think I am not far from the fact.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if a bill had been introduced for that purpose it would have been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction of the improvement of rivers, but when it comes to authorizing the construction of a railway bridge across a river, and a bill is introduced for that purpose, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction of it. It goes to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, although the construction of such a bridge might dam up a river. That has nothing to do with the improvement of rivers and harbors, and neither has this. Here is a proposition to authorize the Government to make a trade with the railway company under which the Government shall build, maintain, and operate a proper drawbridge to be used by the railroad company, to be maintained and operated by the Government. And that is a matter that, if it was introduced in a separate bill, would go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and not to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BROCKSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield just there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BROCKSON. In line 21 it says that the basis of condemnation is to be the building, maintenance, and operation of a proper drawbridge by the United States or the payment by the United States to the railroad company of such sum of money as may be awarded in a condemnation proceeding. It leaves it optional with the United States to decide.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whom it leaves it optional with. It is subject to a point of order if one of the provisions is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, what is this waterway? It consists of a series of natural waterways and partly artificial waterways. On page 368 of the Chief of Engineers' Report I read this language:

Location.—This canal, situated in the southeasterly part of Sussex County, extends from Rehoboth Bay, northward through the highland west of the town of Rehoboth Beach, to Gordon Lake; thence through the marshes back of Cape Henlopen to Lewes River. It follows the latter and Broadkill River, emptying into Delaware Bay about 5 miles above Cape Henlopen. The length is about 12 miles.

So that this waterway connecting Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay consists in the improvement of natural waterways in part and in part of artificial construction. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this is not a canal in the sense in which the gentleman makes his point of order challenging the jurisdiction of this committee. It is a waterway partly natural and partly artificial, and, in addition to that, it has been heretofore adopted and is a recognized public work of the United States. It is too late at this time to lodge a point of order against the item in the bill. I submit, further, this view, Mr. Chairman. In the construction of this improvement, this waterway connecting Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, it intersected the track of this railroad. Some arrangement had to be made for condemning the right of way owned by the railroad and through which the canal at that particular point was to be excavated. This item provides that there shall be condemnation proceedings and the amount awarded shall be ascertained by two alternative methods. By one method the railway is to be paid an amount representing the capitalization of the cost and maintenance of the bridge, to be maintained by the railroad itself, and the other alternative representing the value of the right of way to the railroad company, the bridge to be constructed and maintained by the United States. So that this is a mere incident in the construction or improvement in this waterway connecting Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay; and in order for its completion, intersecting this railroad track as it does, it is necessary—the title not having been acquired voluntarily—to authorize this condemnation proceeding. This item does authorize it, and the basis of damages is to be ascertained in this alternative method. So that for all these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I suggest, if the gentleman should insist on his point of order, that it is not subject to a point of order; that the canal is merely incidental; that the waterway as a whole and the condemnation of this right of way is even less incidental to it; and Congress, having acquired jurisdiction heretofore, will maintain it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I do not think that anyone can deny the fact that this appropriation is for a canal, for I direct the Chairman to the report of the Chief of Engineers on this project, page 368, where he says that it is for "a canal 6 feet deep, 50 feet wide, through the marshes and Lewes River, and 40 feet wide where it passes through deep cutting, including also the construction of two bridges."

The bare question is submitted to the Chairman for a decision whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over canals, and if there is anything well settled it is the fact that that committee has not jurisdiction. I direct the Chairman's attention to a citation found in paragraph 4220 of Hinds' Precedents, that was referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], relating to the construction of a canal on the Miami River, where the Chairman held that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not have authority to consider such a project. This is more objectionable than that, in this, that it provides for the construction and operation of a railroad bridge in the building of this canal. Certainly the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has not jurisdiction for the construction of a railroad bridge. That would go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or the Committee on Canals, if it is pertinent to a canal. I think the Chair should sustain the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is made against the paragraph by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It appears that this is a waterway, heretofore authorized and for which appropriations have been made, connecting Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, and that in its progress for some 15 or 16 miles it crosses certain navigable waterways and connects two navigable bodies of water.

In the judgment of the Chair that does not take away from it the character of being a canal. If the question as to this waterway were presented now for the first time, the Chair would hold that an appropriation for the purpose of building this canal or acquiring this canal was not proper in a river and harbor bill. There is abundance of authority on that question, and therefore would in that event hold this particular appropriation to be improper in this bill. But this particular waterway has been appropriated for heretofore in river and harbor bills, and the Government has been expending the money so appropriated in developing it. The point that this is a canal comes now too late. The fact that heretofore the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has included in its bill appropriations for this particular project, building a waterway or canal connecting these two bays, and incidentally connecting other navigable waterways with the sea and with each other, and that said items have been approved by the Committee of the Whole without protest and the bills containing them have been enacted into law, estops the House in Committee of the Whole from excluding now this appropriation from this bill for that reason.

But it is further insisted that this particular paragraph provides for condemnation proceedings, the basis of the condemnation proceedings to be the building, maintenance, and operation of a proper drawbridge by the United States or the payment by the United States to the railroad company of such sum of money as may be awarded in the condemnation proceedings, and in that event the proposition would resolve itself into an operation of that drawbridge in connection with this proposed excavation by the railroad company. The Chair thinks the matter of building bridges across any sort of a waterway is a matter that does not come within the jurisdiction of this committee. The fact that the particular waterway over which a bridge is to be built and maintained is not yet constructed does not help the matter any and does not give this committee jurisdiction, in the opinion of the Chair, of the building of this drawbridge or any other kind of a bridge at this place, and the Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is made and sustained on the part that provides for a bridge?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the whole paragraph and sustained as to the whole paragraph.

Mr. BROCKSON. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROCKSON: Page 10, line 9, after the word "Delaware," insert the following: "Continuing improvements, $60,000: Provided, That "——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware should understand that whole paragraph is out.

Mr. BROCKSON. I desire to offer the language just stricken out except that part referring to the bridge, and then offer an additional amendment to that, if I may have the time in which to prepare the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand what the amendment is.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over.

Mr. MANN. I am not willing that we should do that. We would be lost if we do that. What does the gentleman want to do?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. BROCKSON. I sent up a modified amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, after line 7, insert the following:

"Inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to condemn a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co. where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks, the basis of condemnation to be the payment by the United States to the railroad company of such sum of money as may be awarded in the condemnation proceedings as full compensation for such right of way, including actual cost of constructing such bridge and the capitalized cost of its maintenance and operation, whichever method may, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, be most advantageous and economical to the United States."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. Evidently the gentleman did not get his amendment in the shape he wanted it.

Mr. BROCKSON. The amendment is this:

Improving inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del.: For continuing improvement, $130,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to condemn a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co. where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks, the basis of condemnation to be the payment by the United States to the railroad company of such sum of money—

And so forth.

Mr. MANN. I will consent to its going over, if the gentleman will not call it up when I am out of the Chamber.

Mr. BROCKSON. I will not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that he may return to this item for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Corsica River, Md.: Completing improvement, $4,800.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, and I request unanimous consent that my colleague and myself have 10 minutes to discuss this amendment, because it is very important to the city of Baltimore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after the figures "$4,800," line 4, insert the following:

"Improving Curtis Bay Channel, Baltimore Harbor, Md., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 7, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $61,850."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that he and his colleague may have between them 10 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes to close.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Florida asks five minutes to close debate, and that at the end of that time that the debate be considered as closed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I shall object to that, Mr. Chairman, because I might want a few more minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto in 17 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that he and his colleague have 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Florida that he have 7 minutes, and at the end of that time all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida whether he intends to continue the session this evening?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; I have in mind to continue for an hour or two longer, perhaps until 9 or 10 o'clock.

Mr. MOORE. I have no objection to that, but there are several Members here who wanted to be informed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a very important matter to be considered, and I think it would be quite well to have more Members present during the consideration of it. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-nine Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

During the calling of a portion of the roll Mr. McANDREWS occupied the chair.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 20189), finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called, when 197 Members answered to their names, and he presented the names of the absentees for printing in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asked unanimous consent that he and his colleague——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe a proposition for unanimous consent is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair is about to state it. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that he and his colleague have 12 minutes in which to discuss the amendment offered by him, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent that in addition to that time he be allowed 5 minutes, and that at the conclusion of 17 minutes all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be at an end. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I am not physically able to discuss this matter. We are not antagonizing this bill. We believe that this item would not cause any antagonism. It stands by itself. It is an item recommended by the engineers at $123,000, and last year the Committee on Rivers and Harbors appropriated $61,000. It remained in the bill in the House and went to the Senate, and the Senate adopted the recommendation of the engineers and appropriated the total amount.

Now, there was a very bitter discussion on the Senate side about various items in the bill, but there never was a single word antagonizing this appropriation. What makes this appropriation particularly desirable is the fact that the Navy Department wants this channel deepened and widened so that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. can enlarge its piers and bring to that point the coal which is best adapted for the use of the Navy.

The president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. told me personally that as soon as this provision becomes a law the company is prepared to go to work to build its piers. The Navy Department can get its coal somewhat more cheaply and conveniently. It is handy to Chesapeake Bay, and for the reason stated the Navy Department is interested. It is a proposition of dual importance. It is important not only to our great city but to the Navy itself, and for that reason I offer the amendment. I desire to say that if the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had inserted the item and stated in the report why they did it, there would not have been a single word of criticism of the item on the floor of this House.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleagues, Mr. COADY and Mr. LINTHICUM.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, this item was contained in the rivers and harbors bill that passed the House last year, but which failed of passage in the Senate; the only reason why it was not included in the draft of this measure was because of the determination of the committee to keep the total appropriation within a certain limit, so that in eliminating it the committee was not actuated by any opposition to it. In point of fact, the necessity of improving Curtis Bay Channel has been determined by both the Rivers and Harbors Committee and the House.

The pressing importance and wisdom of this proposed work is unquestioned. It would greatly aid navigation on this river and benefit the commerce that flows along its course. This channel has now a depth of only 30 feet. It is proposed to increase this to 35 feet, the same depth as the Patapsco River Channel that leads to Baltimore Harbor.

The appropriation provided for in this amendment is for the purpose of getting this increased depth, and is sufficient to do this. This work is recommended by Col. Beach, United States engineer, stationed at Baltimore, and his recommendation is concurred in by the Chief of Engineers of the Army.

In addition to this, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has recommended it, and has pointed out its supreme advantages as a coaling place for our war vessels. It is ideally located and fitted for such a purpose. Many of our colliers have loaded coal there, but were compelled to come away each time with only a part of a cargo, because of the shallowness of this channel.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. has now a large coal pier on this river, from which can be loaded on vessels over 3,000,000 tons of coal a year.

There are many large manufacturing establishments on this bay, and an enormous tonnage is carried there annually.

Baltimore city has spent a great deal of money on its water approaches. It has more than matched every dollar the Government has spent there, and only last fall a large loan to further improve and deepen its harbor was authorized by our people. This money will be spent by us irrespective of the attitude of this Congress, and very soon the work will be undertaken.

Col. Beach, of the Army, said some time ago, in a report submitted to his chief, that this contemplated improvement is a matter of more than local importance, and affects the whole country in its influence upon the supply of coal for the Navy. It will help commerce and will prove of material benefit and advantage to our Navy.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply interested in the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. TALBOTT] for the deepening of the channel at Curtis Bay, which reads as follows:

On page 11, after the figures "$4,800," in line 4, insert "improving Curtis Bay Channel, Baltimore Harbor, Md., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 7, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $61,850."

Curtis Bay is an estuary of the Patapsco River, about 3½ miles from the corporate limits of Baltimore city, and is adjacent to the harbor of Baltimore. I know this locality perhaps as well as anyone could know it, having been born and raised within 3 miles thereof. Curtis Bay is especially well adapted for harbor facilities. It is surrounded on three sides by high hills, ranging perhaps from 150 to 175 feet, so that during the worst storms the waters are seldom troubled in the bay. It has practically what might be considered deep water throughout this locality, and remains deep because there are no particularly large streams flowing into it, hence, whatever channel is constructed will remain without very much expense.

The channel to Curtis Bay was dredged by the Government to the depth of 30 feet with a width of 250 feet, except near the terminals, where it has a width of some 700 feet. This channel connects with the 35-foot channel leading to the harbor of Baltimore, and the distance from this main channel of 35 feet to the Curtis Bay piers is about 2 miles. It is therefore proposed by my colleague [Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland] to deepen these 2 miles of channel leading from the main channel to a corresponding depth of 35 feet.

The city of Baltimore has expended several millions of dollars in dredging and in the construction of docks and piers. She is now about to expend another large sum in deepening her harbors from the main channel to these docks and piers. Baltimore and Maryland are not asking the Government to do anything except cooperate with them in giving Baltimore a depth of water sufficient for the tremendous trade which plies to and from foreign ports.

NO DESIRE TO CRITICIZE BILL.

It is not my desire to critcize the bill before us, because I feel that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have spent a great deal of time and labor upon this bill, and are doing what they feel is best with the money at hand, but we must realize that the State of Maryland, out of this great appropriation of $34,000,000 included in this bill, is receiving only about $45,600 for maintenance and completion of certain work. We are asking for $61,850 to pay for one-half of the expense of the construction of Curtis Bay Channel, this being enough to carry us until the next river and harbor bill is enacted.

RECEIPTS FROM BALTIMORE.

I realize, of course, that seaboard cities are the gateways to the country at large, and the information I give as to the collections of the Government from the city of Baltimore are based upon that theory. The customs receipts at Baltimore, which includes Curtis Bay, for 1914, amounted to within a fraction of $4,000,000 and the internal revenue paid in to the Government from our city aggregated about $7,600,000, making a total income to the Government from these two sources of nearly $12,000,000.

TONNAGE OF THE PORT.

The amount of tonnage reported for 1911, when the survey for the deepening of this channel was made, was approximately 2,300,000 tons, having a value of about $12,000,000. The commercial statistics by water, both imports and exports, for 1911 are more accurately given in the following table:

2,047,382 tons of coal, at $3 per ton	$6,142,146
25,000 tons of fertilizer, at $20 per ton	500,000
35,000 tons of fertilizer, at $25 per ton	875,000
70,000 tons of fertilizer, at $17.50 per ton	1,225,000
100,000 tons of naval fuel oil, at $20 per ton	2,000,000
80,000 tons of chemicals, at $14 per ton	1,120,000
	11,862,146

LARGE SUMS EXPENDED TO EQUIP FOR CAPACITY.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has expended since 1910, $60,000,000 for increased facilities and additional tracks to bring coal to this port, and even this year, in spite of the hard times, that railroad expended $6,000,000 in constructing what is known as the Magnolia cut-off, in order to give further facilities and easy movement of trains to the port of Baltimore and Curtis Bay. The north and west banks of Curtis Bay are occupied by large manufacturing concerns, and the amount of business transacted there is very large, as I have said. The greatest business, however, is that of the shipment of coal. The present coal piers at Curtis Bay have a tried capacity of about 275,000 tons of coal—6,000 cars a month—approximately 3,300,000 tons a year, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which owns the big coal pier, has signified its intention, as soon as this channel is deepened, of building another, which will double the capacity.

NEEDED AS A NAVAL BASE.

The Navy Department is anxious to load coal at this point, but is practically prevented from doing so because their colliers carry 19,000 tons of coal and draw 30 feet of water. As this channel is only 30 feet deep, it is impossible to load the colliers to their full capacity, and it is both difficult and expensive to finish the loading in the channel leading to Baltimore, which is 35 feet deep.

A letter from Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Acting Secretary of the Navy, says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 11, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have the honor to urge the favorable consideration by your committee in connection with bill for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country of an item of $123,700 for deepening to 35 feet at mean low water the channel to Curtis Bay, Baltimore Harbor.

The Navy has had contracts for some years for the loading of coal at Curtis Bay, and the fact that this coal comes from one of our largest suppliers and is of the highest grade makes the Curtis Bay Harbor an asset of great military value to the naval service. This supply might easily become invaluable in time of war or of coal famine, due to strikes elsewhere, and it is respectfully urged that the item mentioned in the bill for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country, which makes this supply available to the Navy's largest colliers, be favorably acted upon.

There is at present a 30-foot channel into the railroad piers, but this will not accommodate the latest type colliers, as the Neptune grounded in the channel in 1912. This dredging would be of great value not only to the Navy but also to the commerce of the city of Baltimore and the State of Maryland.

Sincerely, yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

In addition to this, Mr. Rooosevelt has told me that it is dangerous to load coal at Philadelphia to the full capacity of the colliers, as they are likely to be grounded in the Delaware River. It will cost many hundreds of thousands of dollars to dredge the Delaware River for these big colliers, and require considerable time, whereas for $123,700 this Curtis Bay Channel can be deepened to 35 feet, which will accommodate the largest of them without any difficulty.

On March 20, 1912, Hon. Beekman Winthrop, Acting Secretary of the Navy, expressed the same views as Mr. Roosevelt as to the necessity of deepening this channel to 35 feet in order to equip it for loading coal for naval purposes. With the exception of Norfolk, there is no harbor along the whole Atlantic seaboard so important to the Government as a source of fuel supply.

Now, what is the use of talking about building a greater navy, when you will not spend $123,700 to construct a deeper channel to Curtis Bay to coal that Navy?

The United States Government at the present time is practically confined to Norfolk and Newport News for its coal supply, but if you will deepen the channel to Curtis Bay then you will have a strong competitor for this immense trade. Not only will you have a competitor for the trade, but you also have more coal fields and different grades of coal to draw upon. It may be necessary in time or war to have more than one harbor in which to secure coal for naval vessels, but until you deepen Curtis Bay you are confined to Norfolk and Newport News. if you would load the colliers to their full capacity.

The Government requires and purchases for its naval vessels on the Atlantic side about 700,000 tons of coal each year. The freight rate for the coal fields reached by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad leading to Curtis Bay is $1.35 per ton. The lowest rate which can be had to the Norfolk and Newport News Harbors from their nearest coal fields is $1.40 per ton. If we take these lowest rates from the nearest coal fields, we have a difference of 5 cents per ton, and on 700,000 tons of coal it amounts to $35,000. If you add to that what could be saved by competition, I venture to assert that the total amount of $123,700, which it will require to complete the Curtis Bay channel, would be saved in each and every year. And this I say, in addition to the facts as I have alleged, the Government will be in touch with more coal fields and more railroads to haul it in times of necessity.

Certainly Maryland, which is only receiving in this bill $45,600, is entitled to this consideration, and I can not see why the committee should not be able to trust this House sufficiently to amend and put in an appropriation for such an imperative project as the one before us. Why should a proposition in which the Government itself is interested and which costs such a small sum of money be deprived of attention merely because the committee says that it does not want any amendments to this bill?

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I hate to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT], for I love him very dearly, and I hate to oppose the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] who is, I hope, to be the new governor of Maryland. [Applause.]

But I must do it. This is a new project; it has never been appropriated for before. It is true it was in the last bill, but the last bill failed in the Senate. This is on a par with New London; it is on a par with Bridgeport; it is on a par with 24 other projects in the bill. It is on a par with all new projects. Now, the House can do as it pleases, but I submit that we have come before the House with a conservative bill and it is a salutary rule that we adopted in the committee unanimously, not to take on any new projects, and it would be very unfortunate to break it down in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I am not opposed to this project any more than I was to the New London one, but the condition of the Treasury is such that in the real interest of river and harbor improvements I am compelled to object to any new item going into the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURGESS. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman realize that the difference in the freight which the Government would save by deepening this channel to Curtis Bay than to get coal at Norfolk would save more than this channel would cost in the course of a year? The difference in freight is about a dollar a ton.

Mr. BURGESS. That is the naval part of it. Yes; but that does not appeal much to me, although I think, perhaps, that is a matter to be considered when we take on any new projects, but it is idle to discuss the merits of any of these propositions. There were 74 new propositions, and they are coming on. Now, what will we do? There is no objection to these, gentlemen; I am sorry I have to take this position, but the gentleman from Maryland wants his improvement, Mr. MAHAN wants his, Mr. DONOVAN wants his, and here you go; and the only rule that could be adopted after much thought, after much discussion, was the one which we have come in and built this bill upon—that no new projects will be considered, no matter what their merits are.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a similar request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Anacostia River, D. C.: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, page 11, insert the following:

"Norfolk Harbor at Norfolk, Va.: The unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for improvement of channels to Norfolk and Newport News, Va., are hereby made available for the widening of the channels and for the maintenance thereof, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document 605, Sixty-third Congress, second session."

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes. I have consumed very little of the time of the House, and I hope there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I shall not antagonize the committee. I shall support the bill. I am in favor of river and harbor improvements. And yet I feel that I should be neglectful of my duty to my constituents if I should fail to offer and ask for the adoption of this amendment.

When the rivers and harbors bill passed this House at the last session of Congress it carried, in addition to these balances, an initial appropriation of $270,000 for the improvement of the channels to the ports of Norfolk-Portsmouth and Newport News. The project for this improvement was recommended by the resident district engineer, by the Board of Army Engineers, and adopted by the House. It was one of the few items not criticized by a single Member of the House or of the Senate while the bill was under consideration. It is an improvement which is absolutely necessary in order to properly accommodate the steadily increasing commerce of these channels and can not be criticized.

The last bill was defeated in the Senate and a bill carrying a lump appropriation, to be expended on existing projects, was substituted therefor. This lump appropriation bill was severely criticized by the members of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and partly for the reason that it confined all expenditures to existing projects. I very much regret that the committee has seen fit in the preparation of its bill for this year to follow the same policy which last year it condemned. It has, without good excuse, confined all expenditures to existing projects and has absolutely disregarded the present as well as the prospective demands of commerce on other streams.

The fact that a project is a new one, no matter how meritorious and no matter to what extent its adoption may be in the interest of commerce, seems to have been sufficient to condemn it. And yet there are a number of these projects fully as worthy of improvement, on which expenditures can as wisely be made, and which expenditures will bring fully as good, and in many cases much better, results than many of the old ones.

I am willing to admit that a work once started, if the project is meritorious, ought to go on without material interruption to completion. But, in my opinion, it is quite as important that the efficiency of finished projects should be maintained and that new work should be undertaken whenever it can be clearly shown that steadily increasing commerce can not be accommodated and must suffer unless such work is done. I also admit that this is no time for the unnecessary expenditure of public money, and partly for that reason I am not asking for any new appropriation for the improvement of the channels leading to the ports of Hampton Roads. I am not asking for the appropriation recommended last year. My amendment simply provides that the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of these channels, and which have been saved by the economical way in which improvements heretofore authorized have been made, shall be made available for the work which has been recommended by the engineers. It does not increase the appropriations carried by this bill a single dollar. Is it right to neglect for a period of five years or more—the time it will probably take to complete the old projects—an improvement which means so much to the growing commerce of these great ports?

There has already been expended in the improvement of these channels a little over $3,000,000. This is a much smaller sum than has been expended on the other great harbors on the Atlantic seaboard, and this will be true even after the expenditure recommended in the new project is made. And yet the present water-borne commerce of these channels is larger than the combined water tonnage of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, Fernandina, and Jacksonville, on the South Atlantic seaboard, and is probably as large as that of any port on the North Atlantic seaboard, with the single exception of New York. And yet the appropriations carried in this bill for the maintenance of some of these ports are larger than the appropriations carried for all streams in Virginia. Have the expenditures already made brought beneficial results? The commerce of these channels in 1888 amounted to less than 2,000,000 tons. With a speech made by the distinguished chairman of this committee on Tuesday, September 29, 1914, he filed a statement showing that the tonnage of these channels amounted to 28,307,501 tons and the value of their commerce to $1,600,000,000. It is confidently believed that the tonnage of these channels now exceeds 30,000,000 tons.

My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] said only a few minutes ago that any channel having a tonnage exceeding one and a quarter billion dollars in value ought not to be neglected. He is a member of the committee, and I agree with him. Why should these channels be neglected when others just like them are being taken care of?

This is 10 tons of commerce—last year's traffic—for every dollar expended in the improvement of these channels. How many of the channels provided for in this bill can show such results? Many of them show a commerce of less than 1 ton for every dollar expended, and most of them show a commerce of from 1 to 3 tons for every dollar expended for their improvement, and on many of them a larger amount has already been expended than on the channels to the ports of Hampton Roads.

What are the prospective demands of the commerce of these channels? The tonnage of these channels has shown for the past two years an annual increase of approximately 3,000,000 tons, more than the combined commerce of a large number of the old projects deemed of sufficient importance to be included in this bill. It is a false policy not to make any provision for a steadily and rapidly increasing commerce. It is a false economy to hinder and retard its growth. The country is not opposed to wise but to wasteful expenditures of public funds.

But I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am not opposed to the improvement of our smaller waterways. I believe that any stream which, if improved, will bring results commensurate with the expenditures required for its improvement should be provided for. All these streams are useful arteries of trade, and, when improved and used, furnish a competition which almost invariably results in a reduction of freight rates on the products of farm, factory, and mine. Expenditures made on smaller streams have added to the commerce of the ports of Hampton Roads and have been of material benefit to my section. But the great harbors of the country must not be neglected so long as the increasing business of these harbors imperatively demands still further improvement. In the improvement of such great harbors the people of the entire country are interested and benefited. Norfolk is a great distributing center. The volume of the daily carload tonnage to, from, and through the port of Norfolk-Portsmouth, according to figures recently compiled by the Chamber of Commerce of Norfolk, approximates in excess of 4,000 carloads daily, or more than 1,500,000 carloads annually. These figures show that, with the exception of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis, and probably one or two other cities, the city of Norfolk is the largest distributing center in the United States. And the development of the trade with the Pacific coast by way of the Panama Canal, which has been already inaugurated, will make Norfolk a still greater distributing center.

The width of the channel, for the widening of which this project provides, is now only 400 feet. There is not another port on the entire Atlantic seaboard, in which the same water tonnage is handled, which has as narrow a channel for the accommodation of deep-water commerce and which has not been provided for in this or some other bill. If greater width was needed for the accommodation of the commerce of these ports—and Congress has declared that greater width was necessary—then for the same reasons greater width is needed for the Norfolk channel. If the Government wisely expended its money for the widening of these other channels, then, at least, for the same reasons it would be equally as wise to expend money in widening the channels leading to the ports of Hampton Roads. We ask for the same treatment which has been accorded to the other great ports. We ask for no more than this, and we are certainly entitled to no less.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, there was a total of 466 ships to enter Hampton Roads from foreign ports, bringing imports valued at more than $6,000,000. During the same period a total of 1,756 vessels cleared from these same ports with cargoes for foreign ports valued at more than $25,000,000. During the same year a still larger number of steamships and vessels engaged in the coastwise trade handled a great part of the 1,500,000 carloads of freight which annually pass to, from, and through the ports of Norfolk-Portsmouth and Newport News. The total number of steamers and vessels, American and foreign, which entered and cleared through the customhouse at Norfolk during the past year was 5,456. This does not include the still larger number of steamers and vessels which are not required to register at the customhouse and which use these channels. It can readily be seen that such a great volume of commerce makes these exceedingly busy channels. Frequently as many as four and five vessels can be seen abreast in the Norfolk channel, and collisions are often barely avoided. The width of the channel is not sufficient for the present needs of its commerce nor for the safety of the vessels which use it. How can we accommodate a commerce which is steadily increasing at the rate of 3,000,000 tons per year without additional improvements?

It must also be borne in mind that the channel to Norfolk-Portsmouth is daily traversed by naval vessels, including the largest battleships and colliers, going to and returning from the Norfolk Navy Yard. Battleships, colliers, and ocean-going steamships are often seen abreast in the deeper channel and sometimes so obstruct it as to interfere with coastwise commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks permission to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLLAND. These battleships, colliers, and ocean-going steamships usually have a draft of more than 30 feet, and for their accommodation a channel 35 feet deep and 400 feet wide—and which is also used by other vessels—is clearly insufficient. It is true vessels of lighter draft ought to be required to navigate along the shallower sides of the channel, reserving the deeper channel for deep-draft vessels, but it would be impossible to enforce a regulation of this kind. A width of 600 feet, proposed in the new project, is barely sufficient to meet the present demands. Why place this channel at such a disadvantage and refuse to make these funds available for its improvement?

I know that the sensible thing to do when our revenues are decreased is to cut out unnecessary expenditures. But I also know that our decreased revenues are amply sufficient to meet the actual needs of commerce, and that the country will approve a bill which carries for this purpose no extravagant or wasteful expenditure. If necessary, you could meet the actual demands by reducing appropriations for old projects and by using the sums saved in this way on new improvements. The country will not commend us for economy solely because we confine our expenditures to old projects and without reference to the present or prospective demands of commerce. The country will not applaud our good judgment when it ascertains that we have neglected great harbors and have at the same time made provision for projects which can promise no large returns. There are old projects provided for in this bill on which larger sums have been expended than on the channels to the ports of Hampton Roads, and whose commerce will not exceed 1 ton for every dollar expended in their improvement. If this is a wise expenditure of public money, then surely it would be fully as wise to make some provision for the improvement of channels which show 10 tons of commerce for every dollar expended on them, and whose annual increase in tonnage is larger than the prospective commerce of these other streams. A practical business man usually places his money where he can safely hope to secure the largest returns, and, if the profits are satisfactory, he never feels that he has made an unwise investment. And if our expenditures in the interest of commerce bring results commensurate with the cost of the work, the people will not complain that their money has not been wisely and economically expended. But they will condemn us if we expend it on projects, new or old, which promise no good returns.

I hope that this amendment will be adopted. I know that its adoption will be in the interest of economy and in the interest of commerce. My constituents know that they are entitled to this improvement, and your constituents can not criticize you if you assist me in making available for use funds which have already been appropriated therefor.

Gentlemen, accord to us the same treatment that you have already accorded to other harbors on the Atlantic coast. We ask for no more; we are entitled to no less. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say whatever as to the merits of this proposition. It is, I dare say, a good project. Indeed, our action in the last bill, the bill of 1914, in adopting it, showed what the committee at that time thought of it. I have not since had any reason whatever to change my views as to its merits. It is on all fours with several other new projects that we have not adopted and will not adopt if the action of this House to-day is to be taken as a criterion. It is similar to the Curtis Bay project, but possibly—although I do not wish to draw any invidious distinction between the two—possibly not as urgent as Curtis Bay, because that called for an increase of depth, while this project calls only for an additional width of a channel now being utilized. Then, too, it is a new project. If we were taking on new projects, I have no hesitancy in saying that I think this one would be adopted by us. At least, it would meet with my approval, as it did last year when we were preparing the 1914 bill. But unless we conclude to take on new projects, this should fall with other projects we have been considering to-day. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in support of my colleague's proposition. The strength of his proposition consists of the fact that he is not asking for anything to be done that calls for the expenditure of any additional money.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to say right there, if the gentleman will pardon me just a moment, that while that is true, it takes money that otherwise would not be expended for that purpose. It is money that is in the Treasury.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is lying there idle.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Like any money in the Treasury not having been appropriated. One word more right there. This is a project that calls for the expenditure of about $1,100,000. The amount on hand is $130,000, so that we would still have to appropriate about $1,000,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the chairman permit an interruption?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it not true that a great many other harbors, in which practically no greater tonnage is now being handled, are receiving under this bill something like a million and five hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope the gentleman will do me the credit to say that we are not discriminating and have not intended to discriminate against him in any way, because we showed that fact last spring when the other bill was being prepared. We then passed favorably upon his project.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in behalf of this amendment, that the merits of the same have been fully presented by my colleague. The amount of tonnage and commerce at Norfolk, and the development that would follow from this improvement, have been presented by him in such a cogent way, that I can add nothing to it. The difference between this proposition, and the other propositions heretofore rejected is that there is a little unexpended balance in this case which has been left over as the result of other appropriations for work in that vicinity. My colleague simply asks that this little trifling sum—because it is a trifling sum in comparison with the merits of his proposition—may be appropriated and allowed to be expended in the development of the improvement in which he is interested. I think this committee could grant this request on the part of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] without impinging in any wise upon the rule laid down by the committee, and which has prevailed up to the present time. This is one project of a singularly meritorious character that may be easily differentiated on the facts from the others that have been rejected. It asks for but little expenditure at this time. It seems to me that the committee may very well maintain its consistency, and at the same time vote in favor of the proposition.

Mr. MAHAN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee made the statement that one of the reasons why he would oppose this meritorious project was on account of the money it would take from the Treasury. Now, he is to be commended for taking that position, perhaps. But I think I can suggest a way to this committee that will relieve them of the embarrassment in that way and yet give this money to this most meritorious project. You have in your bill a project of $100,000 for St. Lucie Inlet. Is that right, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is right.

Mr. MAHAN. That project, Mr. Chairman, in the report of the resident engineer is turned down. In his report the engineer says there is no merit in it, and no commerce, and ought not to be approved. The recommendation of the district engineer was approved by the division engineer. That comes from the resident engineer, if I am not mistaken. From a conference held here in Washington it was thought best, from evidence received later on, to have another investigation, and that other investigation produced the necessary proof to bring this about. As I understand it, that is one of the projects that can well wait. There never has been a dollar used on that. Some two years ago $100,000 was appropriated, but the bids received to do the work as advertised by the engineers were not satisfactory, and the only amount of that money expended was $72.92 for advertisements. That being so, you have clearly $100,000 for that item, which, in my judgment, can not be justified, and the money ought not to be expended, and if you defeat that appropriation you can easily give the money to the deserving project at Norfolk. That is only one of the many similar items that are contained in your bill and ought to be rejected.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, while loath to occupy the time of the committee, I think perhaps it is appropriate that I should say just a word regarding this amendment.

I live in a district in eastern North Carolina contiguous to the Virginia line, and Norfolk is our chief commercial port, so that substantially our people are as much interested in it, and I as their Representative feel as much interested in the great port of Norfolk as if I lived in that progressive city; so that if inclination were necessary in order to induce one to support this amendment I have that inclination as strongly as anyone could possibly have it.

Now, these are the facts, Mr. Chairman: No one questions that this is a new project, and in that respect it is similar to the other new projects which have been sought to be added to this bill. But gentlemen have tried to differentiate this particular amendment as a new project from other new projects, because they say if we adopt this amendment and thereby adopt the project you will not take any money out of the Treasury, but divert money which is unexpended from another project which has been completed and make it available for this project. Now, as to that money which was appropriated and not expended for another completed project, as the chairman said, it is in the Treasury.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will you name any other port on the Atlantic seaboard in which the same amount of tonnage is handled for which appropriations larger than the appropriations made for Norfolk have already not been made by your committee?

Mr. SMALL. Answering the question of my friend from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND], that simply affects the merits of this proposition, and I am purposely avoiding any discussion of the merits. I will be frank enough——

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Do you not feel that the very same treatment ought to be accorded to the port of Norfolk that is accorded to these other ports for which you have voted appropriations?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It will be treated the same when we get to it. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. SMALL. I am trying to be frank and admit the merits of this proposition. As the chairman said, after full consideration this proposition was included in the 1914 bill, which did not pass the Senate, and which did not become a law, so that I am purposely avoiding any discussion of the merits, and for the purpose of entire frankness I admit it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then, it is a fact that this particular item has been rejected without reference to the demands of present or prospective commerce, and simply because it is a new project?

Mr. SMALL. It was not included in the bill for the same reason that the harbor of New London was not included in the bill.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will my friend permit another question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; but make it as brief as you can.

Mr. HOLLAND. Then, as a matter of fact, the committee, in the preparation of this bill, did not consider the present or future needs of commerce, but rejected projects for the sole reason that they are new?

Mr. SMALL. The project in this amendment, regardless of its merits, stands on a parity with the other 79 new projects which were in the 1914 bill, which did not become a law. They are not included in this bill for reasons of economy, as so fully explained in this discussion, and the only question presented to the Committee of the Whole is whether you will single out this project and adopt this amendment and leave out the other seventy-odd new projects, some of which perhaps were not altogether as meritorious as this, some of which did not involve as large a volume of commerce as this, and yet all of them having received favorable reports, and, in the opinion of the committee, sufficiently worthy to be recognized by an appropriation and to become adopted projects.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me one further question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is there a single other new project involving as great a volume of commerce as is involved in this particular project asking for as small an appropriation?

Mr. SMALL. While not undertaking to say that there is no other new project where the same amount of commerce exists as exists at the port of Norfolk, I do not recall the tonnage of all the ports sufficiently well to differentiate it so favorably in that respect. Yet I do say generally that there are other projects against which no criticism can be leveled; and if this is adopted, then they should be adopted. My friend is mistaken in his attitude that this project has such greater merit than other projects, as evidenced by the report of the Chief of Engineers. The report of the engineers, without taking the time to read it, shows that in the last paragraph the Chief of Engineers, simply, as in other projects, declares that it is advisable, and ought to be provided for by Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I say, no reason has been given why this new project should be differentiated from other projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. The money sought to be appropriated here has been covered into the Treasury, and will remain there unless it is taken out by reason of this amendment. It is the same as if $130,000 were appropriated directly out of the Treasury; and substantially the contention which has been so insistently set forth by the two gentlemen from Virginia has no foundation in fact as a matter of differentiation.

Mr. Chairman, one intimation here has been repeated more than once which ought to have no further expression in this House. My good friend, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHAN], said something about St. Lucie Inlet, Fla. Let that item take care of itself when the time comes. We will discuss it then. But if it was intended by that reference to St. Lucie Inlet that the committee should draw any inference against the distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. SPARKMAN] of any unfairness to other projects, or injustice to other sections, or undue discrimination in favor of any project, simply because it is located in the State of Florida, as one member of the committee, who thinks he knows whereof he speaks, I repel that insinuation and inference, and in that attitude I believe I have the approbation not only of the committee unanimously but, as I hope and believe, of the entire membership of this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

James River, Va.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $100,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 13 and 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out all of lines 13 and 14.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have made a conscientious effort to find out what projects in the North were objectionable, and I have pointed out those that seemed to me, because of harbor facilities and matters of that kind, most open to criticism. I have done it, as I said, sincerely, and it is simply with that same purpose that I take up this project, to point out briefly what the engineers' report shows.

There is available, or was at the date of the last report, the sum of $14,357. On this project there had been expended up to June 30, $2,419,370. The appropriation calls for $100,000. It is a project that was begun July 5, 1884, for a 22-foot channel from Hampton Roads up to the city of Richmond at an estimated cost of $5,374. After a period of a little over 30 years we have completed 45 per cent of the project, and during all of the time in recent years the traffic has been stationary. There is a present depth of 18 feet. There is nothing in the engineers' report, so far as I can ascertain, which shows the immediate necessity for carrying on this project, which has been dragging along now for 30 years and is only 45 per cent completed. At a time when we are trying to save all the money we can in a large bill of this kind, I urge the importance of allowing this project to go over at least for the present, and for that reason I move to strike out the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out lines 13 and 14 on page 11.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: Continuing improvement, $600,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 15 and 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out all of lines 15 and 16.

Mr. FREAR. This is an inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort, and it calls in the bill for $600,000. It is a $5,400,000 project, and on July 1, 1914, there was available the sum of $820,115. With that large amount on hand, three-quarters of a million dollars at that time, this bill calls for $600,000 more. This canal has very little traffic, as I am prepared to show if necessary. The traffic in 1903 was 203,812 tons. In 1912 it amounted to 90,337 tons. I want to read for a moment from the Engineer's report, page 461. This is the last report coming to the House, and it says:

Between Albemarle Sound and the Neuse River the present adopted route follows, successively, the Alligator River, a proposed land cut to Rose Bay, Rose Bay, and Pamlico Sound, but under authority granted by the act of March 4, 1913, surveys are now in progress to determine the relative advisability of adhering to this route or taking another. There is at present through the section a natural water route by way of Croatan Sound, having a navigable depth of 9 feet.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Has the board made any estimate and recommendation of what this whole thing will cost?

Mr. FREAR. Five million four hundred thousand dollars, and $820,000 was on hand at the last report, and a survey is to be had to determine where the money for the project shall be expended.

Mr. SPARKMAN. On the 1st of November, I will say to the gentleman, there were only $79,000 on hand.

Mr. FREAR. If that be true, it shows that on this project, which in 1912 shipped only 90,000 tons of freight, we have been able to spend over $700,000. I want to call attention to one more item which includes the building of three bridges by the Government at a cost of $80,000. The engineers wanted a million dollars, but I am frank to say that the committee tried to stave off a part of it and gave them only $600,000.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to get at the facts here. As I understand, there were $800,000 that have not been expended.

Mr. FREAR. That was the balance on hand July 1, 1914.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How much money has been expended in all?

Mr. FREAR. The expenditures up to June 30 were $576,300.

Mr. SPARKMAN. To that should be added the difference between $77,000 and $820,000.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; over $700,000 was expended within four months.

Mr. SPARKMAN. From the 30th of June to the 30th of November.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What was it expended for, the purchase of a canal?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; for actual work.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state how the committee determines that it is necessary to have $600,000 mentioned in line 16?

Mr. FREAR. The engineers, according to the report, asked for $1,000,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. So it is based on something that they got from the engineers?

Mr. FREAR. I can not state to the gentleman what the committee's action was based on.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to ask the gentleman another question. I understand the report changes the original proposition, and that they are going to cut across a territory and run in a different way from what has been heretofore approved by the engineers.

Mr. FREAR. So far as the engineers' report is concerned, they are going to make surveys to determine where it is going.

Mr. CALLAWAY. They have had a little canal operating there with a little gasoline boat carrying about as much as a box car.

Mr. FREAR. I do not know the quantity, but believe it is small.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A year or two ago, before there had been a dollar expended on the intercoastal waterway from Boston to the Rio Grande, I tried to get this thing stricken out. The proposition then was to appropriate $500,000 to buy a section of this canal to begin the work. Since that time there has been expended, according to the chairman, about $1,320,000. Now, we have yet to expend the balance of $5,400,000 on that project.

Mr. SPARKMAN. $5,400,000.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Well, $5,400,000. After studying this proposition of an intercoastal canal—this House heard the gentleman from Illinois to-day on this economic proposition, which he says is meritorious; no, not as meritorious as it would be to dig a canal from Chicago across the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, and I quite agree with him—we are called upon to go on and spend more money on this canal, which is a segment, according to the surveyor's original plan, of this inland waterway.

The question is with us whether or not we are going to continue this intercoastal waterway by appropriating the amount set apart for this section at this time, $600,000. Looking at the engineer's report and the amount of commerce carried in that territory, and with my knowledge of ordinary everyday business, and with what I have of everyday common horse sense, Mr. Chairman, if it was put up to me, I would not, if I had the money, give $600,000 for the Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk Canal, completed. What will go upon it? It will carry a few little lumber craft, oil boats, and the pleasure boats of those people from up North who go down South to winter, who have little boats which they can not risk out in the ocean. That is what it is for. It is not to carry freight. It can not be worth anything to this country as a whole as a commercial highway. The cheapest freight, and the only real cheap freight we have, is an open waterway we have out 3 or 4 miles off to the east of this canal from Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk, Va., in the Atlantic Ocean. It runs around to the Gulf of Mexico, and the cheap water rate we have on the southern coast of Texas is the Gulf. The freight there is carried in big boats that carry from 2,000 tons upward, with the propeller in the waist, and that run straight across big, open water.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and the paragraph close in eight minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have five minutes of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on this proposition close in eight minutes, the gentleman from Texas to have three minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina to have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. That is on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. On this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object, because I want to get some information before I vote on this proposition, and I am entitled to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut objects.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to give the gentleman what information I can.

Mr. DONOVAN. No; the gentleman from Texas ought to be allowed to continue what he wishes to say upon this matter.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, wherever a legitimate project is proposed and it is shown that it is a good investment, the kind of investment that a private individual with the whole field before him would go into if he was paying his own money out upon it, I would go into it, and not otherwise.

Digging a canal to parallel the Atlantic Ocean, to give a waterway to people who are on the coast, giving a waterway from Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk, Va., when they have the open Atlantic Ocean running from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet, S. C., is foolishness; it is time to stop. They want it to run just inside the shore, and for what? To accommodate the great ocean-going traffic? Oh, no; it is to be a 12-foot channel. What could it accommodate? Real traffic going along that shore which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] says is driven in on the coast and wrecked? Oh, no. No ocean-going steamer could ever go into the canal. Last year, after we had appropriated $1,300,000 for that thing, I made an investigation to find out what kind of traffic was running from Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk, Va., and I found there were two little gasoline boats drawing 3 feet of water running, each one of them carrying about as much as a box car, making the trip once a week each. [Laughter.]

I made investigation to find facts about small boats running on inland waters, and I found that the river traffic and canal traffic throughout the United States had been declining since 1881 to 1906, and was still declining——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Give me one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALLAWAY. It was still declining, and that it had declined about 50 per cent from 1881 until 1906, and from 1906 until 1912 it was continuing to decline at about the same rate, showing conclusively that river and canal traffic could not compete with the railroads. But, oh; they talk about reducing freight rates. Trying to reduce freight rates when the Interstate Commerce Commission is raising freight rates is incongruous. The railroads say they can not live at the rates they now have, and we are pouring out on little inconsequential streams and impossible harbors millions and millions of dollars trying to lower freight rates, when the Interstate Commerce Commission, after going into the matter thoroughly, are raising freight rates in order that the railroads may live. Foolishness! Foolishness! Foolishness! What for? I am going to read into this RECORD before I quit the "what for." The fellows have shown it here in this discussion. What is the complaint made here, "that you do not give me enough. You are treating Dick better than you treat me. He was 9 and I was 8." That is the whole complaint against any feature of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Give me a minute more, and then I will quit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for one minute additional. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, unless we reach an agreement as to the time to be consumed on the paragraph, I shall object.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in deference to the suggestion of the gentleman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in six minutes, the gentleman from Texas to have one minute and I to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes, the gentleman from Texas to have one minute and the gentleman from North Carolina five.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Make it eight minutes and I will quit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not make it anything. The Chair is simply stating the request.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I ask unanimous consent that it may be eight minutes, and five of those minutes be given to the gentleman from North Carolina and that I may have three.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the suggestion in reference to eight minutes—that three shall be given to the gentleman from Texas and five minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes, three to go to the gentleman from Texas and five to the gentleman from North Carolina. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina was on the amendment. I have no objection to closing the debate on the amendment in eight minutes, but I want to get some information in regard to this $600,000 appropriation, and I can not get it from the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from North Carolina. I want an opportunity to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. Now, if they want to have this debate closed on the amendment, I have no objection; but if on the paragraph and all amendments thereto, I am going to object.

Mr. SMALL. How much time does the gentleman from Connecticut wish?

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DONOVAN. Did the gentleman address his remarks to me?

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DONOVAN. Five minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Make it 13 minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes, 3 minutes to go to the gentleman from Texas, 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, and 5 minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes, the gentleman from Texas to have 3 minutes, the gentleman from Connecticut to have 5 minutes, and the gentleman from North Carolina to have 5 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, the whole trend of this argument that has been going on since this bill came up was, as I said, "You did not give me my share; you took too much and did not give me enough." Now, let us see if that is the way Members of this House work on this river and harbor appropriation bill according to the sentiment of the country and according to this River and Harbor Congress that worked so diligently in this matter. Let us see. Capt. Ellison—and this river and harbor committee know Capt. Ellison—the secretary and treasurer of the River and Harbor Congress, said:

> It is not his fault as I see it, but our fault, and I use the word "our" in a nation-wide sense. We send him here to legislate for the Nation theoretically, but actually to get all he can for us; and if he does not get our share, and then some, we do our best to replace him with some other man, who takes better care of our particular congressional district.

That is what Capt. Ellison says. Is not that what you are doing? Oh, yes; that is what you are doing. Did you hear the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] say, "How can I go back to my constituency if they put in this new project of the gentleman from Connecticut and I do not get a new project, and explain to them that I have done my duty in getting everything I could?"

Get everything you can get. That is the whole theory of this river and harbor bill and the way it is made up. I do not complain of these men. They are human. I have yet to go to any place and see a body of men that are not human. These organizations behind them are working at them to get all they can. The dredging organizations are working at them. The River and Harbor Congress is working at them. How? Here is a report from an official of a dredging organization. Let us see what he says in reference to what should be done:

These entertainments do not entail any serious expense upon the association, but they do create the greatest possible prestige for our business in the estimation of those whose favor it is to our advantage to gain. Influential public men and men of business affairs having to do with transportation companies and steamship lines ARE ENTERTAINED by us on these occasions with the greatest possible benefit to our business—municipal officers, heads of departments, Members of Congress and of legislatures—and their favor and interest is legitimately gained and has been found to be of the greatest value when circumstances required it. THE EXPENSE OF OUR ENTERTAINMENT IS WISELY EXPENDED AND BRINGS AN ADEQUATE RETURN FOR EVERY DOLLAR SO SPENT.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], I would say that I notice here an appropriation of $600,000 for a waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., in the language: "Continuing improvement." Could the gentleman, with his research, state how they determine that amount at $600,000? How do they arrive at it?

Mr. FREAR. I presume the committee could give a more intelligent answer than I can, but I will venture this statement, gathered from the reports I have gone over quite fully and carefully. They are very large reports, and I have tried to get what information I could simply for this purpose. Five million four hundred thousand dollars have first been approved in that project, and then they make appropriations. They make recommendations to the committee. They have put in over $500,000 already besides the $800,000 they had on hand. The engineers now ask for $1,000,000. The committee, in taking it up, has in its wisdom decided that $600,000 is all they will put in the project this year.

Mr. DONOVAN. Let me see. The Board of Engineers has at some time authorized or recommended this appropriation, and they have done it in sections, so to speak—different amounts for different years. Is this the first year, or have there been several years before this?

Mr. FREAR. There have been other appropriations before, because $500,000 have been expended before.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the gentleman know when, or not?

Mr. FREAR. No; I have not followed that out. The act was passed in 1912. The project was to cost $5,400,000. An expenditure of $576,305 had occurred up to June 30, 1914. So it was within two years that that money was expended.

Mr. DONOVAN. Do the engineers make a report every year, or, at least, when there is a new appropriation recommended by the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. FREAR. I understand they do, and request the amount that they can use either for maintenance or for the continuance of the project or improvement. Of course, I am not on the committee.

Mr. DONOVAN. Was there a report from the Board of Engineers this year for that $600,000?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The estimate by the War Department for this year, to last until June 30 of next year, was $1,000,000; but, when we undertook the task of cutting all the items, and particularly the larger items, we came to the conclusion that while they might spend, and could spend judiciously, no doubt, $1,000,000 during the period mentioned, they could get along on $600,000; and hence we allowed that amount.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, the gentleman will say there was an appropriation made for this same work in some other year—a year ago, or two years ago, or whenever it was.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Two appropriations have been made before this.

Mr. DONOVAN. Exactly. Well, then, it is continuing that same work, is it not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is a continuation of that same work.

Mr. DONOVAN. Still, it is a new work—work that has never been done before?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is an old project.

Mr. DONOVAN. Like the Bridgeport project, that was adopted in 1889, modified again in 1906, and modified again in 1910.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This has not been modified, though.

Mr. CALLAWAY. They are fixing to modify it, though, by fixing another cut-off.

Mr. SPARKMAN. They are not arranging for anything of that kind now.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, what is bothering me, Mr. Chairman, is to distinguish the difference between a new project and an old project. I understand from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] if there has been an appropriation made and afterwards it needs a deeper digging or greater widening of the channel it is an old project. Now, there is a conflict here amongst these experts. The chairman seems to think that it is not an old project to ask an appropriation, but calls it a new project.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What new project?

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from North Carolina claims when there has an appropriation been made for rivers and harbors that later should require deepening or widening that that would be an old project.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That would be a new project.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary to take up the time of the committee, but in view of some statements that have been made I will ask the attention of the committee briefly.

If there is one project in this bill which has been thrashed over in every detail more carefully than any other, which has been at times the subject of criticism and approbation more than any other, it is this waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C. It is, I think, a fair statement to make that the facts upon which it is based have commended this project favorably to every citizen, either in or out of Congress, who is in favor of river and harbor improvements and who sincerely desires to determine the merits of the project. I will make just this brief statement——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. SMALL. I can not yield now, I regret to say. I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SMALL. This waterway is about 185 miles long, from Norfolk to Beaufort. It intersects the inland sounds and waters of North Carolina, with three excavations through solid land, amounting altogether to not exceeding 12 miles, all of which have been excavated. It lies inside of Cape Hatteras and Cape Lookout, the two most dangerous points on the Atlantic seaboard. It forms an outlet for the water-borne commerce of eastern North Carolina, having navigable rivers aggregating a total length of more than 1,300 miles and having navigable sounds with an area of 2,500 square miles and affords the only outlet of all that thrifty section, with a population of nearly a million, one of the richest agricultural sections of the South, to the outside world.

These statements in the main constitute the bases of its merits. It is a practicable proposition from an engineering standpoint. There have been three distinct surveys by three different boards of engineers, and every one of them has made an unequivocally favorable report upon it.

As to the commerce, in order to illustrate the inaccuracy—unintentional, of course—of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] about one gasoline boat, there passed through the upper end of this waterway in 1913, that end between Norfolk and Albemarle Sound, in all 8,465 vessels.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SMALL. No; I can not be interrupted. I commend to the gentleman to listen to me. It would be better for him. I can not be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SMALL. Eight thousand four hundred and sixty-five vessels. There was a tonnage also for the same year of 652,524 tons, of a total valuation of $9,224,621. This commerce passed through this waterway in spite of the fact that it has deteriorated and was being maintained and in some sections under construction at the time, impairing the use of the waterway to an appreciable extent.

Taking it altogether, Mr. Chairman, based upon the proposition that it avoids our most dangerous coastwise navigation; that it affords an outlet to these numerous navigable rivers and navigable sounds in eastern North Carolina and is the only outlet for its water-borne commerce; considering the commerce which has already been attracted to it and which in the opinion of unbiased observers, the United States Engineers, will largely be increased when completed, in the opinion of unbiased men everywhere it is not subject to criticism, but is worthy of commendation as a waterway of conspicuous merit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 10, line 8, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to the portion of the bill which was passed over. He has that right.

Mr. MANN. It was passed over by unanimous consent. He has the right to return to it.

The CHAIRMAN. He has the right to return to it under the unanimous consent, and the gentleman is recognized.

Mr. BROCKSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROCKSON: Page 10, between lines 7 and 22, insert the following:

"Inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del., continuing improvement, $130,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to condemn a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co. where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks, and any funds appropriated for improving said waterway are hereby made available for paying the award that may be made in said proceeding."

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, as appears by the pending bill, the committee included a provision for condemning a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co., but the bill carries no appropriation for that purpose. This project of the inland waterway between Delaware Bay and Rehoboth Bay is not a new project. It was adopted several years ago, and appropriations have been made at different times for the improvement of that waterway. During last year a considerable sum of money was expended in improving it. The work is still being done. It is only a question as to whether or not this bill shall carry an appropriation for continuing the work. I shall not take up time to discuss the merits of the project, because it has already been adjudged to be meritorious by the action of this House. At the last session of Congress the committee approved this project and included in the bill that passed the House $60,000 for continuing the work. When the bill was reported from the Senate committee to the Senate it carried an item of $109,000 for the continuation of the work on this waterway.

The Engineer's report for 1914, now before us, on page 369, contains the following recommendation:

Fund required. Amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year 1916 for improvement and for maintenance, $130,000.

For that reason I have offered the amendment to appropriate the $130,000.

The committee may call attention to the fact that there is a sum of money in hand, something over $40,000. All the money in hand would probably not be enough to pay for the right of way through the property of the railroad company. It will be very expensive to the Government to have this work discontinued, because the machinery is all there and the work is now in progress. It should be continued. I submit that the provision for condemnation should be accompanied with an adequate sum of money to pay for the right of way when condemned. Therefore I submit that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment only embraced the idea of condemnation proceedings, we would have no objection whatever to it; but it undertakes to appropriate $130,000, a thing which the committee, after thorough consideration of the matter, decided not to do. It was the purpose of the committee not to appropriate any money at all in this bill for this project. As has been said, there are about $140,000 on hand, and, pending these condemnation proceedings, it was thought by the committee and by the engineers that the money on hand would be sufficient and that the payment of the award under the condemnation proceedings could await another appropriation at another session of Congress.

We had before us Maj. Johnson, who has charge of that particular work. He spoke at some length before the committee, or some members of the committee, and without reading his entire remarks he said:

We are going to save about $50,000 to $75,000 on the estimate. If nothing was allowed—

Meaning in this bill—not much damage would be done. It will take some time to go to the courts and get the right of way across the railroad. That is the next thing which should be done.

So, with the opinion of the engineer before us, that no harm would be done if we made no appropriation, that it was unnecessary at this time to appropriate the money to meet the award to be made by the jury impaneled for the purpose of condemning the land, we concluded not to insert any provision for an appropriation in this bill, and for that reason I hope this amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, between lines 7 and 22, insert the following: "Inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del., continuing improvements, $60,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to condemn a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland, & Virginia Railroad Co. where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks, and any funds appropriated for improving said waterway are hereby made available for paying the award that may be made in said proceedings."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How many amendments can the gentleman from Delaware offer at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the agreement was that we should recur to this point in the bill, to enable the gentleman from Delaware to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. He has offered one; can he keep it up all night?

Mr. BROCKSON. I have only one more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this amendment should be adopted; otherwise we impeach the judgment of the engineers and the committee of the House of the last session of Congress, and Congress itself. Before the last session the engineers recommended $60,000 and deemed it necessary to carry on this work, and to pay the award under the condemnation proceedings. This money is not all to pay for condemning the property of the railroad company. The committee believed in this item and incorporated it in the bill at the last session. The House believed in it and passed it in the bill. Therefore, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

One other thing I wish to say. Of course, I understand, that these bills are not made up by States or according to the location of Members, or anything of that sort. I also understand there is a desire at this time to economize. In that I heartily concur, but I do contend that the economy should be equitably distributed. The bill passed by the House at the last session for the projects within the State of Delaware carried $186,200. Now the pending bill carries $91,000, a reduction of more than one-half. If that sort of reduction would be practiced throughout the United States, we would have a bill here about one-half the size of the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, between lines 7 and 22, insert the following:

"Inland waterway, between Rehobeth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del.: Continuing improvement. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to condemn a right of way through the tracks of the Delaware, Maryland & Virginia Railroad Co. where the line of said waterway intersects said railroad tracks."

Mr. BROCKSON. This amendment provides simply for the condemnation of right of way through the tracks.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor at Beaufort, N. C.: For maintenance, $17,000.

Mr CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out all of lines 19 and 20.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Looking at page 1943 and pages following in the Engineer's report for 1914, on page 1945 I find a map of this Beaufort inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., and of this canal. Down in the right-hand corner, at the bottom of this map, I see "Improving inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C." Right under that I see a dotted line marked "Route adopted by Congress," which is clearly marked on the map. Still below I see a line dotted in another way with smaller dots, "Proposed change in route under examination." The route adopted by Congress runs through Pamlico Sound into the Neuse River. The proposed change in the route under examination runs some miles farther inland. It runs from the point of Alligator Bay to Bellehaven, and from Bellehaven, across the mouth of Pamlico River, inland again across into the Neuse River. I want to know from this committee whether this route was originally surveyed by these engineers who never make any mistake, who scientifically investigate every proposition from the standpoint of feasibility and economy? We have already approved this project and appropriated over thirteen hundred thousand dollars, and now they propose a change in route.

Mr. SMALL. We have appropriated fourteen hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Worse still! I ask the gentleman now, after we have adopted the route and expended fourteen hundred thousand dollars upon it, if it is not a fact, according to this engineer's report, the engineers have a proposed change in the route, and that, so far as that part of it that is changed is concerned, it would almost double the expenses? Is not that true?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is not discussing his proposed amendment, Mr. Chairman, and that is a matter that we have already passed upon, but I will be very glad to answer the question of the gentleman. In the river and harbor act of 1913 there was authorized a reexamination of the southern end of this waterway, with a view of determining whether there should be any change in the route in order to avoid a part of the route across Pamlico Sound, which is quite exposed. The engineers have reported on that. What their report is I do not know, because it has not yet been printed. I hope that answers the question of the gentleman.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, in this Committee of the Whole we have voted to appropriate $600,000, carrying out this original proposition which we adopted, which, according to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and according to the showing of the engineers, is proposed to be changed just about the time we get the thing completed. They have already opened it for commerce, and the gentleman says, in answer to my statement, that an immense amount of commerce has been going on in that section of the country. He did not meet the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, he did not answer the statement that I made. It was this: If it was not a fact that that canal from Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk, Va., only had two gasoline boats on it running full length? What would you think of a railroad in this country that never had a single through line of cars running from end to end? It would be a great traffic line, would it not? What would you think about the great transcontinental railroads if there was not a single through train? If when you shipped from Chicago to San Francisco, you would have to reship every 30 miles, would not that be a great transportation line? That is the situation on this canal, which he says is a great line of commerce 185 miles long, and then goes on to show the freight that is on it. The statement that I made was that there were two little gasoline boats running once a week each from Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk, Va., and that was all the through traffic upon it. A great line of commerce!

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman ask me the question and want an answer?

Mr. CALLAWAY. No; I told you that. [Laughter.] You disputed it.

Mr. SMALL. No; I say that the gentleman is misinformed.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And I will tell you what you would not do for the enlightenment of this committee. You would not tell them the number of the through boat lines that are on it, and the names of the companies that run them, and you never have, because that information shows that if we want to travel as passengers we would have to reship a dozen times. How many times would we have to lay over and how many times would we have to recheck our trunks with a dozen different companies to get 40 miles on one of these propositions? Nobody travels on them, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking two or three questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas is still pending.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and the paragraph end in five minutes, two minutes to be consumed by the gentleman from Texas and three minutes by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] had the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understood the gentleman rose to ask a question.

Mr. SLOAN. I do want to ask a question. However, I will move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MADDEN. I object, unless the gentleman from Nebraska can have three minutes in addition to the time suggested.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no objection; I thought he simply got up to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the proposition which the gentleman from Florida makes?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That debate on this paragraph end in five minutes, three minutes to be used by the gentleman from Nebraska and two by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes—three minutes to be consumed by the gentleman from Nebraska and two by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I expected the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] in his closing discussion on the canal would have yielded to some of us who desired to ask some questions, but he refused on account of the lack of time. I want to suggest these practical questions to him. If we are putting $600,000 into this canal, and this harbor is at the end of the canal I understand, who is to control that canal? If the United States is to control it, is it to be free for United States shipping? Is it to be free for the shipping of the world? And if, in the course of a change of administration or any repudiation of some platform, can the control of that canal, which is the second important canal that the United States has constructed in point of expense and in magnitude, under any circumstances be transferred in whole or in part to any other power? The American people are interested, to some extent at least, in knowing if it invests a number of millions of dollars in this second great canal—first, that the United States shall, under all circumstances, control it absolutely; that it shall be free to American shipping; and that we should charge for foreign shipping if we see fit. Those were the questions I desired to submit.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman assume that this canal is of sufficient consequence to admit of any foreign shipping? [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. I do not know; it is not constructed yet.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment pending affects Beaufort Harbor, and the discussion has been upon the waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., which had already been passed upon. If only occurs to me to say this, Mr. Chairman. I of course assume that the gentleman from Texas thought he was stating facts and the true conditions regarding this waterway, but as a matter of fact he has been misinformed. The statement I made in my remarks just a few moments ago about the number of vessels passing through this waterway for 1913, the last fiscal year in which we have data, is correct, and the amount of tonnage and the valuation of that tonnage is correct, as reported by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman endeavoring to answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SMALL. I am coming to that now.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's time will be up before he reaches it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMALL. I will advert to the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska. This waterway, Mr. Chairman, is exclusively the property of the United States and under its exclusive jurisdiction, and it is free to the commerce of the United States, and I presume of all nations, provided it be carried in our vessels. It is to have a maximum depth of 12 feet, which draft I do not think will attract any foreign shipping, but it will be a very important factor in the development of our domestic commerce. I hope that answers the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Nebraska withdraws the pro forma amendment and the question——

Mr. SLOAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment but not the questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment; and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: For maintenance, $5,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] where this particular inlet is? Beaufort is opposite Morehead City. You have passed an appropriation for the harbor. Now, where is Beaufort Inlet?

Mr. SMALL. I am surprised that the gentleman, who has displayed such familiarity with the coast line of New England, should feel impelled to ask a question about so important an inlet as Beaufort, on the coast of North Carolina. It lies just south of Cape Lookout, about midway the State.

Mr. DONOVAN. That is good. Now the gentleman will acknowledge that Morehead City is opposite Beaufort, will he not?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; on the opposite side of the harbor or bay.

Mr. DONOVAN. Exactly. And Beaufort Inlet is the water running south from there. That is what you call the inlet, is it?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; running from the harbor into the ocean.

Mr. DONOVAN. Can there be two harbors there?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Beaufort is on one side of the harbor and Morehead City on the other?

Mr. SMALL. As a matter of fact, they are separated by shoals.

Mr. DONOVAN. And that is what you are appropriating money for, that shoal water?

Mr. SMALL. You ask why there could be two harbors on one body of water. One harbor is in front of one place and one in front of the other, but they are separated by shoal water.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is not Beaufort on the ocean side?

Mr. SMALL. No; neither one is on the ocean side. They are both on the inside of the inlet. Beaufort lies east of Morehead City.

Mr. DONOVAN. Let me finish the question. Morehead City is on the mainland?

Mr. SMALL. And so is Beaufort. Separated by a bay and Newport River.

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, then, I do not know it when I see it.

Mr. SMALL. May I extend an invitation to the gentleman to go down with me and inspect it?

Mr. DONOVAN. I own property down there, I will say to the gentleman. I am the owner of property there, and I have been there and I know about the commerce on that river. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] has stated the truth. In order to go up that waterway I had to get on a little mail boat. The mail would not carry as many passengers as there are men in this section here. That was the kind of transportation I had with which to go to Davis.

The gentleman is acquainted with where Davis is located down there. It is the finest place in this country for raising fish, oysters, and crabs. The water is clear and pure; there is no sewage, there is no manufacturing, and nothing to soil the water. And the shore running from the strip of land and the ocean proper to this so-called sound—the gentleman from North Carolina called it shoals—why the grass runs off from it into shallow water two or three hundred feet, and makes a great feeding place for ducks. They come there in the spring of the year. A few men from the North, who have a little more money than anything else, go down there for recreation and shoot the ducks, and that is the principal business, except to stop in the hotel on the way to the feeding ground in Beaufort city.

Mr. BURGESS. How many ducks did you kill?

Mr. DONOVAN. I have them yet to kill.

I am surprised to think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] did not answer the gentleman from Texas about the commerce and about the boats that run from one end of the waterway to the other. He could not answer, because they were not there and have not been there.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut withdraws his pro forma amendment.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I made a statement which the gentleman from North Carolina has been saying he wanted to correct me about. I ask him, for heaven's sake, to tell this House the names of the boats that make regular trips from Beaufort Inlet to Norfolk, Va., and give the names of the companies or men that own them, so we can find out whether or not the statement is correct. And he has not named them. He will not name them. He is in exactly the same position that this committee has been ever since I began fighting this river and harbor bill three years ago. Instead of giving you any information that is of worth they never give you any understanding of the commerce and traffic that goes over the river and who it is that wants to use it; they do what they can to conceal the facts and then get raw, raw, raw when anybody criticizes them.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that there is no commerce on this great waterway?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I told you that there were two gasoline boats last year, drawing 3 feet of water, that would carry about as much as a box car, that made a weekly trip through that canal from Beaufort to Norfolk, Va.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you say they made tri-weekly trips? Try to go up one week and try to get back the next?

Mr. CALLAWAY. And so it is with inland transportation on waterways all over this country.

Everybody that has ever given this subject any study at all knows that transportation is playing out on the rivers and playing out on the canals. It can not compete with the railroads. Yet these men here are throwing millions of dollars of the people's money into these projects year after year. Instead of getting an increase of commerce on these rivers they get what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] shows they were getting on the Ohio, Mississippi, and every other river in this country—a continual decrease in the transportation from year to year, as the rail transportation through that country increases 10 and 20 and 50 and 100 per cent a year.

Why do not they come up to the rack and tell the truth about these conditions and meet them as they are instead of beating about the bush on questions like this and trying to mislead the committee as to the statements I made about the traffic that goes from one end of that canal to the other? I told the truth about it. I tell the truth every time I hit. I have not an interest on earth, none in the world, in that thing over there, save to see that justice is done. I have no interest in any water-carrying concern, nor in any line of commerce in the way of rivers in any section of this country. There are no navigable rivers in my district, notwithstanding the Trinity and Brazos both run through it. [Laughter.]

What I want is an honest expenditure of the money that is put into the Federal Treasury, because I know how it goes in there. I know something about what it takes to earn an honest dollar when a man has to bend to it his energy and his brawn and brain. Before I came to Congress I earned all the dollars I got. [Laughter.] Since I have come up here I have doubted very much if I earned anything. [Renewed laughter.] But if I can succeed in the course of my service here in helping to kill this river and harbor waste, I shall have done something to earn my salary; and if I stay here, I hope to get the scalp of this thing by the help of other men.

I am determined on it; and if I had just known enough about the rules when I first came here to have known that the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois would go to the canals paralleling the ocean, I would have decapitated all of them in the beginning, because I came in about the time they got to appropriating the money to build the canals running along next the ocean, so that you might have water transportation from Boston around to the Rio Grande River. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pamlico and Tar Rivers, N. C.: Completing improvement up to Greenville and for maintenance of improvement above Washington, $35,800.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 5, 6, and 7 on page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, strike out lines 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this covers continuing the improvement, and the character of the improvement is such that I believe it ought to be known by the House. We have appropriated already $322,863 for this river. It is the same river, having a different name in two different States. In October, 1914, $19,038 was on hand. The present project is for a channel 200 feet wide and 10 feet deep, and it is 77 per cent completed.

To show the difficulties under which they are laboring down on this river, the Engineer's report on page 475 states that owing to a greater number of logs and snags being encountered than was anticipated, the estimated cost of the project was increased in 1913 by $15,000 and again in 1914 by $23,500, making the total revised estimate of the cost, $132,550.

Here is the kind of work that was done upon that river last year. By the way, it is navigable from three to six months in the year, during freshets. I call the attention of my friend who has charge of the Trinity River [Mr. CALLAWAY] to the fact that here is a stream that for three months of the year, during freshets, has navigation of some kind. Gentlemen, I pay my respects and my apologies to the Kissimmee River for whatever was said against it in times past for failure to have navigation. I think that had four months of water.

The engineers in 1913 pulled 5 snags, 510 stumps, 6 logs, 16 sawlogs, 1 scow, and 1 old house out of the river. [Laughter.] That is the statement in the engineer's report. The question that comes to us now is to know what was the line of demarkation between the land and the water in this particular river, especially as regards the location of the house.

The commerce is 90 per cent timber. That is downstream. Upstream it is 50 per cent timber. That is the character of the project for which $35,800 is asked, which is 77 per cent completed. In view of the facts, and in view of the condition of the Treasury at the present time, and the objectionable features of the war tax under which we are living, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that part of page 12 which refers to this project.

Mr. SLOAN. Strike out the war tax.

Mr. FREAR. I will take that as an amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR.]

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Smiths Creek, N. C.: For maintenance, $2,400.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$2,400," in line 11, and insert "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 11, strike out "$2,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I think we are getting down to about what is right. For a great many years I have contended that the rights of one man in this country are as paramount as the rights of all men. Here we have an appropriation for Smiths Creek. Is that great stream owned by the Government of the United States? Certainly not. Its name does not indicate it. Is it owned or controlled by the State of North Carolina? No. By the county in which it runs, when it does run? No. By any firm or corporation? I should think not. It is the sole property, sir, of Smith—and Bill Smith at that, I apprehend. [Laughter.]

Sir, I understand that this creek rises in the northeastern part of Smith's plantation and in a leisurely fashion winds its way from time to time almost 5¼ miles in length—I think I have the proper data upon its length—and that it finds its mouth, sir, in the southwestern portion of Bill's plantation. As I understand, he holds the absolute title in fee simple, an indefeasible title; a title, sir, that can not be alienated from him, deeded to him, his heirs and assigns, forever, with all the corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments, as well as other appurtenances thereunto belonging. [Laughter.] And I submit that, inasmuch as this Congress, from time to time, has been making lavish appropriations upon great streams like the Mississippi—I will not say the Ouachita or the Red or some other streams in Arkansas, because, unfortunately, those have been overlooked—we do know that the Ohio, the Tennessee, and many great national streams have been the recipients of the bounty of this Congress, as well as other Congresses in the past, then, sir, why should not Bill Smith have his creek improved at Government expense when he owns the title thereto? Now, Mr. Chairman, this great project, I suppose, is used by Bill and his family exclusively, except when the people from 2 or 3 miles around gather to disport themselves on holiday occasions and on the Fourth of July, when the neighbors come from around there to hold their regatta races. I submit that inasmuch as Congress has been liberal in making appropriations in the past, twenty-four hundred dollars is an extreme amount, and therefore I move to amend by reducing it to $2,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] heard what the gentleman from Arkansas said in regard to Smith's having an inalienable and indefeasible right to this creek. As to the amount of the appropriation, the amount originally recommended by the Chief of Engineers was $5,400, which was reduced by the committee to $2,400, the lowest amount which can be used for its maintenance.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman tell us where Smith Creek is located?

Mr. SMALL. It is located in North Carolina, and is the harbor of Oriental, and has a fairly good commerce. It is a project meriting the appropriation which has been made in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CALLAWAY) there were 24 ayes and 60 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterway from Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: For maintenance, $8,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, strike out lines 14 and 15.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. In order to reach Beaufort Inlet from Pamlico Sound do you not have to go by the way of Core Sound?

Mr. SMALL. Formerly you did, but since the waterway has been opened up this is the best available route; in fact, the only one now used from Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Inlet. It has been improved since the gentleman was there.

Mr. DONOVAN. You have, in the next line, an item connecting Core Sound and Beaufort Harbor.

Mr. SMALL. Yes; that is to go by way of Taylors Cut or Taylors Creek, and was adopted by Congress on condition that the locality should contribute $10,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

New River and waterways to Beaufort, N. C.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance of New River and of inland waterways between Beaufort Harbor and New River and between New River and Swansboro, $37,300.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, strike out all of lines 19, 20, 21, and 22.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas, who discussed Smiths Creek a few minutes ago. This is a project on which $221,000 has been expended. Seventy-one thousand and fifty-six dollars is still available, and $37,300 is asked for for improvements and for maintenance. I wish to read one particular paragraph here, not only for the benefit of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN], but other lawyers on the floor, and to get their professional opinion as to the rights of the Government, and I might say, parenthetically, also the opinion of the gentleman from Nebraska. I read from page 500 of the Engineer's Report in reference to this project:

Until June 13, 1906, no work, except a survey made in April and May, 1901, had ever been done on this waterway, for the reason that an act of the General Assembly of North Carolina, ratified February 13, 1889, had incorporated the Wrightsville & Onslow Navigation Co.

with the exclusive right to navigate said waterway, as set forth in House Executive Document No. 26, Fifty-second Congress, first session (p. 1147 of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1892).

Here is the question:

On February 6, 1905, however, a paper was obtained from the two survivors of the four parties named in the charter of said Wrightsville & Onslow Navigation Co., in which paper it was declared that the privileges and franchises granted in said charter had never been exercised and that said privileges and franchises had "to all intents and purposes been surrendered and abandoned."

I wish to ask if a quitclaim deed by these two gentlemen to the Government is good. We started in to make the appropriations prior to the execution of the quitclaim deed by the two remaining members of the corporation. This was for a commerce for the year 1913, which amounted to 8,987 short tons.

I am reading from page 501 of the report—at an approximate value of $164,696.90, a decrease in one year of 8,485 tons below that of last year.

In other words, a decrease of practically 50 per cent in the commerce at this point, and for that reason, and with what we have before us—oh, here is one other item that may be interesting. There is a half page of commercial items in connection with this particular project, which is found on page 1996, with a grand total of 42,687 tons of traffic. One item of timber reaches 39,865 tons, leaving 2,822 tons for the remaining items which could be floated in very shallow water, ordinarily speaking. That is all I care to offer at this time, because I am not offering any argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Northeast, Black, and Cape Fear Rivers, N. C.: For maintenance of improvement of Northeast and Black Rivers and of Cape Fear River above Wilmington, N. C., $13,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, strike out all of lines 23, 24, 25, and 26.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that through the active aid of the engineers through the past year we have been enabled to maintain the depth in this river which was gained one year ago, because the Engineer's report reads identical with that of a year ago, and here is what they have accomplished with the money that has been expended on this river. The past appropriations are $39,943. Here is the statement:

From Crooms Bridge to Kornegays Bridge, the head of navigation, the river is so shallow that navigation is practicable only when the water is up. This is liable to occur at any time, but during the summer low stages usually prevail.

[Laughter.]

I have not yet given you that part in which the engineers are entitled to great credit, however, for maintaining the average depth. In the very next paragraph of the report I find the following:

The minimum low-water depth to Bannermans Bridge is 6 feet; to Crooms Bridge, 3 feet; to Hallsville, 0.5 foot; to Kornegays Bridge (the head of navigation), 0.1 foot.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, what kind of boats do they use on that one-tenth of a foot?

Mr. STAFFORD. Stone boats. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand any navigation occurs on this part of the river where the water is only one-tenth of a foot deep?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I believe an expression used by the gentleman from Illinois last year is very proper at this time. At that time he said that the people living down there in that neighborhood should get out insurance on that particular stream.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I know the gentleman is familiar with these rivers in North Carolina.

Mr. FREAR. I lived there once for a short time.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman is a Tarheel, I understand.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; I was only there for a few months.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he has found any other locations in North Carolina where any other rivers could be located by the Government for the purpose of excavation? [Laughter.]

Mr. FREAR. That is a fair question, and I say that it is difficult in view of the fact that 20 of these North Carolina projects are in this bill, while 26 of the projects appeared in the bill of last year from that one State alone. Mr. Chairman, I wish now to refer briefly to the character of commerce upon that creek.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I especially want to know what character of commerce goes over that section which is one-tenth of a foot deep.

Mr. FREAR. I give it up. The report says that the commerce is handled on a few boats that make some attempts at regular trips. The amount for the three years is $16,500, and the commerce was 123,177 tons, of which number made up 71,545 tons, and also fertilizer—there is a fertilizing factory there near the mouth, it will be remembered, for we had an appropriation last year—41,927 tons. That fertilizing project is hauled 2 miles.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it cost $13,000 to fertilize this ditch?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; apparently.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin think that $13,000 a year is an excessive amount for the maintenance of a stream that carries 123,000 tons of freight?

Mr. FREAR. I am explaining to the gentleman from Texas the character of this commerce.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Surely.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There are three of these rivers—the Northeast, the Black, and the Cape Fear Rivers—and the combined tonnage is 318,932 tons, for which this $13,000 is allowed.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon an answer to my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. May I have five minutes more? [Cries of "Vote!"] I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can we close debate at the end of that five minutes?

Mr. SMALL. I would like to have three minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has the votes; why does he desire time?

Mr. DIES. I will withdraw the question, if that will expedite the matter.

Mr. FREAR. I would be very glad to answer the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. I will be glad to withdraw the question if it will save any time at all.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes, five minutes to be yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]——

Mr. FREAR. Three minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. SMALL. Three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin and two to myself.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not see what the gentleman from North Carolina wants with any minutes; he seems to have the votes and that is just as good as minutes.

Mr. SMALL. I merely want to make an explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have three minutes and that I have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes, of which time the gentleman from Wisconsin is to have three minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cape Fear River above Wilmington, N. C.: Continuing improvement, with a view to securing a navigable depth of 8 feet up to Fayetteville, $173,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first three lines of page 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, strike out lines 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this is a project on which there has been spent by the Government up to date $346,160, on the Cape Fear River, above. There was available on October 14, after the allotment was made from the $20,000,000 of the last bill, $139,561. This is a proposition calling for $615,000, as far as I have the figures here, but the expenditures, June 30, 1914, on all projects on this river have amounted to $5,805,790. The increase from the estimates of $615,000 to $1,031,000 was made by the engineers in four years after they discovered it was impossible to construct the project on the original estimate. The engineers' report further says, on page 511, "The improvement has had no effect on freight rates so far." Reading from page 508, of the engineers' report, "the commerce of 1913 was 154,000 short tons, a decrease in the commerce below last year of 53,384 tons. The river navigation is too unreliable at present to affect freight rates." The commerce amounted to 154,797 tons. Of that timber and floatable stuff amounted to 77,173 tons; fertilizer, 49,553 tons. The gentleman from Texas a few moments ago inquired whether or not I believe that was a condition that ought to be considered. I certainly do. Timber ordinarily is hauled on barges and in many cases is rafted in these streams and there is no particular depth required, provided it is sufficient to float the logs as we float them in all other parts of the country, but the engineers put that in as a part of the tonnage. When it comes to hauling fertilizer material they have here a 4-mile haul indicating the importance of the project which is continued for many miles, but it is not necessary for the benefit of the fertilizer factory which only requires the 4 miles.

That leaves a balance in this particular case of 28,000 tons and a loss of 20 per cent during the year. That is all I care to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington, N. C.: Completing improvement and for maintenance, $205,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, strike out lines 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this is an appropriation of which the total amount spent on the river, as I stated before, has been $5,805,790, and available on this particular project October 14, $187,610. We are now asked to contribute by this bill $205,000 more. Of the commerce in 1912 there was a loss, between 1912 and 1913, in the traffic of 28 per cent. It was a large commerce, reaching over a million tons in 1912 and 773,000 tons in 1910. Reading from page 513, it says:

The river and harbor act of February 27, 1911, made an appropriation of $100,000 for continuing the improvement to such depth in excess of 20 feet as appropriations made for the work will permit, and provided also that not exceeding $1,000 thereof might be used for clearing to a depth of 10 feet the channel or cut between the main channel of the river and the Carolina Beach Pier. This latter work was completed in May, 1911, which resulted in a channel 10 feet deep, 80 feet wide, and about 700 feet long.

The river and harbor act of July 25, 1912, modified the project so as to secure an available channel depth of 26 feet at mean low water and width of 30 feet, increased at entrance and curves in the river and widening to 400 feet across the bar, at an estimated cost of $572,940, with $80,000 annually for maintenance, in accordance with report printed in House Document No. 287, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the very large amount of money that has been spent, nearly $6,000,000, and that in October, 1914, $187,000 was on hand, I believe it would be economical for us at this particular time to strike out the $205,000 item.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shallotte River, N. C.: For maintenance, $1,800.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 8, page 13, the following:
"For the improvement of the French Broad and Swannanoa Rivers, N. C., $2,000 each."

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, with the passing of this item we leave the State of North Carolina, where we have sojourned so pleasantly for the past few hours; thence we go to the great Palmetto State of South Carolina. But I can not afford to leave the State of my good father, where he first saw the light of day, the old tar-heel State, without coming to the rescue of two streams that have been overlooked, not only by the gentleman who represents the committee from that State, but likewise by the entire committee itself.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have an eye for the attractive, for the majestic. I am not very poetic, but, sir, with my limited acquaintance, I know of no two streams so very attractive as the French Broad and the beautiful Swannanoa. Sir, should these streams be improved, as they should be, from pit to dome, from Alpha to Omega, from top to bottom, from center to circumference, from stem to stern, I dare say, sir, that a great and untold amount of commerce would flow from the topmost mountains of the great Blue Ridge Range gradually down into the sea.

Sir, if these rivers should be improved and the great and untold products in the Blue Ridge Mountains should be gathered, I can see now in my mind's eye many thousands and tens of thousands of pickaninnies gathered up from all over the Mississippi Valley and brought there in double-decked cars; see them detrain with glistening eye, with rubbering necks, with teeth a-grinning, with stomachs distending, and navels protruding, to gather the plentitude of wealth that grows spontaneously and indigenously on the tops of the Blue Ridge Mountains. [Laughter.]

What, sir, are some of these great inexhaustible products? I have just had occasion to look up the census returns, and these are the principal ones, namely, the pomegranate, the chinkapin, the hazelnut, the possum grape, the touch-me-not, the squirrel's bark, the owl's hoot, and the wolf's howl; and last, but not least, sir, in great commercial quantities can be found the panacea to heal the ills with which all mankind is afflicted. Shall I call the name? It is owl grease. [Laughter.] I am told, sir, that owl grease is almost as plentiful as radium. And I am reliably informed by my good friend, Dr. FOSTER, that the total of all the radium in the world does not exceed two ounces and a half, as far as the estimates have gone. [Laughter.] But, sir, of owl's grease, I am reliably informed, there is almost half that much, and most of it can be found in the Blue Ridge Mountains, whence rise the Swannanoa and the French Broad Rivers.

Sir, if the gentleman representing that State upon this committee had been less practical and more poetic, he would have arisen in his place upon the floor and said: "Mr. Chairman, we have unintentionally overlooked two of the greatest and most important streams in my State, the French Broad and the Swannanoa." And then, sir, he would have dropped into poetry like this:

Swannanoa, nymph of beauty, I would woo thee with my rhyme.

And, instanter, every man on the floor of this House would have risen, each vying with the other, Mr. Chairman, to move to amend the amendment by giving each river not $2,000, but $500,000, that these majestic rivers might be improved, sir, from beginning to end and that the inexhaustible resources of the mountain tops might be gathered and at once be made available for the world's commerce. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Those products, sir, immeasurable in quantity——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not continue without receiving an allotment of time.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN] have three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can make that motion, but he can not have five more minutes. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his pro forma amendment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to speak in opposition to the amendment, which I understood was not pro forma. It was very substantial.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] is recognized.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I hate to say a few words which may come as an anticlimax to the very entertaining digression to which we have just listened. It so happens I know something about the Land of the Sky in North Carolina, and that I am familiar with the region traversed by the French Broad and the Swannanoa Rivers. I hate to take away from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN] claim for originality of the suggestions that he has made, but it must be done.

My family have a summer home at a place called Skyland, N. C., within a short distance of Asheville and a few miles from both the French Broad and the Swannanoa. One summer, some years ago, a congressional campaign was on, and a meeting was held at Skyland, and long before I ever dreamed that I would be honored with membership in this body I attended that meeting and heard a gentleman who was elected to Congress—though he is not a member of the present Congress—and who was a candidate at that time, tell his constituents that if they sent him to Washington he would see to it that both the French Broad and the Swannanoa were made navigable. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Does not the gentleman think that if those two rivers were made navigable, these products, immeasurable as they are in quantity, indifferent in quality, and absolutely as valueless commercially as the activities of the members of this committee in procuring huge appropriations for their districts and States become invaluable for their own political longevity? [Laughter.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. I can not answer that question, Mr. Chairman; but I would say that it seems to me that the gentleman overlooked the possibilities of transporting a very important product of North Carolina, namely, "moonshine." [Applause and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, what was the last provision that the Clerk read? I think the last was the item before Winyah Bay.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that was the last.

Mr. FREAR. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out lines 9 and 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph..

The Clerk read as follows:

Winyah Bay, S. C.: For maintenance, $50,000.

Mr. FREAR. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, by striking out lines 9 and 10.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer this with some regret, and I do it in order to "play no favorites," to use a current expression. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], a member of the committee, has kindly and considerately taken all the criticisms, which of course are not to be lodged against him. We pass from that and we approach another State and another gentleman who is equally agreeable; and it is a matter of regret if he thinks this is a matter for him to defend. I believe the committee is properly in a position to defend the item.

I merely wish to read what the engineers' report shows. It shows that Winyah Bay has already had $2,980,664, including the jetty, according to the report I have, and there was available on June 30 last, or on October 14 last, $82,715 for this project. The only point to which I wish to call attention particularly is the engineer's statement that the precise percentage of reduction of rate does not appear to be susceptible of determination. That meets in a way the claim that these improvements are used for the purpose and having the effect of reducing freight rates.

There is quite an appreciable commerce at this point. It reached, in 1913, 211,000 tons, of which 177,000, or nearly three-fourths, was timber and crossties. But the point which interests me more particularly—and I think should interest the committee in finding out what we have received from this large appropriation—is the fact that in 1912 the commerce was 309,673 tons, and that there has been a loss during the year of over 30 per cent in the commerce. The 13 miles have cost us $200,000 a mile on an average; and while this may be a project which has merit in it, I believe we ought to save money wherever we can do so. For that reason I have made the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flint River, Ga.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $50,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 1 and 2 of page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, strike out lines 1 and 2.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the Government has appropriated for this project $381,500, according to the engineer's report. The amount available in October, 1914, after the allotment was $18,037.

The report states that between Albany and Montezuma, 77 miles, the ruling depth is 2½ feet, much obstructed, although repeatedly cleaned of snags. The commerce is 33,594 tons, and the average haul 35 miles. I call attention particularly to the average haul, because we are improving this stream 105 miles. The average haul is one-third of the distance. That includes 6,234 tons of timber. The project is 92 per cent completed. We have been 34 years upon that project, and the engineer states in his report that the effect on freight rates can not be determined.

In view of the comparatively small commerce upon this stream, and in view of the fact that there is a reasonable amount of money on hand with which to meet any pressing emergency, I believe that it is inadvisable at this time to appropriate $50,000 additional, and for that reason I move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coosa River, Ga. and Ala.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance between Rome, Ga., and Dam No. 4, Ala., $75,000; completing construction of the lock in Dam No. 4 and completing construction of Dam No. 5, in the State of Alabama, $56,000; in all, $131,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, strike out lines 14 to 19, inclusive.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is one of the most inexcusable items in the bill, so far as my investigation has gone. The Government has appropriated thus far $1,982,583 upon the Coosa River. In October, 1914, there was on hand for further use $170,058. This appropriation calls for $131,000.

At this point I want to read a letter in reference to the Coosa River, which, by the way, is a project that has been running for 38 years, since 1876. At the present rate of progress in the construction of it it will take between 100 and 200 years to complete it. Here is a letter that I have received from Montgomery, Ala., in which the gentleman says:

I noticed in a Birmingham paper several days ago where you had opposed the appropriation of the Muscle Shoals project of the Alabama Power Co., and that you intended to fight this to the end. I appreciated reading this very much and to know that there was at least one in Congress that would help us out down here.

The Alabama Power Co. built a dam on the Coosa River up in Chilton County of this State, and they were going to give everybody cheap electricity and they claimed it would do great things for the surrounding country. Well, it did great things all right; they made hundreds of people leave their homes, and caused great numbers to die with chills and malarial fever. They have ruined the country for 2 or 3 miles.

I will leave out the next paragraph.

The Alabama Power Co. is now furnishing Birmingham with electricity from this dam on Coosa River, and the rates are the same in Birmingham as they have always been. This Alabama Power Co. and their branch companies are trying their best to get a monopoly on the water power of this State and every other State that they can. This Alabama Power Co. has numbers of attorneys and men employed all over this State, and they are the ones that write the beautiful pieces in the papers about the great things this development of Muscle Shoals will do for Alabama.

I can get a petition, signed by thousands of men in Alabama, condemning this project, and these some of the best business men of the State. There have been filed in the courts of Chilton County some two hundred cases for damages on account of sickness caused from this dam on the Coosa River, and there are something more than 200 filed in Shelby County and about 200 in Coosa County, and some in Talladega County. These are the four counties which border on this pond of polluted water. Practically every man in these four counties of this State will sign petitions condemning the power companies' monopoly on the death devices they have caused.

I do not care to read the rest of this letter. It is signed by J. B. Benson.

The engineer's report shows that the commerce on this stream last year was 46,339 tons, or a loss of 6,000 tons during the year. Of this commerce stone, sand, and gravel amounted to 20,876 tons, or 46 per cent. That was presumably used in the construction work, although I have no information on that except the suggestion that comes to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor at Fernandina, Fla.: For maintenance, including the entrance channel through Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida, $40,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] for a moment. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman and the committee to the fact that we have been in session since 12 o'clock noon, and that during that time we have read less than 10 pages of the bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], and I am not criticizing him but saying it in good faith, in the paragraph that he has just read stated that it was one of the worst projects in the bill. He debated it and presented his views, and the result was that no one took that view of it. Now, in view of that fact and the condition of business, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not, on most of the projects, if he wants to make a record, take leave to extend his remarks, and let us, in the next 20 minutes which remain, have a little reading of the bill. I think we have been courteous to him and he has been courteous to the House, but it is perfectly evident that it does no good, and is simply killing time. I ask that because I know the other Members of the committee feel the same way I do.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the gentleman from Washington has said, and I desire to say this: I have made an investigation of the bill honestly, and with an effort to arrive at the facts. The last project, which I stated was one of the worst, was discussed at the other end of the Capitol and the facts shown so strongly that it seemed to me that it called for the statement I made.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is the reason I made the statement. The gentleman said that this was one of the worst items in his view of the bill and he saw the result of the vote on it. Therefore I thought it would be a good opportunity to appeal to him not to consume time on all the paragraphs if this was a typical case. I made the appeal in view of the fact that we have consumed an entire day with reading but little of the bill.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to say that I have passed over a number of projects that were typical of others. At the last hearing of the bill, after we had finished the debate, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], who is an extremely courteous gentleman and was very kind throughout the discussion, called attention to the fact that I had only criticized several streams. Now, I am prepared to leave it to the country to judge of the facts in regard to the various projects. I want to say that I have not taken five minutes in each case.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I merely suggested that if the gentleman wanted to make a record, and no one wants to prevent him from doing it, that he should not debate a good many items, but extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FREAR. I am doing pretty nearly that, for I do not average more than two or three minutes on an item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Lucie Inlet, Fla.: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, strike out lines 23 and 24.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, yesterday during the general debate I took occasion to criticize the item which has just been read, and in answering me the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] mixed me up in some way with a newspaper story, and either the newspaper writer or I, and probably both, in his opinion, were worthy of membership in the Ananias Club. His remarks appear on page 1583 of the RECORD. That is not a particularly honorable post, Mr. Chairman, to hold, and I prefer not to be rated in that class. He said in reference to me, "I do not know where he got his information, but if he refers to the item to belittle that inlet his information is as correct as the other statements," referring to the newspaper story.

I want to inform the gentleman from Florida that the information I supplied to the House in relation to St. Lucie Inlet was taken from the report of the engineer verbatim, which appears on page 1578 of my remarks and also on pages 598 and 599 of the engineer's report.

I do not want any better condemnation of the St. Lucie Inlet project, so dear to the heart of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], than the words of the engineer, and I refer him, and I refer the members of the committee, to the report of the engineers, on pages 598 and 599, for a description of the St. Lucie Inlet.

Mr. MADDEN. Read it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only five minutes. I will refer to it again, perhaps. Further than that, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman sees fit to quote from a report made in House Document No. 1312, Sixtieth Congress, second session, telling about all the freight that would be handled out of the St. Lucie Inlet when the Government expends anywhere from $900,000 to an indefinite amount upon the improvement of that artificial inlet. The gentleman took particular pains not to refer to a more recent report than that, both from the engineers, from the Chief of the War Department, and the various officials connected with this project. What he was advocating was the report from the engineers that has never been adopted by Congress, because it says so in so many words in the document No. 675, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and I read from that report:

None of the projects nor estimates above reported have so far been adopted by Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield. I am an Annanias Club man and I do not want to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to get the page.

Mr. TREADWAY. Page 2 of the War Department, office of the Chief of Engineers, and I quote the sentence, and I will read it again for the benefit of the gentleman:

None of the projects nor estimates above reported have so far been adopted by Congress.

And it was about these reports that the gentleman from Florida, who wanted to know where I got my information, was reading for the benefit of the House, when he said that I was a candidate for the Annanias Club. Let me read a little more from that same report. Here is what Gen. Bixby, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, says:

In view of the possibility of securing a cut of 18 feet across the bar at much reduced cost by a suitable dredging plant, using explosives only where actually necessary—

And I do not know why they were afraid of explosives, unless they were afraid of finding some water there—and of the possibilities that such cut, even if of reduced width, may produce decided changes in the adjoining channels——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, to continue—it is considered worth while to experiment on this bar to the extent of about $300,000.

Mr. Chairman, I for one am not prepared to vote the money of the Government for experiments on an artificially made channel in a district of the gentleman from Florida, who so earnestly advocated this proposition yesterday. Let me read a few more extracts, because he wanted to know where I got my information. I told him where I got my information that was in the RECORD yesterday, and I am telling him where I am now getting this information. Here is a statement from Col. Russell:

In the opinion of the board the project contemplated, if carried out, would be but a makeshift, and would at once be found inadequate to meet the needs of navigation—

And so forth.

Then, again, the officer stationed at Jacksonville has some extremely interesting statements to make. He says:

Most of the east coast of Florida labors under the same difficulties as to transportation as the country in the vicinity of St. Lucie Inlet. Adequate harbors are desired at a number of other points. If such improvements would relieve the situation, the commerce to be benefited would warrant their undertaking, but it is reasonably certain that that would not afford relief, because, in order to carry this produce by water, frequent and regular calls by ships would be necessary, as the produce is perishable and can not be allowed to accumulate, but must be shipped promptly after it is gathered, and seagoing ships would not be warranted in stopping for the small amount of freight that would thus be offered.

He winds up by saying:

I am therefore of the opinion that St. Lucie Inlet is not worthy of improvement.

Very respectfully,

J. T. SLATTERY,
Captain of the Corps of Engineers, Stationed at Jacksonville.

I desire particularly, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this item for which we are now, in a condition of a depleted Treasury in this country, asked to appropriate $100,000 was not carried in the bill passed by the House in 1914—the last year's bill. It was carried in the bill approved March 4, 1913, and read as follows:

Improving St. Lucie Inlet, Fla., in accordance with the smaller project—

Note that word, please—

the smaller project recommended by the Chief of Engineers—

In the report to which I have referred—

$100,000.

In other words, all that is before this House is the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers that we should appropriate $300,000 to experiment in St. Lucie Inlet and see what can come of it, in order that later they can then go to work and spend anywhere from $900,000 to an indefinite sum.

Mr. FREAR. How much has been spent on it?

Mr. TREADWAY. Seventy-two dollars so far has been spent. I maintain that it is time to call a halt on St. Lucie Inlet, and I further submit that this is a good time to begin, right now. I realize this House to-night is in a condition that it desires to continue the reading of this bill, but I called your attention to an item that, in my opinion, is of sufficient weight, even if it does not involve a whole lot of money, comparatively speaking—$100,000—as against millions going into this bill—not a great deal of money, but it involves a principle which I for one feel we must condemn here and now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word or two. The gentleman reads from Document No. 675, which was the document upon which the committee acted when they adopted this report. The gentleman is unfair, because he reads from the report of Gen. Bixby, who was at that time Chief of Engineers, on page 2 of this report this language:

None of the projects or estimates above reported have been so far adopted by Congress.

And there he stopped. Why did not the gentleman go on, and show the final summing up of Gen. Bixby, who, after considering everything, all the reports, all the facts, everything in connection with it, his final summing up was this, and I call attention to it:

I have therefore, in carrying out the instructions of Congress—

And so forth.

Then he goes on with the summing up, all of which I will not take time to read, but he speaks of the different reports and different recommendations, and then he says:

But that an immediate expenditure of about $300,000 in excavating a cut of 18 feet center depth across the obstructing rock and the ocean bar is now advisable as a preliminary step to securing later the full project channel of 18 feet depth, over at least 200 feet width, from the ocean to Sewalls Point, as described in House Document No. 1312, Sixtieth Congress, second session.

And that is what he recommended.

Mr. TREADWAY. At the cost of what? Finish it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. "At a cost possibly much less than the original estimate of $1,460,000."

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it worth it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is worth it if human life is worth anything, if property is worth anything, if the relief of hundreds of thousands of people against oppressive freight rates and monopoly of railroad rates is worth anything; yes, it is worth it; it is worth more than that. [Applause.] I did not charge the gentleman with being a member of the Ananias club, but I do say this, that any gentleman upon this floor who stating only a portion of the facts withholds the sum total of it all is not treating the House fairly, to say the least of it. I state, Mr. Chairman, that every engineer—Capt. Slattery opposed the 12-foot project. For what reason? If the gentleman will read the report he will find out, because in the opinion of Capt. Slattery 12 feet would not answer the purposes of the harbor. He insisted that there should be a greater project, an 18-foot project over that bar, and I assert without fear of successful contradiction that every engineer, the Board of Engineers, after making a visit to the premises, the Chief of Engineers, every one of them has said that the harbor ought to be built at that place, and that the inlet was worthy of improvement.

Not only does commerce present and prospective justify it, but the additional reason, a harbor of refuge, was sufficient for them to recommend it. Here is a coast, and a treacherous coast, of about 600 miles, and not a single opening along all that stretch in which a vessel drawing 10 to 12 feet of water can go out of a storm. And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts opposes it because sometime in the dim, distant past he has fished on Indian River and tasted Indian River oranges. The Indian River is a shallow stream. The St. Lucie River is a deep and bold stream, penetrating some of the best lands of the whole State.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take any more time of the committee. This is a project that is deserving.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question was taken and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The Committee divided.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to withdraw the point of no quorum until the decision on this question is made, and then I will make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me on this important item we should have a quorum.

Mr. MANN. There is a quorum here.

Mr. NORTON. Well, I make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 16, the noes 55, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five gentlemen are present, a quorum.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor at Miami (Biscayne Bay), Fla.: Continuing improvement, $50,000: Provided, That no work shall be done by the United States on said project until the Secretary of War is satisfied that suitable terminal facilities will be provided as contemplated by paragraph 8 of the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, as set forth on page 15 of House Document No. 554, Sixty-second Congress, second session: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as relieving the said Florida East Coast Railway Co. from the obligation of complying with the terms of its contract heretofore entered into with the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 14 and 15: Strike out the entire paragraph beginning with line 25, on page 14.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will not take more than just a moment of the time of the committee to call attention to the fact that there never has been any harbor in Miami—Biscayne Bay—Fla., and there probably never will be. The arrangement to provide harbor facilities at Miami was the result of an effort of the Florida East Coast Railway, that tried to secure a sufficient depth from Miami to reach the ocean and run a line of steamers over to Habana. I had the pleasure of lying in Miami Harbor for two or three days waiting for a shallow-draft boat to be able to go over the bar, and in all probability there is not any more depth of water there now than there was then. Further than that, this demand on the part of the Florida East Coast Railway for navigable opportunity in Miami has entirely disappeared, from the fact that the railroad has now been extended down to Key West, and there is a short railway running out over the keys to Key West and a short boat line from Key West to Habana. Consequently Miami is now a resort solely, a delightful place to visit at this time of year; but that is all there is of it, aside from the fact that it is getting a little additional notoriety now, in that our honored Secretary of State has a winter home there. There is not a very large amount of free grape juice that I know of floating around over the waters of Miami Bay, but I have no doubt it would float just as big a vessel as will the water there. So the need for the project that we are contemplating here has gone by. We are simply throwing $50,000 into the district of the genial gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], who has so ably defended the St. Lucie Inlet.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, there is a regular line of steamers running into Miami now. There are other vessels that run in there, too. The commerce of the port is 123,000 tons, I believe, and of $3,000,000 in value. The Government is under a contract with the East Coast Railroad Co. to do certain work, and the East Coast Railroad Co. is to do certain other work. That company has not done the work, and now it is a question of whether Congress is to relieve the East Coast Railway Co. from doing it and leave those people without proper harbor facilities or not. Miami is a city of about 20,000 people, one of the most progressive, wideawake cities in this country, and I want to call attention just a moment to the report of the Chief of Engineers, which says:

The city of Miami decided, at an election held on May 12, 1914, to issue bonds to the amount of $185,000 for the purpose of acquiring suitable terminal facilities to comply with the requirements of the act of Congress approved July 25, 1912.

Does the gentleman desire Congress to break faith with the people of Miami who in good faith are meeting the congressional requirement as to terminals, or does he desire to save the railroad from its contract to expend approximately one-half million dollars in improving this harbor? To strike out this item would accomplish both these things.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tampa Bay, Fla.: For maintenance, $9,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word; and this time, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] objects.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FREAR. I want to discuss this project.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman want to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD instead of uttering them now?

Mr. FREAR. I wanted to extend the remarks that I am going to make on the floor and on the bill generally.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the gentleman extends his remarks in the RECORD they will go in the back of the RECORD, apart from the bill we are considering. I believe differently from what the committee thinks. I want the country to know about this by seeing the RECORD, and by seeing the discussion right along with it. But I will withdraw my objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin should be given ample time in which to make any statement he desires. He has certainly not taken up as much of the time of the House as has the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the gentleman from Wisconsin should not be bluffed or browbeaten out of any time he desires.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not take that view.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to be as expeditious and as fair as I could to-night. I have sat here for over 10 hours continuously, it is now nearly 10.30, in an effort to give to the committee what information I have been able to get out of these engineers' reports. Members of the committee have told me heretofore that there are many things that have been inserted in bills that they were unaware of. For days we have been discussing other bills and propositions here, some of which are of no material importance to the people of this country.

As I said awhile ago, we discussed for weeks a printing bill, in an effort to save $750,000 to the people of the country—and that is presumably a good thing—and when we got on this bill yesterday, for the first time, a great part of the time in general debate was taken up with politics by gentlemen who now insist that we sit here over 10 hours consecutively. With $34,000,000 at stake and 250 items, they say we shall sit here 10 hours and over. We have been right here, and we will stay. On objection I am not to have the usual courtesy of extending my remarks in the RECORD. I do not believe——

Mr. DRISCOLL. No one objected.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] objected.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Oh, no.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman extending his remarks on items on which he made statements.

Mr. FREAR. There are some things I really want passed, without taking up the committee's time.

Mr. NORTON. I did not object to the gentleman extending his remarks.

Mr. FREAR. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. I renew my request, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks on the various items in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on various items in the bill. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment, striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Hillsboro Bay, Fla.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $120,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to strike out this paragraph, covering lines 14 and 15 on page 15, for Hillsboro Bay, Fla.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, strike out lines 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have withdrawn my pro forma motion, originally made, which was to strike out the last word. Now I wish to strike out the last paragraph read, and I desire to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I was not aware until a day or two ago that this item related to the chairman of the committee [Mr. SPARKMAN]. I will say that it is quite a harbor, but I wish to present some facts in connection with it that may be of interest to the committee, in view of the large appropriation that is called for, namely, $120,000.

The total appropriations that have been made for Hillsboro Bay amount to $2,089,944. There was available July 1, 1914, $494,406, almost half a million dollars. In the bill before us is a proposal to increase by $120,000 the amount that shall be used.

This is an arm of Tampa Bay, 9 miles long. The project began in 1880, at 8 feet. In 1899 it was increased to 12 feet. In 1905 it was increased to 20 feet. In 1910 it was increased to 24 feet. In 1915 it may be still further increased, because it is not unlike other projects. They all begin in the same way. Every river that we have starts in the same way. Every harbor we have is in the same position. They start in a small way, at a small depth, and every foot added to depth later on increases geometrically in cost, because of the difficulty in digging at a great depth.

This project is subject to conditions. The city is obliged to construct a public wharf. I want to refer to one more thing, briefly, that the chairman of the committee discussed when this matter was under general debate. He said, "In order to show the uncertainty of engineers' reports on commerce, that in a case like this they failed to get the actual amount of commerce." I do not question the statement.

The engineer's report of the commerce for the year 1913 showed an apparent decrease of 33.4 per cent from 1912. There is quite a large commerce at that point. But while it is true, Mr. Chairman, that the engineer may have failed to get the full amount of commerce in 1913, it is probably equally true that he failed to get the full commerce in 1912 and in 1911. He has only limited means at hand, but from the investigation the engineer made—and surely the figures are favorable; we would not question the engineer's report in that particular—there has been a loss in one year of 33 per cent in traffic in this harbor. Last July there was available nearly half a million dollars, in round numbers. It occurs to me that if we want to save money in this bill it is wise to strike out this item for the present and try to get along without the additional $120,000.

I realize that it is very hard to get favorable action on a proposition to strike out anything in this bill. As the gentleman from Illinois well said last year—and I was rather surprised at it, but I have discovered the truth—no item that is put in this bill by the committee will be stricken out, and no item that is out can be put in. Consequently the committee are supreme in matters of this kind. But I assure you, gentlemen, it is a very dangerous position to occupy, to have to decide upon all these projects. It is a very difficult duty to perform.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the gentleman to say that there had been $3,000,000 spent on this proposition?

Mr. FREAR. Two million and eighty-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. DONOVAN. At a place where the commerce is diminishing all the while at the rate of 33 per cent a year?

Mr. FREAR. Last year's report, of a 33 per cent loss, is the only one I have. There is still a large commerce there.

Mr. DONOVAN. When it was at its maximum what was the amount of the commerce?

Mr. FREAR. I have not the figures on that. It amounted last year to over a million tons, or more than that. In any event, it is quite a large commerce.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Over 2,000,000 tons.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There was $37,000,000 worth of commerce last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Apalachicola Bay, Fla.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, including Link Channel and West Pass, $15,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of inquiring how much longer the gentleman from Florida intends to run. It is now 20 minutes after 10 o'clock, and there is no quorum present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If we can, I would like to finish the Florida items.

Mr. STAFFORD. At what time will the gentleman be willing to move that the committee rise? I am told by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] that there are 30 Florida items. I think he is speaking in hyperbole, but I suppose there are quite a number.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to go on until we get through with them, or until 11 o'clock, if I can.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of no quorum present, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members present, a quorum.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were 8 ayes and 72 noes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present. The announcement discloses that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair just counted the House, and there were 101 Members present.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Chair declare, in the face of the announcement that he has just made, that there is a quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that 8 voted aye and 72 voted no, and the Chair saw a great man Members that did not vote at all. The Chair just counted, and there were 101 Members present.

Mr. MADDEN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I submit that it is not the province of the Chair, no matter who, to say that there is a quorum present when he has just announced a vote which discloses that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count the committee again.

Mr. DIES. I make the point of order that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will overrule the point of order and count the committee again. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for tellers.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Andrews Bay, Fla.: For maintenance, $30,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 21—the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 21, strike out all of the line.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated $239,560 for this project. There was on hand October, 1914, $36,000, and $30,000 is proposed in this bill. The engineer recommended $60,000. The engineers' report says the completion of the project will serve to test the commercial value of the harbor. I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] to the language of the engineers' report that the completion of the project will serve to test the commercial value of the harbor.

The commerce on this stream, which apparently is intended for a sawmill, amounts to 116,622 tons. Timber is 102,557 tons, leaving 14,065 tons, which was presumably the material taken to the sawmill for the benefit of those taking it, and the haul was 11 miles.

The commerce in 1912 was $76,562, showing an increase; but after deducting the timber it practically amounted to the same amount, $12,844.

Mr. BRYAN. Was that timber brought down in logs or on a steamer?

Mr. FREAR. Logs and timber. My memorandum does not show which, but the point in question is covered by this statement that the haul is only 11 miles. It is a short haul. The project is for deepening the channel. We spent $239,560. I appreciate that there is not much chance to get this stricken out. It may do no good, but let me say that I believe it is a duty I owe to the House to place before the committee such projects as these and to move to strike them out, leaving the responsibility with you.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I want to take a moment. I am as fond of a sincere and earnest discussion of these matters as any gentleman on this floor, but when the gentleman rises in his place, as he did a moment ago, and opposes an item contained in lines 14 and 15 for $120,000 for continuing and improving the maintenance of a harbor which he says carries over $2,000,000 of commerce——

Mr. FREAR. But there is a half a million dollars ready to be used.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the gentleman. Sixty-seven and six tenths per cent of all of the appropriations made by this Congress go to purposes of war, past and present, and if we are to spend almost a billion dollars for pensions and war preparations, does not the gentleman think that we will need some ports to carry commerce to enable the people of this Republic to pay the tremendous pensions and build the warships and support an army in this country? [Applause.] I am tired of this and of those who want to pare the river and harbor bill, that carries appropriations for the commerce of the country and the maintaining of the taxes and of the people that pay the taxes of this country. I do not doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman can pick some flaws in the bill. There never was a bill introduced in Congress that you could not criticize; but I do lay down the proposition, and I go to the length of my sincerity upon the proposition, that $120,000 for continuing improvement and for the maintenance of a project that carries 2,000,000 tons of commerce is a captious objection, and we ought to stay here until midnight or the wee small hours of the morning to see that no such captious objections shall interfere with the progress of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 5, noes 83.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Chair to call for those present and not voting. I was one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-nine gentlemen present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FOSTER] having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called; that 134 Members answered to their names, and he reported herewith the list of absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPARKMAN and Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House again divided, and there were—ayes 72, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, January 16, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] are unavoidably detained on business of importance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4899) to fix the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6060. An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States; and

H. J. Res. 234. Joint resolution directing the selection of a site for the erection of a statue in Washington, D. C., to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is one which has an aspect to it wholly disassociated from the question of the proposed amendment. It is a new question in the Senate of the United States. It may arise again. If there is no objection, the Chair would like to read into the RECORD, not for the purpose of controlling the conduct of Senators nor for the purpose of influencing the vote but as a matter of information, if the question should ever arise again and this RECORD is looked up, that Senators may have all the light and information on the subject, an excerpt from a new work on parliamentary law prepared by Thomas B. Neely, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. If there is no objection, the Chair would like to put it in simply as a matter of information for the future use of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Would the Chair object to the Secretary reading it at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is simply asking permission of the Senate to have what Mr. Neely says upon the question of the suspension of the rules put in the RECORD, not for the purpose of controlling this question but that if it arises in the future Senators may have the document at hand to discuss the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Secretary read it, if the Chair does not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wanted to read it, if there was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was just going to supplement the suggestion of the Senator from Utah by saying that it might well be read to us in the consideration of the particular matter now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will read it. There has just been issued a work by Bishop Thomas B. Neely, of the Methodist Episcopal Church——

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not mean to suggest that the Chair read it, but that the Secretary read it. Of course the Chair can read it, if he likes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair prides himself on his reading qualities.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know the Chair is a good reader.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is what the author has to say on the suspension of the rules:

> Sometimes the regular rules of the body interfere with the transaction of business desired by the House at a particular moment, and the House invokes a method of temporarily suspending the force of a particular rule until the matter in question is presented, considered, and acted upon. Then the rule immediately comes into force again.
>
> The difficulty is met by moving the suspension of the obstructing rule. This is done by a Member securing the floor and saying, "I move to suspend the rule (or rules)," specifying the rule or rules intended, or by saying, "I move the rule (or rules) be suspended."
>
> The motion can not be debated, and can not be amended or have any subsidiary motion applied to it. For example, it can not be laid on the table or postponed indefinitely. A vote on the motion can not be reconsidered. In Congress a motion to suspend the rules for the same purpose can not be renewed the same day; in ordinary societies it may be renewed after an adjournment, though the next meeting be held the same day. It is not in order when the body is acting under a suspension of the rules. Neither is it while the previous question is operating. Deliberative bodies usually state in their code of rules what vote is necessary to suspend the rules, and provide that it shall exceed a mere majority; for example, that it shall be two-thirds or three-fourths. The common usage is to require a two-thirds vote.
> The rule in the United States House of Representatives is that "No rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the Members voting, a quorum being present."
>
> Some have held that unless the rules of the body provide for their own suspension they can not be suspended unless by general or unanimous consent, but the common practice is to permit the suspension of a rule by a two-thirds vote.
> Good judgment should be used in introducing the motion to suspend, for its too frequent use tends to the destruction of the binding force of the rules. If the rules are suspended on any or every pretext, they practically cease to be rules.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I think it is proper to call attention to the fact that the author does not state the entire condition in the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will understand that the Chair is not taking any part in the discussion nor trying to influence the vote or to make an argument; but this being a new work on parliamentary law, he is simply putting it into the RECORD, so that hereafter Senators may know where to find it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that. I wanted to call attention to the fact that in the House of Representatives——

Mr. JAMES. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas has the right to proceed, in view of what the Chair did.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Kentucky is pursuing the same revolutionary tactics that have characterized his side of this matter all the way through.

Mr. JAMES. I am pursuing no revolutionary tactics at all. I call for the regular order, which I have always understood under the rules of the Senate is perfectly legitimate. I do not think the Senator from Texas ought to be quite so touchy when the rules are invoked.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; but the Senator does not show a spirit of fair play; that is what I intended to say.

Mr. JAMES. I am showing a public spirit of fair play, because I want to go to a discussion of the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A matter has been introduced here which purports to sustain one side of a question before this body, and it is not fair play to deny me the privilege of answering. I have a right——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. Language of that kind can not be permitted in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, what language?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Senator can not impugn the motives of another Senator. It is an absolute violation of the rules of the Senate. This is not a question to get mad about, but it should be considered in good humor. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There has been no language used on my part——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question, of course, is the question to agree to the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I rose——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas has a perfect right to proceed and say what he wants to say.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have not questioned the motive of any Senator. I have intended to exhibit no anger. There was placed in the RECORD here a statement from an authority on parliamentary law to the effect that in the House of Representatives the suspension of the rules requires a two-thirds vote. That is only partially true. The Committee on Rules in the House of Representatives may bring in a report suspending any rule, and it requires only a majority vote to adopt the report of the Committee on Rules.

I had no intention whatever of displaying any feeling in this matter. I have the highest respect and the kindest feeling for every Senator on this floor.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator from Texas will permit me, I wish to suggest that the rule of the House of Representatives referred to is not a rule based on common practice, but upon an express rule of the House adopted by the House itself.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, it seems to me that this question has already been settled by the Senate of the United States upon a roll call. It is now of record; and the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Washington entirely overlook the strong statement in this book upon parliamentary law, which is that it takes in legislative bodies usually two-thirds to suspend the rules. That is the common practice, and that is what this author on parliamentary law says.

Whatever may have been his opinion or the opinion of any other writer on parliamentary law, the Senate itself has already determined that question. I do not see any necessity for anyone to get mad about it or to get mad because something is submitted to the Senate that goes to show the wisdom of the Senate in its former action.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, addressing myself to the motion before the Senate, I desire simply to say that we are getting a good deal of instruction on parliamentary law during this debate. A few days ago a Member of this body read into the RECORD the views of the author of a book called Robert's Rules of Order, which book is usually employed in debating societies, in women's clubs, in our public schools, and in some religious gatherings. It is not recognized as an authority at all on parliamentary law anywhere on earth. Now a bishop has given us some instruction about this matter, and he has not seemed to address himself to the rules of the Senate, but, rather, to the rules of the House of Representatives. It occurs to me that we are capable of making our own rules which are designed to govern this body.

In common with every other Senator I yield to the decision of the Senate made the other day, although it was in direct contravention to the rule that is written in our code, which does not require a two-thirds vote or a three-fourths vote, but simply states that the rules can be suspended upon motion if a certain procedure is adopted. But the Senate has decided the matter, and of course we are bound to obey the mandate of the Senate. However, I do not think we will get much enlightenment from reading into the RECORD the opinion of outside parties, who presumably know less about our rules than we do ourselves.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from New Hampshire objects, the Chair will strike it out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object at all, Mr. President. On the contrary, I am very glad to have it go into the RECORD for what it is worth.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to have it appear in the RECORD that while the Senate did determine this question and therefore it will require now by that determination of the Senate a two-thirds vote, at the same time it should be also remembered and observed that the Senate's mandate on this question fixing a two-thirds vote in this instance was a majority vote of the Senate, a majority vote which could now be reconsidered if the Senate chose to do so and by a majority vote revoke the two-thirds rule required in this instance. Therefore the rule of the Senate, in fact, is a majority rule, after all.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, on yesterday I called attention to some errors in certain statistics; but I find that the Reporter has left out a couple of words which change the meaning of what I said. I was calling attention to the fact that one of the large Government penal institutions is located in Kansas and that citizens from other States are confined there temporarily and perhaps counted in as a part of the criminal population of Kansas. I said there were perhaps some from Nebraska, also some that had gone from other States of the Union, and some from Oregon, a fact which I knew, for the reason that I had been interested in times past in getting them released from there. The Reporter made it read that I had been interested in getting some of the citizens of Oregon incarcerated therein. I should not like to have that statement go back home, for I did not make it and it is contrary to the facts.

I wish to say something along the line which was suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] yesterday, but from a little different angle, upon the proposition of prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Capital City of the Nation, or anywhere else for that matter. The Senator was quite right and he spoke the truth when he said that the use of alcohol never benefited anyone. It never did, and it never will. I have come to that conclusion quite independently of any personal predilections on the subject. It has been forced upon me in the practice of my profession that alcohol has no food value whatever and also that it has no value as a remedy for disease. It is not a good stimulant, and about the only thing that alcohol is good for is to get drunk on. I guess that has been proven by the experience of mankind from the earliest times, and that is the principal reason, if any does exist, for its use as a beverage. It has the faculty of lowering the physical vitality, and, for that matter, the mental and moral tone of any and all persons who use it. It does so inevitably. There is no man with a constitution strong enough or with nerves hardy enough to resist its action. There never was one and there never will be. That has been tested and found out in all countries where men are compelled to place great strains upon their physical endurance.

In the interior of Alaska where the temperature goes down to 50 or 60 degrees below zero, and 70 and 80 degrees below zero, for that matter—though that is not so common—they do not allow anyone going out upon a long trip upon the trail to take liquor of any kind with him. If a man is met with upon the trail with whisky, or if it is ascertained that he has whisky with him, it is taken away from him and the bottles are broken. They do not do that out of any feeling of kindliness for him particularly, but they have found, and from experience, that it is necessary to do so, for the reason that under the influence of whisky a person loses his finer sensibilities, and his feelings become benumbed, and such a man on the trail will take chances which he otherwise would not take. If his feet or his hands become frozen, the whole expedition is tied up in taking care of him. It may be that the lives of others are risked and even lost through the fact that they have to stop somewhere on the trail without proper food supplies to care for this person who has foolishly allowed himself to become a derelict upon their hands. So they go right through his pack, and if he has whisky or alcohol, they take it away from him and break the bottle. For his sake and for their own protection it is necessary to do this act of prohibition. So it has been well proven that it is not safe for a man to undertake the hardships or the great strains which are placed upon him in that climate if he uses liquor while doing so.

In hot climates it is the same. Stanley would not permit anyone to go with him upon his expeditions through Africa who used either liquor or tobacco in any form. He found such men were not able to keep up with the expedition; that they hampered it. That is the truth of it. There is no prize fighter, a man who has to exert every ounce of his strength in his contest, who dares to drink liquor during his training period, or can afford to do so, or, if he is in the habit of doing so, he soon loses out. It is the same way with foot racers or any athletes upon whom a strain or test is put. I think there can be no question about these statements. Alcohol does no good; it is of absolutely no use on earth so far as that use is a beneficial one to mankind as a beverage, and it has no just claim upon anyone.

One Senator said yesterday that he had a great deal of respect for alcohol, for the reason that out of wheat and corn and rye and grapes, those very necessary products of the earth, which are beneficial to mankind, you could stew and brew whiskies and wines. That is true; so you can. I was going to say—I did not like to interrupt him at the time—that you can make a stronger drink, one that will make the drunk come quicker and last longer, out of potatoes and brown sugar, and the Indians do it in Alaska. They call it hoockinoo; and it is a much cheaper drink and fully as abiding, and one does not have to use wheat nor grapes nor rye to make it.

I think the idea which the same Senator presented here—and I have a great deal of respect for him—that prohibition is, in a measure, an economic question, is true. I do not think that those who wish to prohibit the use of alcohol and put the saloons off the face of the earth will be entirely fair if they do not substitute some place for them, some resting place, some place where a stranger, a man who is tired, who is beaten by the storms of winter, may go in and sit down by a fire and rest himself and be made welcome. That is why the saloon makes its way with the unfortunate people in this world. It is for the reason that it affords a sort of resting place for tired and homeless men. I think it is up to society to provide such places to replace the saloon. I am now, and have long been, of the opinion that the churches of the country should not be closed for six days in the week. For six days and nearly every night in the week, if you go by them, you will find their doors are closed to the homeless stranger; they are dark; they are gloomy; they look cheerless and unfriendly. It has always been my opinion that if you wish to drive the saloon out of business you should build a good fire in each church, and perhaps in every schoolhouse, and make men welcome there, and invite them to come in and sit down and take a rest, and entertain them in some useful and harmless way. I think we owe that to the men who now seek solace and a refuge in the saloon.

I think also an economic question is involved in another way. The man who undergoes the hardships of the world, the hard-working man, the man whose position is not too secure, who has no large means at his disposal to take care of him in the later period of his life, or even temporarily, perhaps in many cases to bridge him over immediate necessities, is the man who does the drinking. He is also the man who goes insane, for the reason that the trials of life bear down hard upon him and disturb his equilibrium, nervous, mental, as well as physical, and he becomes the wreck of society. Therefore he should be offered some substitute, whether the saloon is abolished or not.

I do not think that alcohol is the direct cause of a large percentage of insanity. I do not think that tables of statistics, if carefully examined and analyzed, will show that it is the old alcoholic, the chronic drunk, who, as a rule, goes insane. He becomes a hobo; he becomes a nuisance; he is the cause of misery to his family and to his children; he makes his wife unhappy and is the cause of their not having enough food to eat and clothing to wear; he may become shattered physically, but, as a rule, he does not become insane. After he quits drinking, as a rule he resumes his normal mental condition and lives along without becoming insane. I do not think much of statistics which try to prove that he furnishes the largest proportion of the inmates of insane asylums; for the reason that my experience is to the contrary.

I have not much confidence in statistics such as were quoted here yesterday to the effect that the reason why one State will have a larger number of insane than another is due to the use of alcohol or the abstention from alcohol. For many years it has been noted that such States as New York, which is the port of entry for the largest number of people who come to this country from foreign lands, and is the mecca for a large number of the people of this country who wish to live in a large city, have a larger number of insane people than the States which do not offer such inducements or which do not appeal so strongly to the restless and the ambitious. On the Pacific coast the city of Seattle, the city of Portland, Oreg., the city of San Francisco, and the States of Oregon, California, and Washington will show a larger percentage of insane commitments in proportion to population than will the Middle States, such as Ohio and Iowa, for the reason that it is the restless who work their way across the continent to the far Pacific coast in the hope of bettering their condition. Men and women who are mentally unbalanced as well as those who are restless find their way to such sections, the first class perhaps fleeing from imaginary persecution, and after arriving there break down from one cause or another, such as a failure of their hope of making money, and such communities have to take care of them. So it may be that the difference between the State of Kansas and the State of Nebraska in the proportion of insane is due to some such controlling influence or factor as that, Kansas having offered greater opportunities than Nebraska, being a State which has opened up its resources in the last few years and risen from a condition where it was known as one of the poorest States in the Union—it was so known when I was a young man—until now it has arrived at the distinction of being one of the richest States in the Union, has attracted into its borders men and women from all over the country who would have gone insane if they had stayed at home. As I have said, it is the restless, discontented person who goes insane. It is not the placid, self-satisfied person of sure income, who rests at ease in his home, who ordinarily goes insane. The percentage of insanity among persons of that class is much less than it is among the more eager, among those less satisfied with the conditions which prevail about them.

Alcohol goes directly into the circulation. It does not remain in the alimentary canal; it is not digested; it enters immediately into the blood and thence makes its way directly to the nerve centers. The result of taking it into the system is that it accelerates the action of the heart, not by stimulating it, perhaps, but by opening up the arteries and the veins, and the heart gets into a state of fluttering activity, not a firm tonic action, but a tremulous one, in its attempt to feed the enlarged blood vessels. It was worked out a number of years ago by a medical gentleman that one drink of whisky taken, say at bedtime—the "nightcap" of our forefathers—will accelerate the action of the heart, say, 30 beats in the minute. The heart carrying a half ounce of blood at each beat, there would be nearly a pound of blood each minute, 60 pounds an hour, added to the duty of the heart; and in 8 or 10 hours it would amount to an enormous weight, an enormous additional labor put upon an organ which was already being deprived of its proper nerve tone. The necessary result was that in the morning the man who was in the habit of taking a "nightcap" or going to bed pretty well soused, rose the next morning with a dark-brown taste in his mouth and a consuming thirst for much cold water.

The action of alcohol in the system is direct and it goes not only into the circulation of the general system, but much of it finds its way immediately to the kidneys. It is notorious, having been known to medical men and other observers for years and years, that the man who drinks regularly suffers from kidney disease more frequently than does the average man who does not use alcohol. It has been ascertained, too, that it goes directly to the liver, which is one of the digestive organs; so that the man who keeps himself pretty well soaked with whisky or with any other stimulant of an alcoholic nature for a reasonable time is very liable to have hardening of the tissues of both the kidneys and the liver. It does not always result in direct hardening, but it does produce destructive processes in those organs.

There is no good in the use of it; there is no argument which can be made in its behalf, so far as any benefit to be derived from it by human kind. It is an outlaw; it is a curse; and yet I think, as does my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], that there are other concomitant conditions also which it is equally our duty to relieve, such as the condition of unjust economic distress among the poor, who are the ones who use it most freely and disastrously. We owe it to ourselves to provide relief for them. If we did so, there would be less drunkenness among men. In the last analysis, that method is perhaps the only one that will cure the curse of the country. On the other hand, however, there is no good word which can truthfully be said in behalf of the use of alcohol.

I think my friend, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], is mistaken if he thinks that alcoholic drinks derived from the grape, the fermented liquors in contradistinction to those that are distilled, are less harmful. It is my opinion that he is decidedly mistaken. The Englishman and the Scotchman and those people of Europe who drink heavy port wines are, I think, killed off as quickly, and I think more quickly, than those who confine themselves to the use of pure whisky.

If a person is going to drink at all, if he wants to get drunk, if he desires a stimulant, as a physician who has practiced medicine nearly 40 years I would say to him, "Get good, pure whisky. Leave wines and beers out. You will last longer and do yourself less harm, and the result will come cheaper to you in the long run. It is a matter of economy. If you really wish to use alcohol and get the effects from it without any subterfuge or fooling about, it is the safest drink of all."

I say this in order that those who are going to continue the use of it may have the advantage of my study on this subject. If they want a straight, unadulterated liquor upon which to get drunk, let them use pure alcohol, cologne spirits, the alcohol itself diluted with water. You will all do better to stick to plain whisky or pure alcohol rather than to go fooling around with high wines.

Yesterday some reflections were made upon the State of Georgia and the State of South Carolina for having passed laws forbidding the sale and the use of alcoholic drinks, and yet were unable to keep certain enterprising gentlemen dropping in from other States, men with a keen nose for the article, from finding it. [Laughter.]

For the benefit of the residents of those States, I would suggest that they adopt the method of the Eskimos to protect their food supplies from the ever-hungry malemute dogs, which is to cache it on a paltform about 20 feet above ground. By doing this enterprising and thirsty visitors from other States would have to seek their solace in the open and by means of a ladder.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we are about midway in the short session of the Sixty-third Congress. It began on the 4th of December, 43 days ago. It will end on the 4th of March, 46 days hence. We have therefore exhausted, inclusive of Sundays, 43 days in the consideration of important business, and we have, not excluding Sundays, 46 days remaining, during which period of time we must enact, if at all, the 14 remaining appropriation bills.

But one of them has been passed. Another is before the Senate, which should, and but for this resolution would, have been passed days ago. We have been considering for, I think, four days, in the midst of these important and unavoidable duties, the question of suspending a rule of the Senate by a process which, I understand, was invoked last some fifty-odd years ago, to the end that a subject which, however important in itself, is not germane to the substance of the bill, may be made a part of it, and either enacted into law or rejected.

If we establish this precedent, it can and will be invoked in behalf of other measures which, in the minds of Senators, may be quite as important as this, but which may be equally foreign to the subject matter of the measure under discussion.

Mr. President, I protest that we have halted the business, the pressing business, the real business, the important business of this session long enough in our discussion of an attempt to suspend a rule for a particular purpose. Four days, this day included, will have been exhausted—I had almost said wasted—in debating a matter that should not have been injected into the business of this important session, and fully 75 per cent of that time has been exhausted upon this side of the Chamber, where at present the responsibility for the enactment of legislation rests.

Mr. President, I shall vote against this motion, because I do not think the rule ought to be suspended now, of all times, and because I am satisfied that, however important the subject matter under discussion may be, we would, by suspending the rule, set a precedent that will surely be at once invoked in behalf of other matters, and as a result the 4th of March would come and find us where we are at present.

I think under the circumstances, in view of the magnitude of our task, that ordinary rules of business procedure require that we should vote upon this matter now, get it behind us, take up and pass this appropriation bill, and then proceed to the next important subject of urgent legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say a word along the line just pursued by the distinguished Senator from the State of Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The question before the Senate does not present at all the merits of the question whether prohibition shall or shall not prevail in the District of Columbia. The question before the Senate is whether a rule of the Senate shall be suspended in order that the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] may be considered in connection with the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

That rule reads as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received.

Confessedly, this amendment is neither germane nor relevant to the bill to which it is addressed. If it were, there would be no need to suspend the rule.

The wisdom of this rule is so obvious, the evils against which it is intended to guard are so pronounced, that the people of the various States of the Union, in establishing their constitutions, respectively, have, almost without exception in the last 30 years, in the case of those that have been framed within that period—and I might say within the last 50 years, put an absolute inhibition upon their legislatures in the matter of amendments to bills of this kind.

I read from a note to Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, as follows:

The constitutions of Minnesota, Kansas, Maryland, Kentucky, Nebraska, and Ohio provide that "no law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title." Those of Michigan, New Jersey, and Louisiana are similar, substituting the word "object" for "subject." The constitutions of South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, and California contain similar provisions. The constitution of New Jersey provides that "to avoid improper influences which may result from intermixing in one and the same act such things as have no proper relation to each other every law shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title." The constitution of Missouri contains the following provision: "No bill (except general appropriation bills, which may embrace the various subjects and accounts for and on account of which moneys are appropriated, and except bills passed under the third subdivision of section 44 of this article) shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." The exception secondly referred to is to bills for free public-school purposes. The constitutions of Indiana, Oregon, and Iowa provide that "every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title; but if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in the title." The constitution of Nevada provides that "every law enacted by the legislature shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title." The constitutions of New York and Wisconsin provide that "no private or local bill which may be passed by the legislature shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." The constitution of Illinois is similar to that of Ohio, with the addition of the saving clause found in the constitution of Indiana. The provision in the constitution of Colorado is similar to that of Missouri. In Pennsylvania the provision is that "no bill except general appropriation bills shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title."

When the people who framed the constitution for my State were engaged in that work, they were so deeply impressed with the necessity of placing a restraint upon the legislature in this matter that they likewise adopted a provision that no bill whatever should contain more than one subject, and that that should be expressed in the title.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Just a word further. Thus, Mr. President, the people of my State recorded themselves as believing that there never would arise an occasion so grave, so urgent, that this salutary rule should be departed from; and thus they laid an absolute inhibition upon the legislature, no matter what contingencies confronted it, from enacting legislation of this character.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does he think Rule XL ought to be repealed altogether?

Mr. WALSH Why, no; Rule XL ought not to be repealed at all; but Rule XL ought never to be suspended in order that two different and wholly unrelated subjects may be united in the same bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Just a minute; I shall be glad to give way to the Senator in a minute.

Mr. President, it is needless to review the reasons that have thus forced the inclusion of this provision in the constitutions of so many of our States; but let me attempt to elucidate one that forces itself upon the attention of everyone who considers the subject. I undertake to say, in view of the earnestness exhibited by the Senator from Texas, for whom we all have so great a regard, in favor of this amendment which he has offered, that it does not make any difference what appropriations may creep into the District appropriation bill; he will vote for the bill if his amendment is carried. On the other hand, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has exhibited such antagonism to this amendment that if it should be added to this bill, no matter how wise all the other provisions of the bill may be, he will vote against it.

I have no idea how the Chief Executive of this Nation feels about this matter. He may be as earnest in advocacy of prohibition in the District of Columbia as is the Senator from Texas or he may be as earnest in his resistance to it as the Senator from Kentucky. If the bill goes to him carrying this amendment and it meets his disapproval, he is coerced into signing the bill notwithstanding, or he must veto the bill, in which case an extra session will be necessary for the consideration of an appropriation bill for the District of Columbia in order to provide funds to carry on the government here. On the other hand, if he is in favor of this amendment as earnestly as is the Senator from Texas we may expect that he will give his approval to the bill, although it contains appropriations or provisions in relation to some that are condemned by his best judgment. In other words, he may be forced to sign a bill a most important provision the unwisdom of which he is convinced.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I agreed to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I had not moved to suspend Rule XL.

Mr. WALSH. I understand. Mr. President; but the Senator has moved, under Rule XL, to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, which I read. The matter has been referred to the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Rules has reported favorably upon the matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; but Rule XL permits me to move to suspend the rules, so that a matter will be in order that otherwise is not in order.

Mr. WALSH. Why, certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am asking the Senator if he thinks that that rule, which permits me to move to suspend the rules in order to put general legislation on an appropriation bill—a practice that he denounces—ought to be repealed.

Mr. WALSH. I have answered the Senator. I can scarcely conceive of a condition of affairs that would suggest the suspension of Rule XVI in order that general legislation may be attached to an appropriation bill. I do not say that in some crisis which the Nation may face it may not be advisable or even necessary to do so, but I do say that at the present time no such condition, no such emergency has been shown. Moreover, the people of the various States of the Union, when they framed their several constitutions, declared that they could not conceive of such a condition being likely to arise in the course of their history, or at least that they were willing to endure the inconveniences of such a possibility in order to escape the innumerable evils that must follow in the train of legislation passed in disregard of the salutary rule which it is insisted should now be suspended.

I yield now to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator if he holds that the Senator from Texas is proceeding in order?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator recognize the right of the Senator from Texas, under Rule XL, to make the motion which is now pending before the Senate?

Mr. WALSH. I do; certainly. I am urging, however, that we ought not to agree to the motion and suspend the rule. I have not urged that the Senator is out of order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I can not understand the cause of the warmth with which the Senator urges his suggestion. One would infer that the Senator from Texas was proposing a revolutionary or extraordinary measure here. The Senator from Texas is entirely within his rights under the rules. If the Senate does not want to adopt the amendment, the Senate will reject it and be done with it.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Mississippi will pardon me. I have not suggested that the Senator from Texas is out of order or that the motion should not be considered by the Senate. I merely say——

Mr. VARDAMAN. The suggestion the Senator makes, that this body should be influenced in its action by the course that may be taken by the White House or the attitude of the President to the matter under consideration, strikes me as hardly pertinent. I have great respect for the President's opinion, but I would not feel like surrendering altogether my own views.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to interrupt the Senator. I have not suggested that the desires or wishes or opinions of the White House ought to be consulted. I was discussing the wisdom of the provision which forbids that two subjects shall be embraced in the same bill. I advanced that every bill that comes to the executive of any State or the Executive of the Nation with two independent and unrelated provisions in it coerces the Executive, in a way.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator from Montana is correct. In my State the title of a bill must describe accurately the contents of the bill, and in the reports of committees to the body in which the bill originates it is always required that the title shall be found sufficient, and the contents of the bill are set out in the title. But those are rules—laws. We are living by the laws of the Senate. We are proceeding in this matter in order, and we have a right to have a vote upon it. If the Senate does not want to adopt the amendment, it can reject it. That is all there is to it. No revolutionary or unusual proposition has been made. Nothing is asked of the Senate except what we have a perfect right to ask under the provisions of Rule XL.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in all that has been said by the Senator from Mississippi I might say I quite concur. There is no want of harmony between us at all. I have not urged that this is out of order; I have not urged that the Senator from Texas has not a right to make this motion; I have not urged that he has not a right to impress his views upon the Senate with all the great skill in debate he is able to command. I address myself to the judgment of the Senate to reject his suggestion that the rules ought to be suspended in order that this amendment might become a part of a general appropriation bill providing funds for the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, inasmuch as the rule has such very general concurrence as I have spoken of, it must be obvious that it never ought to be disturbed in order to permit general legislation to be admitted to an appropriation bill unless in the face of some great crisis, unless in the face of some great urgency. What is there in the situation now confronting us that requires or justifies this extraordinary course? No one has told us any reason why an independent bill which might be introduced by the Senator from Texas prohibiting the sale or disposition of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia could not as well present the main question, why it should not be referred to the proper committee, or why it should not come up for consideration in the proper and usual way. I may say, although it is entirely irrelevant to the question, that when a bill of that character comes up regularly I shall vote for it. I believe that it ought to be adopted.

But, Mr. President, that is entirely aside from this question. It might be objected that such a bill would go to a hostile committee which might possibly delay it unreasonably or bury it. What reason is there for apprehending anything of that kind?

When the Senator from Texas moved to suspend the rule and his motion was referred to the Committee on Rules that committee went out, and within a few hours came back and reported favorably in relation to it. What is the reason for supposing that any committee of this body to which a bill introduced by him upon this general subject might go would not be returned with equal dispatch?

But, Mr. President, if it should in any way be delayed, the Senator has a right to rise here at any time and move that it be returned within 24 hours, or other period, and if a majority believe that its importance is sufficient to warrant such action it will be here for consideration in its due order, and it may be taken up by a vote of the Senate, even to the exclusion of the unfinished business, even to the exclusion of the appropriation bills, and the embarrassment of the public business which must follow from a failure to enact them.

Mr. President, no reasons whatever have been advanced why we should depart from the salutary rule which forbids the incorporation of this amendment in an appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Chair has caused to be read this morning, or rather has read himself, a very eminent authority upon the subject of suspending the rules of the Senate or of any legislative body. The statement was made by that authority that a motion to suspend the rules is not debatable. I think the Chair has decided that it is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the rules of the Senate which specify what shall be and what shall not be debated.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not in any way impugning the decision of the Chair, nor am I advocating the position taken by the authority which the Chair has read as a proper exposition of parliamentary law, but I do want to say a few words in this connection, because I think they ought to be said and because I think the circumstances we find ourselves in to-day emphasizes the necessity of the action that I am going to suggest. If a motion of this kind is, under the rules as they now obtain, debatable, the rule ought to be changed, and speedily changed, so as to provide that a motion of this character shall not be debatable.

We have here for the last day and a half been debating the question whether the rules should be suspended or not, and until this morning, until the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] took the floor, not a single observation, so far as I have heard, has fallen from the lips of any of the participants in the debate with reference to whether the rule should be suspended or not.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, if the Senator had heard my remarks yesterday, or if he had read them, he would find that in my remarks I did touch on that point and nothing else.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have been, then, until this morning ostensibly engaged in debating the question whether we should suspend the rules, and instead of discussing that question we have been discussing the question which would come up in case the rules are suspended and which would not come up in case the rules are not suspended.

Mr. President, if we had taken the vote immediately upon the question of suspending the rules and that motion had been voted down, this debate would have been saved and the time which has been consumed unnecessarily would have been saved.

Now we are notified by Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and possibly by Senators on this side of the Chamber, that if this proceeding is allowed there will be other motions made as we proceed with this or with other appropriation bills to suspend the rules and to place other riders upon these appropriation bills, dealing with subjects absolutely foreign to the subject of the bill. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has just given notice that he will make a motion to suspend the rule for the purpose of bringing before the Senate as an amendment to an appropriation bill his bill with regard to retired officers' pay.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will not say anything he will desire to reply to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is mistaken in his statement that I said I would move it. I said if it was true that a majority of the Senate could change the rules I should certainly employ that method to put my amendment on the bill, but the Senator will remember I explained how a majority could do that, but I recognize the fact that a two-thirds can not do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator might desist from offering his amendment, because he thinks he can not get two-thirds in favor of the measure, but we all know how Senators seek here sometimes for legislation that is very popular; that is on the calendar perhaps, but because of other more important business it is held in abeyance or pushed aside. They will have the temptation greatly accentuated to offer such measures as a rider to these appropriation bills, because they think, if it were very popular with the Members of the Senate, they will be able to secure a two-thirds vote.

Mr. President, I say if that practice is to obtain, if we are to invoke this rule that for 53 years has not been invoked in the Senate, then we ought to provide that a motion to suspend the rules shall not be subject to debate, so that Senators can not under cover of a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up some extraneous subject claim the attention of the Senate here for an indefinite time.

Let us suppose, Mr. President, that there is a disposition on the part of either side of the Chamber or on the part of a considerable number of Senators upon one side of the Chamber to filibuster against some measure, and it is desired to use an appropriation bill as a buffer for accomplishing that purpose. I do not charge that that is the situation now, but I do say that two appropriation bills at this session have taken two or three or four times as much of the time of the Senate to secure action as is ordinarily the case. Suppose, Mr. President, there is a desire to use these appropriation bills, especially during a short session of the Senate like this, as buffers to prevent the consideration of some important measure of legislation which certain Senators are unalterably opposed to, and determined to defeat by the method that may be open to them, how easy it will be for Senators, under the method the Senator from Texas has adopted, to make a motion to suspend the rules and offer an amendment placing their bill as a rider upon the appropriation bill, and then upon the motion to suspend the rule, before they have reached the subject matter which they wish to add to the appropriation bill, before its discussion has become pertinent, upon this motion to suspend to engage in a general debate such as we had here in the Senate on yesterday, taking up the time of the Senate and indirectly accomplishing the purposes of a filibuster. Mr. President, upon this one appropriation bill we can have a dozen filibusters in effect.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has wisely said that the question before the Senate at this time is not the question of prohibition for the District of Columbia. I want to say to the Senator from Texas if that was the question before the Senate I would not stand against him; I would be as solidly with him as any other Senator upon this floor. There has not been a time in my life when I have not been ready and willing to vote in favor of prohibition. I am willing to put my record upon the subject of prohibition against that of the Senator from Texas or any other Senator upon this floor. Shortly after I became a Member of the United States Senate, and while I was yet chairman of the Democratic executive committee of my State, believing, as I did, that there was a strong public sentiment in that State in favor of prohibition, feeling strongly myself in favor of that as a great measure looking to the uplift of the people, I prepared a bill providing for absolute rural prohibition in the State of North Carolina and municipal local option. I gave it to a member of the legislature and asked him to introduce it and to state upon the floor that I had drafted it, and that as chairman of the Democratic executive committee, if I had the power to do so I would place the Democratic Party behind that measure. It was adopted at the next session. It worked well.

At the next session of the legislature I drafted another bill providing against the manufacture of liquor except in incorporated towns of a thousand inhabitants anywhere in the State. I handed it to another member of the legislature with the request that he offer it and state that I had drafted it, and that, as far as I was able, as chairman of the Democratic executive committee of that State, I desired to put the party behind it. It passed. The towns voted liquor out, with the exception of eight or nine towns. Liquor was voted out. Then, Mr. President, we submitted the question of absolute prohibition, both as to the sale and manufacture of liquor, in North Carolina, and I was one of the chief advocates in favor of it.

I say this, Mr. President, in order that it may be distinctly understood that the position which I take now with regard to my vote upon the motion now pending is not to be construed as being in any way hostile to the cause of prohibition.

I want to state emphatically to the Senator from Texas that I am surprised, in view of his zeal here to-day, that he has permitted the bill providing for prohibition for the District of Columbia to rest in the committee since last April, when, as I understood from his observation yesterday, it was referred to a committee, without making an effort to get it out of that committee and before the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have no power over that committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Ah, but the Senator ought to have proceeded in the regular way. He ought to have gone before the committee and have insisted upon its action. But he did not do that. I am not complaining of the Senator because he did not. I say to the Senator that the bill is there now. I say to the Senator that I will join him in insisting that that committee shall act upon it, and if they do not act upon it in a reasonable time, then I will join him in a vote to discharge that committee and bring the bill before the Senate.

But, Mr. President, I can not stultify myself by casting a vote here to open the doors wide in the conditions which we have in the Senate to-day, in view of the fact that it is a short session, that one-half of that session has expired, and that it would be followed by all sorts of propositions to suspend the rules and to permit riders carrying general legislation to be attached to this appropriation bill and to every other appropriation bill.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party being the majority party is responsible for legislation. I want to ask Democrats, have we not a program this year that we want to carry out? Mr. President, we not only have a program of legislation which we desire to carry out, but we have a program of legislation that we have solemnly agreed to carry out. We have committed ourselves to it. We have promised each other that we will seek to carry it out by every legitimate means known to parliamentary law.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SIMMONS. After a little while. Mr. President, it is perfectly apparent that if we enter upon this program and then let the bars down in this case it will not be the only case. We know—every one of us on this side knows—that it is the fixed determination of the party on the other side of the aisle to defeat this legislative program if they can. They have expressly declared their intention upon the floor of the Senate not to permit a vote upon the ship-purchase bill. I do not say that they are filibustering upon the appropriation bills. Filibustering can be done upon appropriation bills, because of their peculiar character, so adroitly that you can not put your finger upon the filibuster.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not charging that it is being done, but I do say—I will not yield for the present; I will yield after a while—I do say that if we open the doors, if we start upon this policy, with the splendid opportunities for using the appropriation bills for filibustering purposes, with the enlarged opportunities that will be afforded by this method of suspending the rules and taking up general legislation and discussing it ad infinitum, every man of sense in this body knows that we shall not do more at this session than pass the appropriation bills. It means an absolute abandonment by the majority Members of the Senate, who are responsible for legislation, of the program that we have adopted and as to which we have committed ourselves to our party and to the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not enter, Mr. President, into any discussion with the Senator from North Carolina concerning the question now before the Senate, and upon which the Senator is wasting a great deal of time; but I will ask the Senator for a single moment——

Mr. SIMMONS. I am wasting time—to keep the Senator's method of trying to defeat legislation in which I am interested from being successful.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if a single moment of time in debate on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, aside from the question which the Senator is now discussing, was not legitimate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have said that you can not lay your hand upon a filibustering scheme in connection with an appropriation bill. It is so easy with the hundreds and sometimes thousands of items in such bills to take up each one of them or many of them and to discuss them a little while——

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS (continuing). That the discussion seems to be absolutely legitimate, and is absolutely legitimate, and yet the purpose of the discussion may be, and frequently is, delay.

Mr. GALLINGER. And if the Senator will go to the records he will find that more than 50 per cent of the time in discussing the District of Columbia appropriation bill has been taken up by Senators on the other side of the Chamber. The RECORD will show that to be the fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. The larger part of the time in connection with the discussion of this very proposition we have before us now has been taken up on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am saying, Mr. President, that if we had had a ruling of the Chair that this motion was not debatable, we would have voted upon it at once; and if two-thirds had not voted for it, then all this unnecessary debate would have been cut off.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question about that; but the Senator, I know, would not ask the Chair to make a ruling that was not justified by the rules of this body.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not ask the Chair to make such a ruling. What I suggested—and if the Senator was present he would have heard it—was that, without impugning at all the decision of the Chair, I am inclined to think the decision of the Chair under the rule was entirely right; but I was suggesting that we ought to proceed very quickly to amend our rules so as to require that they should provide that such a motion should not be debatable.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, there is a proper and legitimate way to amend the rules; and there is a proper and legitimate way to amend Rule XX so as to require a two-thirds vote. I would join with the Senator in amending the rule so as to require a two-thirds vote of this body to suspend the rule.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think we have already settled that point; and I think, in view of the interpretation that we gave to the rule the other day, that it is not necessary to make any further provision about that. Two-thirds from now on, I take it, will be required to suspend the rule, because the Senate has decided that that is the meaning of the rule; but the point I was making was that such a motion ought not to be debatable.

Mr. GALLINGER. That might be true as to a great many motions; but, as a matter of fact, they are debatable under our rules.

Mr. SIMMONS. The reason I was giving why it ought not to be debatable was the very situation that we are confronted with now. Instead of debating it, we have been debating the question that can only come up in case of a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules, and which may never come up. Therefore it should not be debated on the question of whether or not we shall suspend the rules. That debate ought to be held in abeyance until we get to it, and if two-thirds do not vote for suspension, then this time has been absolutely wasted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want, if the Senator will permit me, to make a further suggestion to the effect that our rules are written in the code, and that we ought to observe them so long as they are there.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not to that at all that I object.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I am somewhat surprised that the Senator from North Carolina is now arguing that we ought to infringe the right of debate in this body.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from New Hampshire wholly misunderstands me. I have twice repeated that I did not suggest that we infringe the rules; I did not even suggest that the Vice President was wrong in his ruling that the motion was debatable; but I suggest that we ought to speedily change the rules so as to make such a motion nondebatable. That was my only suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, when the Senator from North Carolina attempts that, the question of changing the rules will be debatable.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, that is a question that we can consider when we reach it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from North Carolina indirectly, if not directly, seems to charge the proponents of this amendment, by discussing this question, with unnecessarily delaying legislation which he says the Democrats have promised to enact, and he says that it ought not to be discussed.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has wholly misunderstood me. I have made no such statement.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the Senator from North Carolina discussing?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am discussing this rule; that is what I am discussing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then, if it is not out of order, why does the Senator criticize other people for taking up time when the Senator is consuming more time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not discuss a proposition without making illustrations to support my argument; but I have made no such statement.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No Senator upon this floor has taken more time to discuss this question than has the Senator from North Carolina this morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not suggested what the Senator said, that the discussion of this question ought not to be had; but what I did suggest was that we ought not to take the time of the Senate to discuss this question until we had decided whether or not we were going to suspend the rules so as to make the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Texas, I, and other Senators who are favoring this measure have been ready to vote on the matter all the morning; we are ready to vote now without any further discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say, if the Senator will pardon me, Mr. President, that I am getting a little bit tired of being criticized for doing something that I did not receive orders, or rather permission, to do from the self-constituted leaders on this side. I am exercising my right, as is the Senator from Texas exercising his right, as a Senator to move an amendment which we believe to be quite as important to the American people as is the ship-subsidy bill or any other item on the program referred to by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have not denied the right of the Senator to make the motion; I am not criticizing that at all. The Senator from Texas is entirely within his rights, and it is entirely within the right of Senators to discuss this question whenever it is in order to discuss it; but my proposition was to cut off the discussion until the amendment proposed by the Senator had been decided to be a competent and legitimate amendment to this measure.

The Senator from Mississippi says I am taking up time this morning, and that he is ready to vote. Yes; Mr. President, all of yesterday was taken up by the discussion of the merits of the prohibition proposition, but the merits of the rule, which is the only thing now before the Senate, were not discussed at all; and I say, Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want the Senator to understand that I do not object——

Mr. SIMMONS. I say, Mr. President, that a proposition to change a standing rule of the Senate, which has not been suspended in 53 years, and to inaugurate in the Senate a new policy with reference to riders upon appropriation bills is a very important matter per se; it is a public matter and not a private matter, and I think it ought to be discussed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have not objected to the Senator discussing it. I think it is perfectly proper to discuss it, because I realize that out of discussion, that by the attrition of ideas and the friction of suggestions the eternal truth may be evolved. I have not uttered one word in protest against the Senator's speaking, but I do not think it is entirely proper and consistent, with my idea of fair play, for the Senator to consume an hour of the time of the Senate and to criticize some of us who have used 15 minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think I have been speaking half an hour, but even at that much of the time I have been on the floor has been taken by Senators who desired to interrupt me, and part of it has been taken up by the Senator, who says he was tired of something somebody else was doing. The Senator from Mississippi has been tired ever since he has come here of whatever anybody was doing that he did not agree with, even in the White House. [Laughter.] I shall proceed, whether the Senator from Mississippi is tired or whether he is not tired; that is not a matter of concern to me.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. And, Mr. President, it is equally a matter of indifference to me what the Senator from North Carolina may do or think.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I decline to be further interrupted, because the Senator has complained that those who oppose the proposition to suspend this rule, which has stood unsuspended for 53 years, ought not to be heard, ought not to have time to discuss it, after those who favor it have discussed for a whole day the merits of the question which is to follow after action with reference to the pending motion.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senator's statement is not justified by what I said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I said I would not.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has very pertinently and very wisely called attention to the fact that not only the United States Senate but nearly every legislative body in this country has a rule against riders upon appropriation bills. He has given the fundamental reasons why it is unwise to put such riders upon appropriation bills. However meritorious the legislation may be, however strong it may be with the body to which it is presented, it is an improper way, and an unwise way, as the Senator from Montana has shown, to endeavor to enact it into law. In addition to the reasons which the Senator from Montana has given why it is an unwise thing to do, I invoke the fact that for 53 years no such action as is now sought has been taken by this body.

Mr. President, there have been times in our history when men who represented legislation which they regarded of vital importance, who were just as zealous and just as enthusiastic and just as anxious to have it speedily considered as are the proponents of the proposed legislation now under discussion, have been unable to get the legislation in which they were interested out of the committee and upon the calendar, and, if it were upon the calendar, unable to get it up for consideration. The temptation has been great, as it is in the case of the Senator from Texas, to facilitate and expedite action by attaching such legislation to appropriation bills; but, Mr. President, the common sense and judgment of this body for 53 years has made itself felt so powerfully with the Members of this body that no effort has been made during all that time to secure legislation through appropriation bills by the medium of the suspension of the rules.

I do not think there could be a more powerful circumstance than that adduced as an argument why it should not be invoked on this particular occasion in this particular case, especially when it is realized that the Senator from Texas will have his opportunity and the advocates of prohibition in the District will have their opportunity—and they have a majority of this body that will back and support them in any course that they may see fit to pursue—to bring this matter before the Senate in a regular and orderly and not in a revolutionary way.

But, Mr. President, the chief reason, to my mind, why it is unwise to relax this rule grows out of two circumstances; first, that a measure brought up here in this way may be a measure which has never been submitted to a committee of the Senate. It may be a measure that has never had any consideration on the part of the Members of the Senate. We have provided, and provided wisely, that nothing shall be taken up for consideration by this body until it has been submitted to a committee of the Senate and that committee have had time to consider and report upon it, not only giving their reasons why they have acted, but, if they have taken testimony in the course of their investigations, furnishing us with the written testimony, so that we may have both the facts and their conclusions to assist us in legislation. I do not think there is any more salutary rule of procedure than that, and yet if this course is allowed—and this is but the entering wedge—then we lose the benefit of committee action, committee consideration, committee investigation, and committee report upon measures before we take them up.

More than that, Mr. President, though we may sneer if we want to at the rights of the Executive with reference to legislation and his power, he not only has rights and power, but he has a responsibility in connection with legislation just as weighty and probably weightier than ours. Our responsibility is divided amongst 96 Members of the Senate; the responsibility of Congress as to legislation is divided amongst 96 Members of the Senate and over 400 Members of the other House. The responsibility of the Chief Executive as to legislation rests entirely upon his shoulders. He is as much a part of the law-making body as are we. His assent—and in his assent is implied his responsibility—is coequal with ours.

Mr. President, when you present to the President of the United States an appropriation bill providing for the necessary expenses to carry on the Government, the effect of the failure of which or a veto of which would be to stop the wheels of the Government, whether it be the District of Columbia appropriation bill or the bill to provide money to carry on the Post Office Department or the Navy or the Army, and couple with that bill a distinct and unrelated proposition of general legislation, he can not veto the one without vetoing the other. It is taking an unfair advantage of the Chief Executive.

For that reason, Mr. President, as well as for the reasons the Senator from Montana has given, and the additional reason that I have given with reference to the loss by this method of the help of committee action, it would be extremely unwise to enter upon the policy of loading down our appropriation bills with matters which do not relate properly to appropriations for the departments of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the first discordant note has been sounded by the Senator from North Carolina in the discussion of the bill making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia. We have had an interesting debate on many provisions of that bill, participated in by Senators on both sides of the Chamber, I think to a larger extent on the other side than on this. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has made the suggestion that there is a purpose in view, and, as he said, it had been announced to filibuster against another bill in which the Senator from North Carolina is greatly interested.

I wish to say for myself, and I think I speak for every other Senator on this side of the Chamber who has made any observations on the matter, that we have never made any such declaration. We have said, and we repeat, that so far as the shipping bill is concerned we propose to have a full and free discussion of that measure. We do not propose to commit ourselves to Government ownership of steamship lines or railroads or telephones or telegraph lines or any other great industry now conducted by private enterprise without debating it and having the country distinctly understand our position. That is all we have said; it is all we say now; we stand by that declaration, and propose to stand by it.

Mr. President, so far as the matter that is now under debate is concerned, I think we may well keep good-natured over it. The rule gave the Senator from Texas the right to make the motion he did. It went to the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Rules reported it back favorably, and I think the Committee on Rules meant to do the right thing. It has, perhaps, resulted in a longer debate than some Senators desired; but that frequently occurs in this body, to the discomfort of some of us on one side or the other of this Chamber. As I have suggested, I think we had better keep good-natured about it and determine this matter dispassionately and calmly and without heat. That is what I propose to do, and I trust every other Member of this body will do the same thing.

I regret, personally, that so much feeling has developed on the other side of the Chamber between our friends of the Democratic Party, because we want to help them keep good-natured. We want them to enjoy themselves as long as they are in power. It is not going to be a great while [laughter], and we want to contribute our little mite toward their happiness whenever we have an opportunity. As a humble member of the minority, recognizing the fact that our Democratic friends are temporarily in power, I wish to assure them that we do not particularly enjoy the violent outbursts we have witnessed to-day between distinguished members of the majority party; and I will add simply that I hope we will now proceed in order and calmly discuss, if it is to be discussed further, the question before the Senate, and in due time take a vote upon it, and we will all bow, as we must bow, to the decision of this body when that decision is rendered.

For myself, Mr. President, I have not taken any time in this discussion. I am in favor of the motion the Senator from Texas has made. I shall vote for prohibition for the District of Columbia, if I get an opportunity to do so, believing that such action will be for the best interests of a majority of the people. I shall vote for national prohibition, if I get an opportunity to do so, believing that that action will be in the interests of a majority of the people of the country at large; but I am not going to find any fault with any Senator who differs with me or who votes differently from the vote I shall cast.

I hope now, Mr. President, in the interests of good legislation, in the interests of good nature and good feeling all around, that we will proceed to the further discussion of this question, if it is to be further discussed, and that in due time we will take a vote upon it and settle it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I am sure this side appreciates, and I am doubly sure I do, the deep interest always manifested by the Senator from New Hampshire in keeping this side in a good humor. I know, of course, that it would grieve him overmuch to see anything happen upon this side that would cause strained relations between Democrats. He has so recently had an experience of that kind in the Republican Party and I know he has seen the bad effects of it so manifested upon his own party that he does not desire to see it inflicted upon the Democratic Party. It is a glorious thing in this country that everybody has a right to prophesy; and I am certain that if there is any happiness to be derived by the Senator from New Hampshire from prophesying about the success of the Republican Party I should not, if I could, deny that to him, because I feel certain that it will run in the next election where it did in the last; that is, third. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to get into a political controversy with my good friend from Kentucky. I had no purpose of saying anything that would result in that. I simply expressed a friendly feeling for our good Democratic friends; and I was reminded, as I was on my feet—I thought I would not quote it then, but I think I will now—of the words:

Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

[Laughter.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, that is the second time I have heard the Senator quote that verse very recently. If there is anybody on earth who ought to be an expert in all those statements in the Bible or in history about "brethren dwelling together in unity," I am certain a Republican ought to be quite familiar with them, since their Chicago convention so delightfully experienced it. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire need not be alarmed. The Senators on this side discuss questions. We have our opinions about them. We may be a little overenthusiastic sometimes, but the Senator takes that too much to heart. He is too much impressed with it. I can assure him that we will all be together in solid phalanx behind the Democratic nominee in 1916.

But I arose, Mr. President, not to discuss the prospects of the Republican Party—I do not think that question sufficiently important to call for serious consideration—but to discuss the question that is now before the Senate—the suspension of the rules of the Senate for the purpose of considering the question of prohibition in the District of Columbia.

This discussion has proceeded here as if the issue were, "Is whisky a good thing or a bad thing to use?" That is not the issue at all. The immediate issue here submitted is whether the rules of the Senate shall be suspended to consider the question of prohibition in the District of Columbia.

This is the first time in 53 years there has ever been an attempt in this Senate to tie onto an appropriation bill new legislation—unconsidered, undigested, uninvestigated legislation—in this way by a suspension of the rules. In the State that sends me here to represent them it is provided in our constitution that only one subject can be considered in a bill before the legislature, and that subject shall be plainly stated in the title. The importance of preventing the tying of one issue onto another, so prolific of bad legislation, was manifest to the organic-law makers of our State, so they prohibited it in the constitution, as has been stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. So this body, by its rules of procedure, provided that amendments presenting new legislation could not be tied onto appropriation bills. I believe that this rule has saved the people of this country more money, has been a greater protection to the people's Treasury than any other ever written. Gentlemen having a desire to raid the Treasury, and knowing that standing alone it would fail to become a law, would tie onto it some popular principle of new legislation. Some gentlemen would vote for the bill containing the two questions because it contained the legislation they approved; others would vote for it because the Government could not proceed without the necessary appropriation. Hence, it would pass, yet either alone would fail, and neither is the will of the majority. While some might be willing to break down this protection to serve an end they deemed wise, it would return many times to plague them.

The attempt here is not to take the sense of the people of the District of Columbia on whether or not they desire the sale of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor; no vote is to be given to them; no referendum to them is submitted; they are not to be consulted. It is proposed to have Congress—which the District of Columbia did not elect, had no voice in selecting whatever—vote upon the people here absolute prohibition. Their advice is not asked; they are not consulted; but the District of Columbia, in which there is the city of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, with 400,000 people, is to be disfranchised upon this question, and without a hearing before a committee of the Senate. I can not support such a proposition. It is undemocratic, un-American, and unfair. It would deny to the people here a right given to the people in every other State in the Union, either of a direct or an indirect referendum—direct referendum when the vote would be upon the issue itself, or indirect when the vote was for the candidates upon platform pledges as to their course.

In Kentucky we have local option. I was elected to the Senate upon a platform which pledged our party to local option. Our party enacted it into law, and each "locality"—which in our State is the county, the unit—passes upon this question at the polls—the voters, the people themselves. No legislature would dare to usurp this right of local self-government and impose whisky upon a dry county or impose prohibition upon a wet county. I would not vote to impose upon the people here prohibition without submitting the question to them, any more than I would vote to license the sale of whisky here, if it were prohibited by law, without submitting the question to the people. The rule of the people must be recognized in all questions. No question is so good or so great that it is better than the rule of the people, which is the voice of the people, which, we have often been told, is the voice of God. In Kentucky we have, as I said, local option, where the county is the social unit. I believe in local option. It has been a success in our State.

In Kentucky, which perhaps distills more whisky than any other State in the Union—certainly more good whisky than any other State in the Union [laughter]—we submit the issue, wet or dry, license or no license, to the people, and under this law more than 106 counties voted to prohibit the sale of whisky. The other 14, in which there are large cities, have the sale of whisky. It is possible for the whole State to be dry, if it is the will of the people in each county. The people living in one part of Kentucky can not force their will upon the other part of the State. Local self-government is given to the people of each county, which together constitute the State. To each self-governing community is given the right of self-government. This is democracy as I have always been taught it. The platform upon which I was elected to the Senate pledged me to the county unit in local option; that is, to give to the people in each county in our State the right to say at the ballot box whether whisky should be licensed or prohibited. That is local self-government in each county. For me to vote here to deny that right to the people of this District would be a direct violation of the spirit of that platform promise. I was elected upon that platform, and I shall not violate it. I will not do that. In each county in Kentucky, some of them with less than 10,000 people, they have this right of self-government, a right pledged to them by my party. Shall I now vote to deny the same right of self-government to the people here, 400,000 in numbers, forty times the size of the unit to which it is given in my State under the pledge of the Democratic Party and written into law by their legislature? I challenge any advocate of prohibition upon this floor to point me to a city that in any way approximates the size of Washington where prohibition has been a success when it was voted upon them against their will.

There was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD yesterday a letter from the Washington Mercantile Association. That letter gives the names of organization after organization in the District of Columbia that have protested against prohibition. Let me read the first one:

The Personal Liberty League of the District of Columbia, with a petition of residents and taxpayers numbering about 50,000.

In this District there would not be over 80,000 voters. So here is a protest from a majority of the voters against prohibition. I am in favor of the rule of the people everywhere. Why should the people here be denied it?

Why, in my State you can not have a vote upon local option—that is, the denial or the permission of the sale of whisky in a county—unless you get 25 per cent of the voters of that county to petition for it. Why is that? That is a good law. The reason for it is that there should be no necessity for an election that will stir up a community, as the question of whisky or no whisky will, and make enemies out of good friends unless there is a decided desire in the county to have that question decided, to have the law changed, which is dry to wet or which is wet to dry. You can not enforce a prohibition law in any community unless you have back of that law a healthy public sentiment.

Take the District of Columbia. It would seem that the reason why the effort is made here to vote prohibition direct upon these people without their consent is because the advocates of that policy believe that if the question were submitted to the people themselves they would refuse to vote it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Did not the Senator from Kentucky the other day vote to impose on the people of this District a change in the plan of taxation without saying anything about referring it to them?

Mr. JAMES. Oh, certainly, Mr. President; but that is not a parallel case at all. The legislatures of the various States pass upon questions of taxation without submitting them to the people, but upon the question whether or not whisky shall be sold in a county that is "dry" or prohibited in a county that is "wet" it always has been the policy in practically every State in this Union to submit it to the voters at the ballot box.

How can you enforce prohibition in the District of Columbia if you have not back of it the sentiment of the people here? Your jurors, your officers, the men who indict and the men who try, the officers who arrest, the witnesses who testify, and the judges who preside are the men who must enforce this law. That is the reason why prohibition has been a failure in every big city in this Nation. The public sentiment has not been strong enough to uphold the law. It was a failure in Nashville, it was a failure in Memphis, because public sentiment did not favor it and would not uphold it, and it would be a failure in the District of Columbia if it were forced upon these people without their consent.

I have heard a great deal of a referendum. That has been dear to the hearts of some—almost as dear as prohibition—yet in the District of Columbia the iron hand of power would be leveled against these people, without giving them the opportunity to be heard, by those who have told us so much of referendums. The rule of the people upon a question like this applies as much to the people of the District of Columbia as it applies to the people of a county in Kentucky.

You say you have not the machinery for it. Why, all you have to do is to appoint the election officers, print the ballots, and prescribe the qualifications of the voters. That is all that is done in Kentucky. The election commissioners appoint the election officers, the sheriff serves notice on them, the clerk has the ballots printed, the election officers conduct the election, and the result is determined by the people themselves. But here in the District of Columbia we are told that the liberty of the citizen fades as he approaches the Capital of the Nation; that a right dear to the people of the States shall be denied here; that out in the States they have the right to govern themselves, but here in the District of Columbia, because they are close to the Capitol itself, because they are near to the very seat of liberty, therefore we will force upon these people, without giving to them the opportunity to be heard, prohibition that in all probability would not in the slightest degree be enforced—if forced on them against their will.

Mr. President, because you are willing to give to the people the right to rule themselves, because you believe a question of this kind can be better handled under strict regulation and a high license, it is as unfair to designate one who takes that position as lining up with the saloon men as it would be for me to turn upon those who advocate a prohibition law that could not be enforced in great cities and line them up with the "blind tigers" and the "speak-easies" and bootleggers" that violate the law that has been written upon the statute books.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JAMES. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, in that connection I wish to call his attention to a fact well known to him, and I suppose to a great many Members of the Senate.

Abraham Lincoln was very ardently in favor of the abolition of slavery as far as it could be constitutionally accomplished. There was no doubt about the fact that Congress could abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, and yet Abraham Lincoln said that as a Member of Congress he would not vote for a bill to do it unless it had been previously submitted to the people of the District of Columbia. You might just as well say, then, that he was hypocritical and insincere in his pretension that he wanted to abolish slavery because he was willing to leave to the people of the District whether it should be abolished or not.

Mr. JAMES. Certainly; the right of the people to govern themselves and to rule themselves in the District of Columbia was recognized, and advocated by Abraham Lincoln, and it ought to exist in the same degree that it does in every State of the Union. Gentlemen say that you do not submit this or that taxation question to the District of Columbia. Certainly not, nor do you in any of the States submit that question to the people of the State; but you must remember that in the State there are two ways by which this question of local option or prohibition has been decided—either upon the direct vote of the people upon the issue itself, or by voting for a candidate who himself declared how he stood upon that question. But in the District of Columbia no Senator has been voted for by the people here. No Senator stated what his position was when he was elected as to the District of Columbia; the people of the District of Columbia had no right to pass upon his election to the United States Senate.

I want to say that in the District of Columbia the people here have just as much right to settle this question as to whether or not they want whisky or no whisky as they have in the State of Kentucky.

My friend from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] represents a great Commonwealth, the State of Texas, and he is undertaking to force upon the people of the District of Columbia by men they did not elect, against their will and without their consent, a policy of prohibition that the great State of Texas itself has three times recently repudiated. I ask him would he be willing to vote upon the people of Texas prohibition when that question was submitted to them twice at the ballot box and twice they have defeated it, and only recently they again expressed their opinion in the election of a governor who stood opposed to State-wide prohibition? Yet the effort is made here to impose upon these people prohibition without ever giving them an opportunity to be heard. Would he do Texas the same way?

Mr. President, the letter that I shall ask to have read states my position upon the whisky question. It is a letter familiar to Senators, but in order that they may again hear it I send it to the Secretary's desk. It is the letter by President Wilson to Rev. Thomas D. Shannon. I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MAY 1, 1911.

Rev. THOMAS D. SHANNON,
16 Clinton Street, Newark, N. J.

MY DEAR MR. SHANNON: The question asked in your letter of April 27 about my attitude toward the important question of local option is, of course, a perfectly legitimate one, and you are entitled to a very frank answer. I would have replied sooner had I not been prevented by imperative public engagements. I have explained my views to you in private, but have, of course, no objection to your making them public.

I am in favor of local option. I am a thorough believer in local self-government, and believe that every self-governing community which constitutes a social unit should have the right to control the matter of the regulation or of the withholding of licenses.

But the questions involved are social and moral and are not susceptible of being made parts of a party program. Whenever they have been made the subject matter of party contests they have cut the lines of party organization and party action athwart to the utter confusion of political action in every other field. They have thrown every other question, however important, into the background and have made constructive party action impossible for long years together. So far as I am myself concerned, therefore, I can never consent to have the question of local option made an issue between political parties in this State. My judgment is very clear in this matter. I do not believe that party programs of the highest consequence to the political life of the State and of the Nation ought to be thrust on one side and hopelessly embarrassed for long periods together by making a political issue of a great question which is essentially nonpolitical, nonpartisan, moral, and social in its nature.

Very sincerely, yours, WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, that letter states that every social unit shall decide for itself the question of license or no license. Prohibition has been a success wherever public sentiment has been back of it. It has been a failure wherever public sentiment has been opposed to it.

It is claimed that the issue is to be determined here as to whether whisky is a good thing or a bad thing, whether it is good for the human system or bad for it, whether it affects the kidneys or has no effect whatever. Mr. President, that is not the question. The question here is what is the best way to regulate and handle the whisky question—whether by high license and strict regulation or by prohibition. The question is whether or not you can enforce a prohibition law in a community that is opposed to it and impose upon the people of that community prohibition without ever allowing them to have a word to say about it.

Of course the direct issue here is whether or not the rule shall be suspended and this proposition placed before the Senate. I shall cast my vote in opposition to it for the reasons I have given. I am perfectly willing that this question shall be submitted to the people here. If it is their will to prohibit the licensing of the sale of whisky, then the law can be enforced, because the people are back of it and public sentiment will enforce it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question before he takes his seat. He has stated that he is in favor of local option. Does he mean to say by that that if he were in a county that voted as to whether or not there should be prohibition he would vote for prohibition?

Mr. JAMES. The Senator misconstrued my terms. In Kentucky local option means that each locality shall determine for itself how it stands.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator answer as to how he would vote in one of those localities?

Mr. JAMES. I have already voted. In my home county I voted in a local option election, and I voted dry, because the people there, the sentiment there, could handle the question and enforce the law.

The sentiment in my community under the local option law prohibited the sale of whisky in the county, and it was a community that has enforced the law. But just 160 or 170 miles from my county is the city of Memphis, where they have not enforced the law. Public sentiment favored the law and enforced it in one social unit; in the other it opposed it and violated it. The rule of the people is manifest by this comparison. It is better to let the people rule, for when you do they will sustain the law; if you do not, they will violate it. For in the last analysis public sentiment is the law. Every community is just as good as the public sentiment of the people makes it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am not going to take any time on this question, because I hope that a vote may be reached, but in view of the letter submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] I think it would not be inappropriate to place in the RECORD another editorial of the Secretary of State upon this subject. I placed one editorial in the RECORD a few days ago, and I shall from time to time place in the RECORD these editorials as they shall appear. I am sorry that the editorial which appears in the Commoner to-day, in which Secretary Bryan predicts the end of the liquor business in this country, has not as yet reached Washington, but it will be here during the day, and I shall then submit it. For the present I ask to have read, in answer to the letter read by the Senator from Kentucky, the part I have marked from an editorial in the Commoner of December, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

These questions are, however, at issue in the States, and as a Democrat I am interested in seeing the party take the moral side of both questions—the side that appeals to young men who are coming out of our schools and colleges and who assume the obligations of citizenship with a vision of better things. Every new issue causes a new alignment; in proportion as it is an important issue it brings about changes in party affiliations. If the Democratic Party takes the side of the brewer, the distiller, and the saloon keeper, it will lose many of its best members and it will draw to itself the worst element of the Republican Party, and the Democratic Party can not afford to invite an element that puts desire for drink before principles of government and the Nation's welfare. The more we have of that element, the more difficult it will be to draw to us those whose presence gives strength to a party and whose voice and example increase its numbers.

The Democratic Party can not be killed, even by association with so contaminating an influence as the liquor interests, but why should the party allow itself to be debauched and disgraced? It would take a decade or more to remove the odium that the representatives of the triple curse—the saloon, the gambling hall, and the brothel—will bring upon the party if they are allowed to dictate its policy. The result of the liquor fight in the late campaign is full of warning; if the Democratic Party fails to heed this warning to it, it does so at its own peril.

W. J. BRYAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question still is on concurring in the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the immediate question before the Senate has not been much discussed, but the real question, the question that reaches the ultimate end, has been debated. The question to be voted on is, as I understand it, Shall the report of the Committee on Rules be adopted? If this report should be adopted, then the way would be open for the Senator from Texas to offer his amendment to the appropriation bill under consideration prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in the District of Columbia. This is the subject which has been discussed by Senators and is the one dominant in the public mind. Therefore it devolves upon me as a representative in this body to express the views of my constituency upon the subject as well as my own. Happily on this occasion they are in accord.

I am opposed to the saloon, and I will go further and say that I am opposed to the sale of intoxicating liquors in any way. A large majority of the people in my State are opposed to the saloon and share my views on this subject. This is conclusively shown by the fact that only two days ago the legislature that has recently assembled in Alabama, by a three-fourths vote in each house, prohibited the sale and manufacture of liquor throughout the entire State. It is further demonstrated by the fact that there are 67 counties in Alabama, and 66 of those counties, by a vote of the people in the counties, have prohibited its sale and its manufacture.

But, Mr. President, I am not here alone to reflect the views of the people of Alabama. I am here to give expression, as far as I can, to the views of the people of the Nation. This is essentially a national question. The authority of Congress to exercise the police power of the Nation to protect the morals and safeguard the health of the people of the District of Columbia can not be doubted. The power is lodged there and it is lodged nowhere else. It devolves upon Congress to act, and if it does not act action can not be taken.

Are the people of the Nation affected by this question? Have they any responsibility resting upon them? Both these questions must be answered in the affirmative. They are vitally affected. The sovereignty of the District abides in them. They reside here in the persons of their representatives. The national life is centered here. The conditions existing naturally affect the efficiency of their representatives in the discharge of their duties. It is well for the people that the moral and social atmosphere in which their representatives live should be clean and pure; that their environment should be the best. When I speak of the people's representatives I do not mean to include only their representatives in Congress, but all those who are here at the behest of the people doing the work of and discharging the duties imposed upon them by the public. Surrounding them by proper conditions is conducive to a better and more faithful discharge of their duties.

The people of the entire Nation are deeply concerned in every officer and every employee of the Government, as well as the members of their families, to say nothing of the thousands of young men and young women they are sending here from their homes, in whom they have a personal interest. The lives of these young men and young women are to be made or marred by civic conditions existing in the District.

The people of the Nation are concerned in conditions existing here for other reasons. This is their Capital; thousands of them visit it annually, and to that extent become a part of the District's life. They are to be benefited, elevated, injured, or lowered by the social and moral atmosphere in which they are compelled to live while they are in the city. That atmosphere should be made conducive to their happiness and safety.

The people of the United States are concerned in this case for a greater and better reason than those I have given. They love their fellow men. Their desire to help and advance humanity is itself an all-sufficient reason for the interest they feel in the people of the District. In their action they are complying with the new commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

It is asserted, however, by some that the people of the District should determine the question. I take issue with this view. While the people of the District have a right to be heard on the subject, they have no right to control the situation. The question presented is whether the District shall control the Nation or whether the Nation shall control the District. There can be but one answer to this question. It answers itself.

Mr. President, it is not necessary for me on this occasion to point to the vice involved in the liquor traffic or to assert that the saloon is a thing of evil. That is admitted on all hands. No Senator in this debate has assumed the responsibility of defending the saloon or of denying its evil effects on the community. So far they affirmatively admit that the presence of the saloon is harmful in its effects on society and that no good whatever results from it. The saloon has no defender on this floor, none who will even apologize for it. The only contention is that prohibition will not prohibit. If this contention is conceded, it furnishes the strongest reason that can be offered why saloons should be driven from the District. For if we have in our midst an evil, an admitted evil, that is capable of combating and defying the Federal Government, then we had better make the issue and settle the question. If the Federal Government is to be powerless and helpless when met by this foe of society, this enemy of mankind, then the people of the United States had better know it and adopt some other means of conquering a foe that is engaged in a life-and-death struggle with them.

Mr. President, I think this is the opportunity, the best opportunity, for the people of the United States to demonstrate whether prohibition laws can be enforced, as in the District of Columbia the entire influence and power of the Federal Government can be brought to bear in favor of its enforcement.

Conditions in the District of Columbia are not comparable with those in the various counties of the States. In the counties the people elect the officers who are to enforce the law, and if the people are opposed to the law they will elect officers who are with them in sentiment, but in the District of Columbia the officers are selected by the Government itself. They are responsible to the Government. They will be held accountable by the Government, and when the Government is engaged in a struggle in which it is to be determined whether it shall be supreme or shall fall limp and helpless at the feet of the saloon, the Government will see to it that officers are appointed who will enforce the law and then see to it that the law is enforced.

Mr. President, I am in favor of adopting the report of the committee and thereby give the people the opportunity of accepting the challenge of the liquor forces that they are more powerful in the District of Columbia than the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Hardwick	Overman	Smith, Md.
Borah	Hitchcock	Page	Smoot
Brady	Hollis	Perkins	Stephenson
Bryan	Hughes	Pittman	Stone
Burleigh	James	Poindexter	Swanson
Chamberlain	Johnson	Pomerene	Thomas
Chilton	Jones	Ransdell	Thompson
Clapp	Kern	Reed	Thornton
Colt	Lane	Root	Tillman
Culberson	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Townsend
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Walsh
du Pont	Lippitt	Sherman	White
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Williams
Gallinger	Myers	Shively
Gore	Norris	Simmons

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to inquire from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]—or if he is not present, perhaps the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] can tell me—if it is contemplated that we are going to adjourn prior to 2 o'clock?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand it is contemplated that we shall take a recess later this afternoon.

Mr. KERN entered the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Indiana is here.

Mr. KERN. I beg pardon, I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. NORRIS. I inquire whether it is contemplated that the Senate is to adjourn prior to 2 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. No, sir; it is contemplated that we shall take a recess by 4 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, in anticipation that the amendment which I propose to offer can not be reached to-day, I ask unanimous consent to have read for the information of the Senate and printed in the RECORD an amendment to the pending bill that I expect to offer later on.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is it an amendment to the amendment that is pending?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is an amendment to the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I wish to have it printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate. I expect to offer it when the pending amendment and other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does it relate to general legislation?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does not relate to general legislation, but to special legislation.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska if he knows of any reason why a vote should not be had on this bill within the next two hours?

Mr. NORRIS. A vote can be had; then I shall offer the amendment when we get to it; but I rather anticipated from the way this debate has been going on that we would not finish the bill to-day.

Mr. KERN. I understand the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] wishes to speak, as he informs me, about three-quarters of an hour or an hour. I am not advised that any other Senator will speak.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, no harm will be done by having the amendment now read. I only ask to have it read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska for the reading of the amendment? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be received and read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after line 6, page 30, to add the following:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to construct two public bathhouses and convert portions of the tidal basin in Potomac Park into public bathing beaches as outlined in Senate Document No. 593, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and for the beginning of such improvement the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, during the discussion yesterday I had a very pleasant thought from the fact that partisanship was not suggested in any way, shape, or form in the discussion. I had at first thought I would refer to that fact if I got recognition to speak; but as the debate further proceeded and no reference was made to partisanship or party affiliations, I had decided not even to refer to the matter at all, not even to that fact. So I regret that to-day, for the first time in the discussion of this question, has partisanship cropped out; that some of our friends on the other side of the aisle have apparently appealed to party ties and to party support to defeat the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules, and that the President has been brought into the matter in one way or another. I do not think that ought to have been done; and I hope that this side of the Chamber will not be charged with filibustering if we do refer to some of the matters which have been brought up by our friends on the other side, although they may not be exactly germane to the question at issue before the Senate.

I really see no occasion for the suggestions of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that this side of the Chamber has been filibustering. I know that he disavowed any such charge against us, and of course I accept his disavowal; yet the language used would lead the ordinary layman to conclude that the Senator had in mind the idea that we had been in a way purposely and needlessly delaying the passage of the pending appropriation bill. That would be of the nature, of course, of a filibuster. Anyone who will read the RECORD, however, will come to the conclusion that the debate thus far has been perfectly legitimate, and it has been.

The Senator from North Carolina suggested that more discussion had been had with reference to appropriation bills this session than ever before. I want to suggest to the Senator that we on this side of the Chamber have more of an excuse now to consider appropriation bills very carefully than ever before. The "captain of the team" on the other side of the Chamber made a speech in Indianapolis a few days ago in which he gloried in the fact—at least he claimed it was a fact—that his "team" had been able to slip into a bill a particular provision that the Republicans knew nothing about. He seemed to take much satisfaction out of the fact that under his captaincy his "team" had been able, to use a common phrase, to "put it over" on our side of the Chamber. I have heard of "jokers" in bills, and that has always been my idea of what a joker is—something slipped in without consideration, without notification or advice to the other side, slipped in quietly and surreptitiously and in the dark, without discussion, without education with reference to the matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. JONES. Oh, certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would the Senator mind quoting the exact language of the President? Unless I read his address wrong, he did not use any such language as the Senator is using.

Mr. JONES. I am not pretending to quote the language of the President.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has used the words "slipped in surreptitiously."

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the President used those words. If he did not, he used words that mean that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will get the address.

Mr. JONES. I shall be very glad if the Senator will quote the President's exact language. I dislike to take the time of the Senate to stop now and look up the President's message and examine it to find just what the exact language was; but I do know that the President expressed an exultant note, an exultant feeling, that something had been put into the bill that the Republicans did not know anything about and did not "get on to it" until after the bill had been passed and enacted into law.

Mr. CLAPP and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Minnesota interrupted first, and I yield to him.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to say that the only person who was oblivious as to the contents of the bill with reference to the proposition to afford a junket was the President himself. The matter was fully discussed by the committee, and I think on the floor, and objected to on the ground that we had already provided either one or two just such junketing trips during that session of Congress. If that constitutes a tariff commission, we now have two, if not three, tariff commissions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is my memory correct or is it at fault? Did not the President use the words "Woodrow chuckled" in connection with that matter?

Mr. JONES. I think so; since the Senator has refreshed my memory that is my recollection. But, of course, the address has been put into the RECORD, and it will speak for itself as to whether or not the President used that language.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. I shall do so in just a moment.

The President certainly did chuckle audibly in his address at what he thought had been "put over" on this side of the Chamber. Now I will yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, a fair interpretation of the President's speech would be that he was surprised that many Republicans should now be clamoring to pass in Congress something that had already been passed—legislation for the appointment of a commission that could investigate matters connected with the tariff; and he chuckled that he had knowledge enough to know that if that were wise, it had been provided for, and other people did not know it. There was no evidence that it had been done surreptitiously. As I understand, it passed the other House, then came over here in the House bill, and was discussed in the Senate. I have no doubt the President was surprised that some Republicans had been trying to get legislation that had already been provided for.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I merely wish to remark that if one-tenth of the presidential crimes were committed which Taft charged to Roosevelt and which Roosevelt charged to Taft, then, if a Democratic President has done nothing worse than to "chuckle," we are, indeed, progressing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have here the exact words the President used, and they do not justify, in my judgment, any such characterization as has been made of them either by the Senator from Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. JONES. I shall be very glad to have the Senator read the language.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well, sir, if the Senator will yield to me for that purpose I shall do so.

It is as follows:

That kind of science I do not care to know anything about, except enough to stop it. But if by scientific treatment of the tariff they mean adjustment to the actual trade conditions of America and the world, then I am with them; and I want to call their attention, for though they voted for it they apparently have not noticed it, to the fact that the bill which creates the new trade commission does that very thing. We were at pains to see that it was put in there. That commission is authorized and empowered to inquire into and report to Congress not only upon all the conditions of trade in this country, but upon the conditions of trade, the cost of manufacture, the cost of transportation—all the things that enter into the question of the tariff—in foreign countries as well as in the United States, and into all those questions of foreign combinations which affect international trade between Europe and the United States. It has the full powers which will guide Congress in the scientific treatment of questions of international trade. Being by profession a schoolmaster, I am glad to point that out to the class of uninstructed Republicans, though I have not always taught in the primary grade.

Mr. JONES. Of course the Senator can construe that language just as he pleases; I shall construe it as I understand it; and I think it bears out fully what I said a moment ago, that the President was exulting in the fact that he thought he had put something in this bill which the Republicans did not know anything about. He says substantially, "We put it in; we worked it out; we were at pains to see that it was put in there."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the President was merely expressing his deep regret at the ignorance of the uninstructed Republicans.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; that is true. Of course he used very dignified language in the address where he charged Senators on this side of the Chamber with being ignoramuses. He did not use the word "ignoramus"; I will admit that, but that is what he meant. I do not complain at his language. I suppose he honestly believed what he said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Mr. JONES. As my friend from Mississippi suggests, a rose by any other name would smell just as sweet.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to suggest that if the President has "put anything over" on anybody, it has been on the Democrats and not the Republicans. We have been earnestly favoring a tariff commission for a long time.

Mr. JONES. I think so. I have been wondering whether the President has come over to the policy of protection, because, according to the Democratic theory, a tariff commission is not needed, and you have always said so; so that if we do need a tariff commission and there was put in the bill a provision for a tariff commission to take into consideration the differences in the conditions of manufacture and in the cost of production as between this country and foreign countries, it has been put in to carry out a policy of the Republicans, a policy in which they believe. So that, as the Senator from California suggests, the President is probably 'putting something over" on his team, and it may be possible that when you get into caucus this afternoon you will have orders there to take up a protective tariff system, or something of that sort, to meet the present emergency; I do not know.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. Gladly.

Mr. REED. If the President has adopted a Republican policy, as the Senator insists, and has played directly into the hands of the Republicans, as the Senator insists, I should like to know what he is making all this noise about? He ought not to complain even at the Greeks bearing gifts.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not insisting that the President has done this; I am merely wondering if it is true. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that I would welcome the support of the President in behalf of protection; I will be glad if he does issue orders to his team to favor the protective system and put it into effect; and I believe that would more nearly insure the continuance of the Democratic Party in power than any other thing he could do. If he should follow the suggestion and recommendation of the Democratic national committeeman from the State of New York, things would not look so rosy for us Republicans as they do now. Nor am I complaining for his coming around to the Republican view.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I gladly yield to the Senator from Missouri

Mr. REED. I do not know for which wing of the Republican Party the Senator is speaking, whether he is speaking for the revitalized stand-pat element, which he and certain other Senators were condemning only a few months ago, or whether he is speaking for that moribund and rapidly shrinking animal known as the "Bull Moose"; but I can say to the Senator that there is nothing in the language of the President to indicate that he has in the slightest degree abandoned the Democratic doctrine—that taxation should only be levied for the support of the Government and that no government has the right to pick the pockets of all the people for the benefit of a few of the people, particularly when the few are wealthy corporations already grown too great and powerful.

The Senator fails to distinguish between a remark which indicates that a board has been created which has the power to gather certain data and information and an abandonment of a well-known national policy. The Senator seems to think that if the Democratic Party were to get information through this board it necessarily would employ it as he might employ it or as one branch of his party might employ it, for the purpose of ascertaining how much more they could take out of the pockets of the people and transfer into the coffers of some manufacturers.

I want to say to the Senator another thing in reply to his remark that we may get orders in our caucus this afternoon from the President. The Democratic caucus has not been taking orders from the President, and he has not been sending orders there. The Democratic conference will meet this afternoon and discuss propositions in its own way relating to the public business and will not be interfered with by anybody. The Senator can disabuse his mind of that, as he might well disabuse his mind of the thought that by distorting and twisting the plain language of the President, and after it has been read still standing for the distortion and insisting upon the twisting process—that by such means as that he will deceive anyone in the United States as to the intention or utterances of the President or will conceal his own purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my recollection is that in that address the President also, to a certain extent, divided the Democrats into classes; and I think he referred to some who were sitting on the brakes or the traces, or something like that, retarding the wagon or injuring the team and affecting the virility and the efficacy of the team. I do not know whether or not he placed the Senator from Missouri in that class, and I do not know whether or not the Senator from Missouri is really authorized to speak for the President, but I do know that he could not have a better spokesman than the Senator from Missouri, and I say that very sincerely.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I gladly yield to the Senator, although I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not charge me with filibustering by yielding to his friends on the other side, because I am not. I am really anxious to get along.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, of course I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Missouri, but the Senator from Missouri seems to be in doubt about what the Senator from Washington is trying to do. I am not in any doubt about it. It has been apparent to me for some time that the Senator from Washington was trying to play the favorite Republican game recently, of setting up a man of straw and knocking him down, and feel it is a little ungracious for my Democratic colleagues to interfere with the Senator in that delightful Republican game.

Mr. JONES. Now, I gladly yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I only rose to say that I do not pretend to be the authorized spokesman of the President of the United States. I never made such a pretension, and I do not know of any other person who is authorized to act as his spokesman. Of all the men in this country to-day who are abundantly able to speak for themselves, Woodrow Wilson stands preeminently at the head; but when the plain language uttered by any man in public place is sought to be distorted and a sinister meaning given to it, I have the right as a Member of the Senate and as an humble member of the Democratic Party, which I have always been and always will be, to direct attention to the fact that the language employed by the President is not susceptible of the construction sought to be placed upon it.

I would not have taken this much time if the Senator had been the first man who had raised this construction. The leader of the minority in the House of Representatives is quoted in the public press as having uttered very similar sentiments. The truth about the matter is that the speech of the President evidently struck home, and there has been a good deal of squirming ever since, and I make the prediction that the "galled jade" will wince quite frequently in the future.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Missouri that I do not feel like the "galled jade." I would vote this minute to print that speech and send it to every man, woman, and child in the United States. It would be the best document for Republicans that could be sent out. The Senator suggests that we have distorted the meaning of the President's address. Well, practically every newspaper that came out the morning after that speech was delivered had big headlines calling attention to what the President had "put over" on the Republicans; and I am satisfied that every man who will read that speech and every man who read that speech at that time has the impression that the President was really delighted that he had apparently obtained something that the Republicans apparently had not "gotten on to."

I do not say that he suggests that it had been done insidiously, or anything of that sort, but that it had been put in; it had not been called to our attention; we did not know about it; it was something they had gotten in, and the President was delighted at the dexterity of his "team" in working out this matter without Republicans knowing about it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, does the Senator think that the President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. JONES. Certainly, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, although I am sorry to take so much time.

Mr. JAMES. I shall take only a moment. I want to suggest to the Senator from Washington that I do not believe the President would claim that he is able to put anything over the Republican Party. Since it put Taft over Roosevelt, I think they are adept in that regard, so that when it comes to "putting things over" I do not think anybody claims to have anything on the Republican Party.

Mr. JONES. I think the President was really delighted at the thought that he had done so.

Mr. JAMES. I think when it comes to "slipping things over" and "putting things over" nobody claims to excel the Republican Party.

Mr. JONES. I think the President was really delighted that he, a schoolmaster who had not taught very much in the primary grades, in the kindergarten, had been able to do something which he thought showed great dexterity; but I do not care to go into the proposition the Senator from Kentucky suggests. That would look like filibustering, it seems to me, and that matter has absolutely nothing to do with the matter before the Senate or with the question I am discussing. Should I do so, the Senator from North Carolina would have some cause to complain.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the President's Indianapolis speech was justified. It is true he used the word "Republicans" as though all Democrats were familiar with the provision of the trade commission bill to which he referred and that no one else was familiar with it. He did that probably for political purposes. The vice of his speech—and I say it freely and frankly—was the intimation that he knew more about what was going on in connection with legislation than Senators knew. He simply used the word "Republicans" to relieve himself, as I firmly believe, from any suggestion of exulting over his political colleagues.

As a matter of fact, the committee knew the provision was in the bill; they discussed it in the committee; they discussed the fact that similar provisions for similar trips to Europe had been put in other legislation; but still it was thought well enough to leave the provision in the trade commission bill. Every member of the committee was aware—and, if my memory serves me right, it was pointed out here on the floor—of that fact, and I do not think the President of the United States has a right to go out and make a speech which casts a reflection not only upon the Senate but upon the members of the committee having the bill in charge.

So far as the politics of it is concerned, I do not care two straws. I never was much of a partisan, and the older I get the less of a partisan I am, but I was a member of the committee having the trade commission bill in charge, and I have no hesitation in standing here and saying that, either intentionally or unintentionally, the President created a false impression as to the knowledge of the members of that committee as to what was in the bill and the scope of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri said that the Democratic caucus would not take orders from the captain of the team. I know that the Senator from Missouri will not take orders from the captain of the team, but I am not so sure about the caucus. As I understand, the caucus determines its action through a majority vote, and if a majority gets its orders it will probably obey. I doubt if the President would give to the Senator from Missouri the encomium that he did with reference to a couple of other very distinguished Senators in this body. I do not know whether the President stays awake nights with reference to what the Senator from Missouri may do or not. Possibly he does not; but I know the Senator from Missouri acts in accordance with his honest judgment on the floor of the Senate, so far as that is concerned, and the President knows it would do no good to lay awake nights about what he will do.

I did not expect to create all this discussion over this little matter. I simply referred to this suggestion of the President for this purpose—and I should like the attention of the Senator from North Carolina, not at all for the purpose of involving him in what he thinks is a filibuster, but to suggest to him the very reason why I made that suggestion about the President's reference, and this is really what I have been trying to get a chance to say for some time and the only reason I referred to it.

I have the impression, and a great many people have the impression, that the President took some delight in putting something into the Trade Commission bill, or that something was gotten in, that we Republicans did not know about. Now, I am afraid in the case of these appropriation bills that the team, under the leadership and orders of the captain, may try to slip in some more things that we do not know anything about. If they will do it once, they will do it again. Therefore, as one Republican—I have not talked with others—I feel that we ought to scrutinize these bills very carefully, because while, to use the language of the President, we are "ignorant," we might stumble on to something that would injuriously affect the people. So it seems to me that we are justified in scanning very carefully and very closely every measure that our Democratic friends bring in here to see whether they are getting in something else that they can boast about afterwards as something that we did not know anything about. We ought to watch the bills.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he has read the bill.

Mr. JONES. I certainly have.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did the Senator move to strike anything out of it? Did he find anything bad in it?

Mr. JONES. Why, Mr. President, I am a humble member of the committee that has charge of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. The Senator had opportunity to see it when it was before the committee, did he not?

Mr. JONES. Oh, the Senator from North Carolina can not point to any time when I have been delaying the District of Columbia bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not objecting to the Senator's moving to strike out anything that is in the bill. What I am objecting to is suspending the rules for the purpose of putting on the bill some general legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is one appropriation bill before one of the Senate committees now that contains new legislation that, if properly considered, will take all the rest of the time of the Senate this session. You will bring that bill in here before very long and you will want to pass it without any consideration and without any discussion. Do you think we ought to let you do it? I do not. I do not believe, for the good of the country, that we ought to let you put in these things without considering them. There is a whole lot of legislation in that bill. Whether it is good legislation or not I do not know yet, but it ought to be considered and it will be considered. Senators on the other side rather reflect upon the intelligence of the people of this country if they think they can make the people believe that they ought to be permitted to pass legislation through this body without consideration and without discussion. The mere fact that your captain says a thing is right does not end it.

The Senator says we have a program to put through. I have heard about it. I was told some time ago, or I saw in the public press, that the Democratic caucus had met and had decided upon a program, and that what they had decided to do was to pass the appropriation bills; that all other legislation would be laid aside in order to get the appropriation bills through, and then, if they had time, of course, they would take up other matters. Now, I understand that a Democratic caucus is to be called this afternoon. I have not the honor to be a member of it. I do not know why it is called, but I suppose it is to get the team together to try to change the program, and possibly adopt another program.

Probably I ought not to suggest that this caucus may be called upon the suggestion, possibly, if not the order, of the captain of the team. I suppose that the conferences of a team are usually called by the leader and by the captain or at least at his suggestion; so possibly the captain has called the Democratic team together in caucus in order to change the program and adopt a new program and endeavor to put it through. The secret caucus seems to be the place to do things now rather than in the open Senate.

I do not know whether it is true or not, but we hear it said that there are certain measures that must be put through. I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina, however, that he will know when I am filibustering. He will know it without any suggestion of a deduction. I want to say to him, however, that the measures he proposes to put through will not be put through without discussion and without consideration, and that discussion and consideration are not filibustering. There will be legitimate discussion and legitimate consideration, and you may call it what you please.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator need not remind me that I will know when he is filibustering. I have seen him in action once before, when the little matter of a clerk was involved.

Mr. JONES. Yes; and that was taken care of, too. [Laughter.] Whenever I want to filibuster again it will be right along those same lines, and it will be even a more effective one than that. So I do not want the Senator to conclude, because I yield to my Democratic friends on the other side to interrupt me, that I am engaged in a filibuster, because I am not. I want to be very courteous to my friends over there, and I wanted to call attention to these matters. I would not have referred to them at all; in fact, they never occurred to me until my friend from North Carolina spoke. If anybody is responsible for the use of this time, I shall have to lay the responsibility upon the Senator from North Carolina; and I will tell him privately what I have told him so many times before with reference to various bills in which he has been interested.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] says, "Let us have a referendum for the people of the District of Columbia," and yet he is going to vote to prevent it. He is going to vote to shut us out of any opportunity to consider a referendum on this proposition for the people of the District of Columbia. He is going to vote against the suspension of the rules. If he would suspend the rules, then this amendment would be subject to amendment. He could provide for his referendum and submit it to the people of the District of Columbia; but in one breath denouncing us for not having these things referred to the District of Columbia, in the next breath he announces that he is going to vote against the suspension of the rules.

Mr. President, I am going to come now to what I intended to say if I had had an opportunity yesterday, or to what I would have said already to-day except for my friend from North Carolina.

It is a significant fact, which I trust the country will not overlook, that not a Senator on either side of this Chamber rises in his place and defends the liquor traffic or points to any good that it does or ever has done. No industry can long exist under such a condition as that, especially an industry that exists to-day only by sufferance. But, as has been said, the real issue upon which the Senate is now to vote is not prohibition for the District of Columbia, but whether the Senate will permit itself to vote upon that question directly. By a majority vote the other day, which, Mr. President, the majority to-morrow, upon any other proposition, could reverse by a majority vote, it was decided that it will take a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules of the Senate so that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be in order when presented.

I do not share the pessimism of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] or the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. I will not believe until the vote is cast that one-third of the Senate will say that a vote shall be denied by the Senate upon such a vital question as this. Every Senator who believes in prohibition will surely give the Senate an opportunity so to express itself. Every Senator who believes in the will of the majority being expressed in legislation will surely vote to give such majority a chance to express itself; and I do not now believe that one-third of the Senate is in favor of refusing the majority this right. We shall see and the country shall see whether the Senate itself will deny to itself the opportunity to vote directly and squarely upon the merits of this proposition, in which the people are interested as in no other question that has agitated the people of this country.

This amendment is in a sense germane to this bill. This bill deals entirely with the District of Columbia; and with all due respect to the opinion of the able Senator who now presides over this body, I do not believe the District of Columbia appropriation bill is a general appropriation bill within the meaning and intent of the rule that has been invoked in this case. It is not a general appropriation bill. We are sitting here as the common council of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The speaker having referred to the Presiding Officer, will he permit the Presiding Officer to inquire, if that is the case, why he wants to suspend the rules?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I did not present or suggest this motion to suspend the rules, but I am glad to support the Senator who did. He submits it regularly and in accordance with the rules of this body. That issue has been presented. But I submit, in view of the suggestion made by the learned Senator from Montana, that this is not a general appropriation bill within the intent and meaning of the language of that rule. I believe in that rule. I believe that it serves a good purpose. I do not believe that means, however, that it never should be suspended, even in regard to general appropriation bills. But the argument that we should not now vote to suspend this rule because of the necessity of such a rule as that with reference to general appropriation bills is certainly weakened by reason of the fact that this is a bill that applies solely and only to the District of Columbia.

This bill provides for the maintenance of the government of the District of Columbia and the care of its people. The plea that this is legislation upon an appropriation bill does not have the force against this amendment that it would have against a bill covering the whole United States. This amendment relates only, as I said, to the District of Columbia. It involves a question that has been debated in this Chamber, and especially out of this Chamber, more than any other question that agitates the American people. Every Senator is thoroughly informed upon it and upon the conditions here, and has definite and certain views regarding it. If this amendment is made in order, we can discuss it just as ably and vote upon it just as intelligently as if it were presented in another bill.

I want to call the attention of some of those representing the liquor interests who have honored us with their presence in the gallery to-day to the fact that Senators have announced on this floor that while they are going to vote against the suspension of this rule they are with us on the proposition as a separate bill, and that not only do not Senators rise on either side and say anything good of this traffic, but they rise and indignantly repudiate what they think are suggestions that they are friendly to this interest, and assert that upon a separate bill they will vote in a way that will abolish this traffic; and such a bill will pass before very long, if not as an amendment here, then as a separate measure.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] suggests that we should have a referendum. I shall be glad to meet that question when it comes up; and if, as I said awhile ago, he will vote to suspend this rule and make this amendment in order, then he will have an opportunity to submit that amendment, and we will gladly consider it, vote upon it, and pass it or reject it as the majority of the Senate may deem wise.

The conduct of the liquor interests in the District of Columbia fully justifies the action proposed to the Senate to-day. It has defied Congress; it has nullified its laws; it deserves no leniency at our hands. I have some facts that I want to call to the attention of the Senate which I believe will appeal to the fair and impartial judgment of the ambassadors of the sovereign States of the Union representing not only those States but the people of those States. In order to do this I must go back a couple of years; and now I am going to present some facts that I hope the Senators will consider, and that I think ought to be considered, while we are determining the action we must take with reference to this matter.

Two years ago we passed a general excise law for the District of Columbia. Why did we do it? We did it because for 19 or more years the District of Columbia had been going on under a condition of things that was a disgrace to any city of the Union. Men and women had been knocking at the doors of Congress asking for legislation to better conditions. They did not come to the Senate and ask for a prohibition measure then. They came to us and asked that we might pass a law that would improve conditions, that would cut the saloons out of residential districts, that would take them away from the mouths of the slums and the dwelling alleys of this city, that would remove the great congestion which existed in certain localities, that would insure the better conduct of those places where the business was carried on, and that would limit the number of saloons. A subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia held hearings for a week. We looked into the conditions carefully, and we reported a bill, not an amendment, for passage through this body. That bill was passed as an amendment on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. We could not get unanimous consent for its consideration in this body. We did not ask to suspend the rules of this body. With reference to that measure we followed another course. We followed a course that the rules provide, just as the Senator from Texas has followed a course that the rules provide. The rules of this body provide that any point of order made to any amendment offered to an appropriation bill or otherwise may be submitted by the presiding officer to the Senate for its decision, on the theory, I suppose, that the Senate is an independent, self-governing body, and that whatever the Senate says it wants to do it can do. When the District of Columbia bill came up I offered that bill as an amendment to the District of Columbia bill. The point of order was raised. The presiding officer submitted the question to the Senate, and the Senate said: "It is in order," and adopted it, and it passed through this body as a part of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Why, Mr. President, did we take that course? We had passed it through this body. I was mistaken a moment ago. We had passed it through this body as a separate measure. We did get it up as a separate measure and passed it. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says that makes a difference. No, Mr. President; the fact that a bill of general legislation has passed the Senate does not make it in order upon an appropriation bill per se; not at all. It may have some little influence with Senators, of course, and very properly so; but why was it, Mr. President, that we found it necessary to offer that bill as an amendment to an appropriation bill? I want to tell the Senate, and go just as far as I can in a parliamentary way to do so, and that will give one reason, at any rate, why it is necessary to place some of these things upon an appropriation bill.

We passed that excise bill through the Senate. It went to a committee of another body, and there it lay for almost a year. Why? I do not know, Mr. President, but the representatives of the liquor people said, and made their boasts, that that bill never should come from that committee. I do not charge that they used improper influences, but I state as a fact that, from the time the bill went into that committee until it was placed as a rider upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill, that committee never had a quorum to do business.

That is one reason why the Senate, in dealing with a question that relates to this traffic in the District of Columbia, must adopt methods of this kind in order to accomplish what they think ought to be accomplished. These men had made their boast that they had the bill killed; that it never could become the law. That is the reason why we proposed to put it upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill in the Senate. It was put on in the manner I have stated; and then, Mr. President, it may be unparliamentary for me to say that a special rule was brought in to be passed in another body in order to force that amendment to conference, but it failed of passage, and therefore I will not say it. [Laughter.] It may be unparliamentary for me to say that in another body, for days and even weeks, the District of Columbia appropriation bill was held up in the hope that they could secure enough votes to send that amendment to conference, where they hoped to kill it, and therefore I shall not say it. [Laughter.] Finally, Mr. President, it may also be unparliamentary for me to say that when they saw they could not get it into conference they agreed upon a substitute that carried all the important provisions of the amendment that we put on, and that then it was sent to conference with the understanding that it would be agreed to, and therefore I will not say it. [Laughter.]

That is the way, Mr. President, we had to proceed to pass the excise law of the District of Columbia which we have on the statute books now. That is the course we had to take to pass a regulatory measure.

Mr. President, what is wrong? Why the necessity for this legislation in view of that legislation? Well, Mr. President, the results which have been brought about under that law justify this action.

I wish to read a couple of resolutions which were adopted some time ago. One of the resolutions is by the headquarters committee of the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia; and, my friend, these are the substantial people of this country. These are among the best men and the best women of this country. These are not men and women who are urging that we do nothing to curtail the traffic for which no man stands on this floor and says a good word. These are some of the men and women who are especially interested in the homes of the country and in the boys and girls of the country. Resolutions passed by them are worthy of consideration by this honorable body. What do they say? They say:

NOVEMBER 5, 1914.

At a meeting of the headquarters committee of the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia, held at the office of the president of the league the afternoon of Thursday, November 5, 1914, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That in behalf of its constituency of churches and other local organizations of the best citizens of the District, the league indignantly protests against the recent grant by the excise board of 100 or more licenses contrary to the spirit of the Jones-Works law, and many of them clearly contrary to its letter."

Adopted by headquarters committee, November, 1914.

Then another resolution, adopted December 7 by the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia, is as follows:

DECEMBER 7, 1914.

Whereas Congress, by enacting the Jones-Works excise law, endeavored to relieve the deplorable saloon conditions in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas the excise board, charged with the administration of said law, has apparently ignored every prohibitive section, in part at least, in the granting of licenses, excepting the one limiting the number of saloons to 300, and certain other sections fixing certain prohibition zones, such as the 1,000-feet zone around the navy yard and Marine Barracks grounds; and

Whereas wholesale licenses are being granted in residential districts; and

Whereas such actions of the excise board bid fair to lead to a great public scandal; and

Whereas the liquor traffic, neither here nor elsewhere, obeys the law: Be it

Resolved, That the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia this 7th day of December, 1914, expresses its indignation at the existing conditions of excise affairs, and hereby announces its determination to work from now on for absolute prohibition as the only effective solution of the liquor problem in this District.

I have some facts here that I propose to present to the Senate which I think fully substantiate those resolutions, and which I think ought to be heard by Senators in reaching a determination as to what course they will take with reference to this proposition.

Mr. President, not for the purpose of hearing what I have to say, but for the purpose, if possible, of getting the facts to the Senators, who must pass on this proposition, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Gronna	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Hardwick	Owen	Smoot
Bryan	Hitchcock	Page	Stephenson
Burleigh	Hollis	Perkins	Sterling
Burton	Hughes	Pittman	Stone
Chamberlain	Jones	Ransdell	Sutherland
Chilton	Kenyon	Reed	Swanson
Clapp	Kern	Root	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Saulsbury	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Tillman
Colt	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Vardaman
Culberson	Lippitt	Sherman	Walsh
Cummins	Lodge	Shields	White
Dillingham	McLean	Shively	Williams
Fletcher	Nelson	Simmons	Works
Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN]. I desire this statement to stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as I stated, I called this quorum not that Senators might hear me speak, but in order that I might present some facts to them that I think will appeal to them in connection with the consideration of this measure. I wish to call their attention now to certain facts.

In the excise law that we passed under the conditions I have just described there is this provision:

No saloon, barroom, or other place wherein intoxicating liquor is sold at retail or wholesale, other than hotels and clubs, shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 400 feet of any public schoolhouse, or a now located or established college, or university, or within 400 feet of any now established house of religious worship, measured between the nearest entrances to each by the shortest course of travel between such places of business and such public schoolhouse, college, or university, or established house of religious worship.

Mr. President, there have been allowed licenses for 18 saloons in violation of that provision of the law. I have here a list of these saloons. One of them is the saloon of John J. Allen, 807 North Capitol Street, by a careful measurement 397 feet from St. Aloysius Church. The saloon of Michael Daly, 1319 Seventh Street, 397 feet from the Church of the Immaculate Conception by long measurement, 347 by the shortest and most direct route, as provided in the statute. John D. O'Conner, 918 Ninth Street, 328 feet from the College of Pharmacy, 375 feet by the longer measurement. August H. Plugge, 1317 Seventh Street NW., 329 feet from the Church of the Immaculate Conception, 379 feet by the longer measurement, measured by right angles. Let me ask permission to insert this list in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The list referred to is as follows:

The following-named saloon keepers were granted licenses for the year beginning November 1, 1914, for places located within 400 feet of houses of religious worship, public schoolhouses, colleges, or universities, according to measurements made by "the shortest course of travel" from entrance to entrance. Some are within the prescribed distance by longer measurements:

John J. Allen, 807 North Capitol Street, 397 feet to St. Aloysius Church.

Michael Daly, 1319 Seventh Street NW., 397 feet to Church of Emaculate Conception by long measurement, 347 feet to Church of Emaculate Conception by short measurement.

John D. O'Conner, 918 Ninth Street NW., 328 feet to College of Pharmacy, 375 feet longer measurement.

August H. Plugge, 1317 Seventh Street NW., 329 feet of Emaculate Conception Church, 379 feet by longer way (right angles).

John J. Brosnan, 506 Four-and-a-half Street SW., 364 feet to Jewish Church on E Street.

James J. O'Donnell, 333 Pennsylvania Avenue SE., 385 feet to Metropolitan Presbyterian Church.

Patrick J. McDonald, 643 Pennsylvania Avenue SE., 364 feet to Wallach Public School.

John G. Graff, 222 Seventh Street SE., 393 feet to Eastern High School.

W. J. and Jeremiah Costello, 600 G Street NW., within 100 feet of Greek Catholic Church.

Margaret Casey, 114 H Street NW., within 200 feet of public school.

John T. O'Day, 921 Ninth Street NW., 367 feet to College of Pharmacy.

John F. Schriner, 730 Fourteenth Street NW., 336 feet to New York Avenue Church, New York Avenue entrance; 375 feet to New York Avenue Church, H Street entrance (measured at right angles).

Mary T. Schulz, 607 G Street NW., within 200 feet of Greek Church.

John F. Killeen, 1314 Wisconsin Avenue NW., 364 feet of Dumbarton Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

Charles H. Morris, 2029 K Street NW., 330 feet of Stevens Public School.

Robert H. Snook, 825 Seventh Street NW., 389 feet of Calvary Baptist Church.

Frank C. Poch, 900 Four-and-a-half Street SW., 393 feet to public schoolhouse.

Hugh F. Harvey, 1913 Pennsylvania Avenue NW., 340 feet to Union Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. JONES. I wish to call attention to the last one on the list, and that is the saloon of Hugh F. Harvey, 1913 Pennsylvaia Avenue NW., 340 feet to the Union Methodist Episcopal Church. I shall refer to Mr. Harvey a little later on.

Then, Mr. President, there is another provision in this excise law. It reads as follows:

Hereafter no license shall be granted for the establishment or maintenance of a barroom—

I invite the careful attention of Senators to the consideration of this language:

Hereafter no license shall be granted for the establishment or maintenance of a barroom or other place for the sale of intoxicating liquors, otherwise than in sealed packages and not to be drunk on the premises, in any residence portion of the District of Columbia; and it shall be the duty of the excise board to determine in the case of each application for license whether the location where the barroom is to be located is or is not within the business portion of the District, and if not the license shall be denied; and the excise board is hereby authorized and required to determine in each case what is so far devoted to business as to constitute it a business street or section.

Mr. President, when we framed that law we recognized the fact that it was pretty broad language, and that it gave this board a great deal of discretion in determining whether a section was a business section or a residential section. So in order to make certain the carrying out of what we had in mind we put in this language. Listen!

Provided, That no license shall be granted for any saloon or barroom on any side of any square, block, or tract of land where less than 50 per cent of the foot frontage, not including saloons or hotels and clubs having barroom licenses under this section, is used for business purposes; nor shall intoxicating liquors be sold at wholesale outside of the business districts as above provided.

In other words, Mr. President, the plain meaning of that language is that even if they say that a section is a business section they can not grant a license for a saloon or barroom where less than 50 per cent of the frontage, without counting hotels or clubs, is occupied by business houses. What have they done? The excise board have adopted a proviso without any authority of law, saying, "Provided, This restriction shall not refer to clubs and hotels." What authority have they to legislate? The law says that no license shall be granted to a saloon or barroom under certain conditions. What have they done? They have granted licenses in violation of that provision to 62 sellers of liquor in the District of Columbia. I know one square of my own personal knowledge where a barroom license has been granted and where there is not a single business house fronting on the square except the drug store on the corner.

Mr. President, I do not know how many more are like that, but the statement I have has been prepared by those who have given the matter very careful investigation and study. I believe we can rely upon the statement they have prepared.

I ask that this list of 62 licenses granted in violation of this provision may be inserted without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

The Anti-Saloon League's careful investigation shows that the following barroom licenses were granted for the license year beginning November 1, 1914, on nonbusiness streets or in residence districts, contrary to the evident intent and purpose of the law:

Louise Gordon, 407 Q Street NW.; Theodore G. Stoner, 206 Seventh Street SW.; John T. Bronson, 614 Eleventh Street SW.; Mary A. Solan, 1003 Seventh Street NW.; Paul Allen, 2 N Street NE.; Patrick Raffery, 225 Eleventh Street NE.; Dennis J. O'Connell, 411 Four-and-a-half Street SW.; Gustave Brahler, 410 E Street NE.; Patrick J. Callen, 238 Second Street NW.; John Morris, 1610 U Street NW.; Peter Loftus, 329 Thirteen-and-a-half Street NW.; Austin Loftus, 302 N Street NW.; John E. Mergner, 415 East Capitol Street; Daniel F. Driscoll, 107 H Street NW.; John J. Sullivan, 1331 Thirty-fifth Street NW.; Michael J. O'Donoghue, 701 I Street SW.; Metropolitan Club, 1700 H Street NW.; Army and Navy Club, 1627 I Street NW.; Patrick J. McDonald, 643 Pennsylvania Avenue SE.; Henry C. Hibbs, 2000 K Street NW.; Lena Morgenweck, 12 Fourth Street NE.; Thomas J. Leonard, Anacostia; University Club, 900 Fifteenth Street NW.; Anna A. E. Klotz, 1708 G Street NW.; Patrick O'Donohue, 908 Fourth Street NW.; Bridget Leech, 1847 L Street NW.; Charles W. Edwards, 491 Missouri Avenue NW.; Daniel Scanlon, 105 H Street NW.; Stoneleigh Court, 1019 Connecticut Avenue NW.; David Cohen, 118 First Street NW.; Francis X. Cox, 1618 U Street NW.; John H. Harris, 15 Massachusetts Avenue NW.; Jeremiah Costello, 521 First Street SW.; The Portner apartment house, Fifteenth and U Streets NW.; Commercial Club, 1634 I Street NW.; Mary Sullivan, 73 I Street SE.; Daniel Doody, 1312 North Capitol Street; Mary E. Frank, 319 G Street NW.; Elks Club, 919 H Street NW.; Michael E. Buckley, 2028 M Street NW.; Hotel Gordon, 916 Sixteenth Street NW.; Congress Hall Hotel, 233 New Jersey Avenue SE.; Harry Winninger, 631 Pennsylvania Avenue SE.; John D. Kelliher, 1258 Water Street SW.; Washington Saengerbund (Inc.), 314 C Street NW.; Cairo apartment house, 1615 Q Street NW.; Capital Park Hotel, North Capitol and E Streets NW.; Luke J. Kearney, 1811 L Street NW.; Charles H. Morris, 2029 K Street NW.; Hugh J. McGinness, 1001 New York Avenue NW.; Charles Wolf, 1202 Water Street SW.; George F. Neitzey, 1106 Water Street SW.; John J. Madden, 401 Four-and-a-half Street SW.; Charles C. Leavens, corner New Jersey Avenue and C Street SE.; Walter Spauls, 2012 K Street NW.; William J. Boyle, 601 Massachusetts Avenue NW.; Patrick Smyth, 101 D Street SW.; The Monticello Club, 1301 Fourth Street NW.; Century Club, 815 Vermont Avenue NW.; Peter J. Lynagh, 523 Seventh Street SW.; Terminal Co., 44 G Street NE.; Hotel Bellevue, Fifteenth and I Streets NW.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there not a penalty attached to a violation of the law?

Mr. JONES. Certainly. Of course these people can be prosecuted, and I think they will be prosecuted, if we can ever get the legal machinery to work at it; but that is what has been done. I do not say what influences have brought it about, but it has been done. Every Senator here knows as well as I do how this business does things, how it works, how it influences. Here is another provision:

No saloon, barroom, or other place where intoxicating liquor is sold at retail shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 300 feet of any alleyway occupied for residences or of places commonly called slums, except upon the unanimous vote of all three members of said excise board.

Of course, Mr. President, they do not violate the law when the three members of the excise board grant a license for the location of a saloon in a case like that. Yet they knew what this law was passed for. They knew what that provision was inserted in it for. They knew that there are some perfect hell holes in the city of Washington which are a disgrace to the Nation's Capital, where men and women are huddled together under conditions and surroundings that can not be described; that they are made the prey of the vultures of commercialism; that saloons have been located at the entrance to these compounds, if you please, places where there is only one entrance and one egress, and these saloons have been located at the mouths of these entrances. We sought to drive them away. We endeavored to avoid the provision for the unanimous action of the board, but we could not get that, so we had to accept this provision; and we did it in the hope that the men who administered the law would seek to remedy the conditions that we sought to prohibit. What have they done? They have granted 28 licenses inside of 300 feet of these alleys and slums of the District of Columbia. They have not violated the law in doing it, but they have violated the spirit of the law and they have thwarted the intention of Congress in regard to it.

I ask that this list of licenses granted within 300 feet of inhabited alleys be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

The list referred to is as follows:

The following barrooms were licensed for the year beginning November 1, 1914, within 300 feet of inhabited alleys:

John P. Sheehan, 701 North Capitol Street; Michael McIrnerney, 1226 Seventh Street NW.; Terence Fegan, 930 Fourth Street NW.; Leopold Birkle, 1245 H Street NE.; Jeremiah O'Connor, 115 Four-and-a-half Street NW.; William E. O'Connor, 234 Four-and-a-half Street SW.; Michael J. Lynch, 350 Pennsylvania Avenue NW.; William Doyle, 1218 Wisconsin Avenue NW.; George P. Harrigan, 729 Ninth Street SW.; James O'Connor, 1429 North Capitol Street; George W. Hall, 927 Four-and-a-half Street SW.; William Hanlon, 1235 Seventh Street NW.; Stephen Chaconas, 468 Pennsylvania Avenue NW.; Daniel J. Alman, 244 Fourteenth Street SW.; Patrick F. Neligan, 1908 Fourteenth Street NW.; John M. Trant, 629 Four-and-a-half Street SW., Gregor Kramm, 224 Fourteenth Street SW.; Minnie E. Costello, 45 H Street NE ; John E. Bonini, 729 North Capitol Street; Kate H. Welch, 248 Third Street SW.; Maurice Ganey, 615 Seventh Street SW.; Patrick J. Bligh, 235 Four-and-a-half Street SW.; Patrick J. Daly, 626 Four-and-a-half Street SW.; Francis J. Stanton, 1205 Wisconsin Avenue; Michael T. Greene, 639 D Street SW.; William J. O'Leary, 733 North Capitol Street; William T. Babbington, 34 H Street NE.; Thomas Cannon, 1358 H Street NE.

Mr. JONES. Then, Mr. President, there is another provision in this law:

No saloon, barroom, or wholesale liquor business shall be licensed, maintained, or allowed in the territory west of the following lines—

Listen!

The westerly line of the fire limits as now established—

I want Senators to consider this language:

No saloon, barroom, or wholesale liquor business shall be licensed, maintained, or allowed in the territory west of the following lines: The westerly line of the fire limits as now established from its southerly limits to where the same intersects with the mile limit of the Soldiers' Home; thence westerly and northerly along the said mile limit until the same intersects with Kansas Avenue; thence along Kansas Avenue to its intersection with the northern boundary of the District of Columbia.

What was done, Mr. President? Just as soon as that law was passed, with a provision in it that it shall not take effect until, I think it was, the 1st of July, or five or six months afterwards, what was done? Somebody started out to move the fire limits of this territory. Why? They got some legal opinion of some kind from somebody that the words "as now established" did not refer to the date of the passage and approval of the law, but that they referred to the time, five or six months ahead, when the law should take effect. So they said: "If we can get the fire limits as described in the act changed we will save some saloons which now exist."

Senators, what do you think of a proceeding of that kind? What did we intend when we passed that act? Did we intend to say that in the district beyond some line hereafter to be fixed and hereafter to be established there shall be no saloon? What did we mean by the term "as now established"? We could have had nothing else in mind, Mr. President, except the fire limits of this city as they were at the time of the passage and approval of the law. Did they succeed in getting the fire limits changed? They did. The fire limits were changed, and they were extended so as to include within their limits two or three of the most disreputable establishments in the District of Columbia. One of them was located at the end of the Aqueduct Bridge, at Georgetown, where men and women going to and from the State of Virginia, going to and from work in the District of Columbia, were compelled to pass by and through its evil influences.

What did the excise board do? Did they grant licenses within the new limit so established? They did not have to do it. They could have refused to grant such licenses. If not within the terms of the law, they would have been clearly within the spirit and intent of it. Did they refuse to grant licenses to the saloons that Congress had almost in so many words said should not exist? No; they granted licenses for those saloons. They winked at, aided and abetted, and made effective this fraud upon the law they had sworn to enforce.

I will say, Mr. President, in justice to the excise board, that they got the opinion of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, and that his opinion in that case held that the limit established by Congress was the fire limit when the law went into effect and not under the language at the time it was passed and approved. So they had a legal opinion to sustain them in that proposition; but they did not have any compelling statute anywhere to compel them to grant such licenses, though the corporation counsel said they had a right to do it. I am glad to say that that question is now in the court, and that the court has intimated very strongly that there is scarcely any room for construction, but that Congress meant and described a specific line which existed when the law was passed and that no outside influence could in fact legislate for Congress. The board should not have hunted for legal quibbles to nullify the law. The very action taken to defeat its very evident purpose should have led them to deny these licenses. They seem to think they are the guardians of the liquor business rather than the conservators of the well-being of the people of the District.

Now, we put this provision in this law:

Said board shall consider and act upon all applications for license to sell intoxicating liquors, and may require a report thereon by the chief of police, and the action of said board shall be final and conclusive.

We did not provide there, of course, that they must follow the recommendation of the chief of police. We tried to get that provision in, but we could not pass the bill with it, and we had to except that provision. But what is the purpose of it? What would we naturally expect of men trying to carry out the spirit of the law that was passed to better conditions in the District of Columbia? Would you not expect them to follow the report of the men who have to enforce the law, men who know more about these places—how they are conducted, the character of the men who conduct them—than anybody else? Yet what was done. Listen, Mr. President.

About two years ago a man by the name of Edward J. Gardner was the proprietor of the Grand Hotel. It is located just across from the New Willard, just beyond Poli's Theater. He had a license to run a barroom in connection with that hotel. He maintained a beer garden in the basement. Many women frequented this place. He was arrested for selling and dispensing liquors to a minor, a girl not more than 18 years of age. He was convicted of dispensing liquors, but not of selling it to a minor. The trial court refused to enter an order of revocation of his license. An appeal was taken to the court of appeals; the lower court was reversed and the license was revoked.

What did he do? He formed a corporation, he holding the controlling interest in it. He became its manager and its treasurer. He applied for a license for the corporation, and the license was granted. He reopened his beer garden and has continued since in the usual objectionable way, according to the best information that we can get. The new excise board has renewed his barroom license; and now listen: The license this year was renewed in spite of a protest and a severe adverse report upon the application to the excise board by the captain of the police precinct. This is what the captain of the police precinct says about this application. This report was dated August 22, 1914, and is a matter of record:

The manager, Edward L. Gardner, conducts a garden in the basement of this hotel, where they have music and singing; dancing is allowed on a platform set aside for that purpose. This is a resort for street walkers and women of questionable character, and the result is a meeting place for men and women. In my opinion these conditions are objectionable in connection with a bar and should be eliminated.

J. L. SPRINKLE,
Acting Captain, First Precinct.

Mr. President, in the face of that fact a license was granted for that place. It is said, I do not know how true it is, that the police officer was reprimanded.

There is another instance I now want to give you. John H. Gordon had a license for a barroom at 407 Q Street in the northwest. He died February 13, 1914. Under the law his widow, in order to have the license transferred to her, should have made an application within 30 days. She did not do so; she made an application on the 28th day of April, 1914. A hearing was had before the board on May 19, 1914. The saloon was running all the time contrary to law. The board got the opinion of the corporation counsel. The corporation counsel said they had no right to run it; that the 30 days had expired. Did they close it up? Did the board reject the application? They did not act on it until when? Under date of June 26 a letter was written by Andrew Wilson, president of the Anti-Saloon League, to Hon. Frederick L. Siddons, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, asking that he take the matter up and see if he could not get the board to reject this application. Then it was rejected, and not until then. Mr. President, I ask permission to have the letter, which I hold in my hand, printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JUNE 26, 1914.

Hon. FREDERICK L. SIDDONS,
Commissioner of the District of Columbia,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: Your attention is respectfully called to the continued violation of the excise law at 407 Q Street NW. This place is undoubtedly being run without a license.

It appears John H. Gordon had a license for a barroom at said place. Mr. Gordon died February 13, 1914. On April 28, 1914,

Louise Gordon, the widow, made application for a transfer of the license from the estate to herself. Under the law no transfer could be permitted after the expiration of 30 days from the date of John H. Gordon's death. A hearing on the application was had before the excise board May 19, 1914. Many cases have been heard and acted upon since that hearing, and yet no decision in that case. This is all the more remarkable because, in addition to the plain provisions of the law, the corporation counsel has filed an opinion in the case. If the excise board can permit the violation of the law in this case, the same course can be pursued in any number of cases.

Not only as president of the Anti-Saloon League, but also as a citizen and as the owner of four houses in that general locality, I request that, as the commissioner in charge of the Metropolitan police, you close the said saloon at 407 Q Street NW. by taking whatever measures may be necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose.

Very respectfully, yours,

ANDREW WILSON.

Mr. JONES. In response to the above complaint Commissioner Siddons acted promptly, through the corporation counsel, and within a few hours the application was refused and the saloon closed.

Mr. President, here is another instance to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. It shows what is done and what influences are brought to bear in connection with this business. On the first board there was appointed a gentleman by the name of Joseph T. Sheehy, an attorney of this District. It was thought that he was a man of high standing and high character. He served on the board for a while, long enough to get certain rules adopted, and then he resigned. What did he then do? He became the attorney before the board to act for those people desiring licenses and transfers of licenses. What use would anybody have for an attorney in such a case? The law prescribes the conditions under which licenses shall be issued or transferred. It does not seem as though the services of an attorney would be worth anything, and yet Mr. Sheehy's services seem to have been needed to secure certain action by the board. How valuable were the services of Mr. Sheehy considered in securing the transfer of a license—not in the granting of a license but in securing the transfer of a license? One man who desired a transfer of his license from the place where it was to another place entered into a contract to pay $5,500 to secure such a transfer, and Mr. Sheehy was one of his attorneys.

What was the purpose of agreeing to pay Mr. Sheehy $5,500 to secure the transfer of a license? Was that to pay him for legal services or was it to be used in some other way? I do not know, but I have my ideas about it. I do not see how the human mind can reach but one conclusion as to why they agreed to pay him $5,500. Do you have any doubt about this agreement? Do you have any doubt about this contract? If you have, I desire to say that in the Washington Law Reporter, volume 42, page 743, is a decision by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in a case entitled "William F. Columbus, plaintiff, against Joseph C. Sheehy, defendant," wherein this contract is set out.

How did it happen to get into court? It happened in just this way: Mr. Sheehy and another lawyer had a contract with the man wanting a transfer. Mr. Sheehy got $2,500 and the other lawyer got nothing. He thought Mr. Sheehy ought to divide, and he brought suit against him for his part of the $2,500 that had been collected. Here is the decision holding, of course, that such a contract as that is absolutely void and against public policy. Mr. Sheehy got the $2,500; the man got the transfer of his saloon license; and the other man brought the matter into court, so that we get the facts. Mr. President, I ask that this decision may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The decision referred to is as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—WILLIAM F. COLUMBUS, PLAINTIFF, v. JOSEPH C. SHEEHY, DEFENDANT.

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; CONTINGENT FEES; PUBLIC POLICY.

1. A party having a claim against an individual or against the Government may lawfully agree with attorneys for a contingent fee to be paid the latter for services in prosecuting such claim.

2. Where, however, the services to be rendered by the attorneys are to consist in securing the transfer of a liquor license from one location to some other, and the agreement is for a contingent fee to be paid upon success in securing such transfer, the contract is against public policy and is therefore void.

3. Where in an action by one of the attorneys so employed against the other to recover one-half of payments made by the client to defendant on account of such fee, held that the invalidity of the contract sued upon appearing from the affidavit of plaintiff no recovery could be had thereunder and judgment entered for defendant.

At law, No. 57265. Decided November 6, 1914.

Hearing on a motion for judgment under the seventy-third rule. Judgment for defendant.

Mr. L. A. Bailey for the plaintiff.

Mr. F. J. Hogan and Mr. D. W. Baker for the defendant.

Mr. Justice Stafford delivered the opinion of the court:

The cause was heard upon the plaintiff's motion under the seventy-third rule for judgment in his favor for the amount claimed in his declaration upon the ground that the affidavit of defense, if true, is insufficient to defeat the plaintiff's claim in whole or in part.

An examination of the declaration and fortifying affidavit shows that the plaintiff is attempting to enforce a contract that is clearly void as against public policy. Both the plaintiff and the defendant are practicing members of this bar. Prior to May 4, 1914, one McCarthy, a proprietor of a barroom license in the District of Columbia, requested the plaintiff to secure the transfer of said license to another location, the place to which said license then applied being in a restricted district, under the terms of the excise law. Thereupon the plaintiff invited the defendant to join with him in the tendered employment. The defendant accepted the invitation, and the plaintiff, the defendant, and McCarthy all subscribed a contract in the following words:

"Fee agreement, made this 4th day of May, 1914, between Dennis J. McCarthy, party of the first part, and William F. Columbus and Joseph C. Sheehy, parties of the second part, is as follows:

"1. The party of the first part hereby employs the parties of the second part to represent him before the excise board of the District of Columbia in the matter of his application for a transfer of his license from No. 332 Fourteenth Street SW. to the ground floor of the Evans Building, or elsewhere.

"2. The party of the first part shall pay the parties of the second part a retainer of $500 and an additional fee of $5,000 should his license be transferred to the ground floor of the Evans Building or elsewhere.

"3. The parties of the second part accept the employment aforesaid and will endeavor to secure the transfer of the license of the party of the first part."

Thereupon McCarthy paid the $500 retaining fee called for by the contract and the same was divided equally between the plaintiff and defendant. After the public hearing on the application for the transfer before the excise board, the plaintiff and defendant both participating therein, the board granted the transfer. Thereafter defendant collected $2,500 of the $5,000 contingent fee from McCarthy and refuses to divide the same with the plaintiff. The plaintiff finding himself unable to collect of McCarthy now seeks to recover in this action one-half of the $2,500 collected by the defendant, upon the theory that they were equal partners in the business, and that anything collected by either must be equally divided between the two. It will not be necessary to consider the sufficiency of the defendant's affidavit, but it may be fair to state that his position seems to be that he was to have his fee of $2,500 whether the plaintiff received anything or not.

The question to be decided by the excise board was one to be determined in the public interest. McCarthy had no legal right to have his license transferred. (See the excise law, 37 Stat., 997.) McCarthy was not in the position of a claimant seeking to enforce a legal right, and who might therefore employ attorneys upon a contingent fee. His position was more analogous to that of the defendant in Haselton v. Miller, reported under the name of Haselton v. Sheckells (202 U. S., 71), who had a parcel of real estate which he wished to dispose of to the Government, or like the parties in other cases referred to in that opinion who wished to secure contracts with the Government. In such cases it is well settled that a contract to pay an attorney a contingent fee for securing the contract or the purchase of the plaintiff's property by the Government is void, as against public policy, the reason being that it is of evil tendency in that it naturally tempts the attorney to the use of improper means to accomplish his client's purpose. In the present case, the amount of the contingent fee, $5,000, is so disproportioned to any legitimate legal services to be rendered as to furnish an additional reason for holding the contract to be one of evil tendency. The invalidity of the contract does not depend upon the question the character of the services actually rendered or agreed to be rendered, but results from the fact that its natural tendency is to prompt efforts which are against the public interest. In the Haselton case, the court assumed that the services were legitimate, but struck down the contract for the reason above stated, remarking that the court would not inquire what was actually done, inasmuch as the arrangement "necessarily invited and tended to induce improper solicitations and intensified the inducement by the contingency of the reward."

It is undoubtedly legal for parties to stipulate for a contingent fee to be paid for services in prosecuting a plaintiff's claim against an individual or against the Government, but in such cases the claim is a demand of some matter as of right. The present case does not belong to this class. In the class of cases to which this does belong the plaintiff has a right to employ an attorney to represent him and has a right to pay such an attorney for his services, but he has not a right to do so upon a contingent fee for the reason above stated. The brief filed for the plaintiff proceeds upon the theory that wherever the plaintiff has a right to employ a paid attorney he has a right to engage the attorney upon a contingent fee. A manufacturer would have a right to employ and pay an attorney to appear before a committee of Congress and show such reasons as he could why a certain duty should be imposed upon the class of goods manufactured by his client, but certainly he could not employ the attorney upon a contingent fee. In our view the present case falls within this class.

It may be urged by the plaintiff that judgment can not be rendered against him upon his own motion because the proceedings under the seventy-third rule are merely collateral and are to determine whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to summary judgment. In answer thereto it must be said that the contract in question is illegal. The plaintiff by his motion refers not only to his own declaration, but also to his affidavit in support thereof. As soon as the court perceives the illegal nature of the contract it is in duty bound to dismiss the suit. The plaintiff by his own affidavit puts himself out of court—by his own solemn oath in laying the contract before the eyes of the court. It seems unnecessary to cite authorities in support of such a proposition, but in the case of Oscanyan v. Arms Co. (103 U. S., 261) an officer of the Turkish Government was employed on a commission by an American corporation to sell its products to the Turkish Government through his influence with its officials. The nature of the contract appeared upon the opening statement of the plaintiff's counsel to the jury, and the court at once directed a verdict for the defendant. Of that action the Supreme Court says:

"So in a civil action, if it should appear from the opening statement that it is brought to obtain compensation for acts which the law denounces as corrupt and immoral or declares to be criminal * * * the court would not hesitate to close the case without delay."

Later on, in the same case the court says:

"Here the action is upon a contract which, according to the view of the judge who tried the case, was a corrupt one, forbidden by morality and public policy. * * * Assuming for the present that such was a sound view, the objection to a recovery could not be obviated or waived by any system of pleading, or even by the express stipulation of the parties. It was one which the court itself was bound to raise the interest of the due administration of justice."

In the case of Coppell v. Hall (7 Wall., 542) a suit was brought upon a contract whereby the plaintiff, a neutral, had agreed with the defendant, a citizen of one of the belligerents to protect with his neutral name shipments made by the defendant into the other belligerent State, where trade between citizens of the belligerents was forbidden. In reversing a judgment given in favor of the plaintiff after a waiver by the defendant of the point of illegality, the court said:

"Whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case. No consent of the defendant can neutralize its effect."

In thus rendering judgment in favor of the defendant, on the motion of the plaintiff under the seventy-third rule, we are not departing from the decisions of the court of appeals in regard to cases arising under said rule, for those decisions were not rendered in cases in which the contract sued upon was illegal from its inception: Lawrence v. Hammond (4 D. C. Ap., 467, 473–474; 22 Wash. Law Rep., 749), Bailey v. D. C. (4 D. C. Ap., 356, 370; 22 Wash. Law Rep., 735), Booth v. Arnold (27 Ap. D. C., 287, 291; 34 Wash. Law Rep., 289), Thompson v. Custis (35 D. C. Ap., 247, 250.) In fact, the same court said in Brown v. D. C. (29 Ap. D. C., 273, 281; 35 Wash. Law Rep., 163):

"The opening statement * * * admitted a fact that discharged all possible right of recovery in the action. It was in the interest, therefore, of the speedy administration of justice to act upon the admission when deliberately made and avoid the delay that would be caused by the production of the evidence."

It is unnecessary to pursue the subject further. The plaintiff stating that he can not amend, judgment must be rendered for the defendant. "In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis."

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. President, I want to give you some more facts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Who appoints the excise board that the Senator from Washington is describing?

Mr. JONES. The President appoints them; we provided that in the excise law; but I do not make any reflection on the President. The President appointed these men, and the Antisaloon League examined into the matter as fully as they had an opportunity, and said, while the appointees were not entirely satisfactory, they seemed to be fairly good men. We thought we would get a fairly good administration of the law, but the facts that I have given simply show the influences that this traffic brings to bear upon men who are to administer the law. They show the power of these influences, and they show the ineffectiveness of regulation where you must give discretion to executive officers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I will ask if the President did not appoint two members of that board, and, when their characters were called to his attention, were the names not withdrawn?

Mr. JONES. He did so very promptly; and I wish he had withdrawn the others. I should say that one of the names was withdrawn not because of the character of the appointee, but because he had been a most open and determined opponent of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to paragraph 12 of the excise liquor law of the District of Columbia, in which I find this provision:

PAR. 12. That any person, company, copartnership, corporation, club, or association manufacturing, selling, offering for sale, keeping for sale, trafficking in, bartering, exchanging for goods, or otherwise furnishing any intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, without first having obtained a license as herein provided, or shall manufacture, sell, offer for sale, keep for sale, traffic in, barter, exchange for goods, or give away intoxicating liquors in any part, section, or district of the District of Columbia wherein the same is prohibited by law, upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $250 nor more than $800, and in default in the payment of such fine be imprisoned in the District jail or workhouse for not less than two months nor more than six months.

Does the Senator from Washington know whether or not there have been any complaints made against these persons who have obtained licenses contrary to the excise law of the District?

Mr. JONES. I am informed that the office of the corporation counsel say they hope to begin proceedings in four or five or a half dozen of these cases before very long.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator does not doubt for a minute that the 62 cases and the 18 cases which he has cited could be prosecuted under paragraph 12 of the law which I have just quoted?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not, and they ought to be prosecuted. It ought to be done promptly, but that is the trouble we have with reference to these regulative measures. Then they have all sorts of defenses under the technical terms of the law which they present, rendering practically inefficient and ineffective a regulative measure which I think is really a model regulative measure.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to say that the committee, of which the Senator was one of the leading forces, were unusually fortunate and farsighted in making it plain that not only would a man be subject to prosecution if he sold without a license, but even if he obtained a license, and the regulative features were ignored, he would be subject to prosecution, so that there is no escape for those who are actually and openly selling contrary to law.

Mr. JONES. Not if we can get them prosecuted.

Mr. President, I want to call your attention to the fact that the excise board has winked at a deliberate evasion of the law, and then I want to ask the Senate whether or not you are going directly or indirectly to appear to indorse the action that was taken in this case?

On Pennsylvania Avenue, or rather on E Street, I believe, right where E Street comes into Pennsylvania Avenue, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets, when the excise law was passed and went into effect there were five saloons. Under the new law only three of those saloons could continue. Two of them, under the terms of the law, had to go out of business. The five saloons there were run by Miller, Gerstenberg, Shoomaker, Engel, and Bush. As I have said, two had to go. This had to be done by the 31st of October. On the 30th day of October the exicse board said that Engel and Miller must go, and directed the assessor to prepare licenses for the other people. On the morning of the 31st of October some authority came from somewhere, some influence came from some source, and Bush had to go and Engel came back. The license of Bush was destroyed, while Engel was granted his license. I should like to know what that influence was. I should like to know where it came from. I should like to know whether it came through a $5,000 attorney fee or whether it came from some other source. I do not know.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. A few days after Mr. Miller closed up his place, what did he do? He applied for a license for a bar in the same building where he had been conducting his business, but as fronting on Fourteenth Street and not on E Street. The license was granted. The entrance on E Street was closed, and an entrance on Fourteenth Street made, and the saloon is now carried on in the same building in the same room, with the bar in the same place where it was before. That may not be a technical violation of the law, although I think it is. But it is worse than a violation of the law. It is a perversion of the law; it is a setting at naught of the plain provisions of the law and the plain intention of Congress.

Mr. President, the conduct of this board has been such as to call forth a letter which, if without foundation, would be one of the most insulting letters that could be sent to an administrative body; but it was sent by a man of responsibility, a man of character, a man of standing, and there has not been any indignation manifested at its contents. I want to read it to the Senate. Here is the letter, dated October 26, 1914, addressed to the honorable the Excise Board, Washington, D. C.:

GENTLEMEN: One of the grave questions confronting us in relation to excise matters in this District is how to justify what has been done when called upon so to do by legally constituted authority or by the citizens of the District of Columbia responsible for the Jones-Works law. In some instances it is respectfully submitted that some of us, though in close touch with the situation and presumed to know, are unable to commend what has been done.

Let me illustrate—

Mr. President, what I am going to read just now is a new fact which I have not presented, but one which can be fully established—

How can we explain why Thomas Raftery was permitted to transfer after the evidence produced before you showed that he had, in fact, paid for the destruction of protests when the law requires you to consider protests? What comment can we make upon the statement made by a member of the board immediately after that evidence was produced in the Raftery case—

That is, evidence showing that he had paid for the destruction of protests—to the effect "now that you have the evidence what does it amount to? It amounts to nothing."

Mr. President, does it not show something as to the character of the man applying for a license? If he will pay money to have protests destroyed, what is it he will not do in order to accomplish his purposes? And what of an excise board that will countenance such conduct?

After the hearing in the Ebbitt House case, where certain uncontradicted testimony showed a state of affairs shocking to the moral sense, it is said the chairman of your board stated, in substance, what another member said in the Raftery case, and further indicated that such testimony would be given no consideration, to which statement by the chairman Mr. Baker said "Amen, amen!" Are these expressions given at the very time by a majority of the board to be taken as the moral standard of such officials? What other conclusion is possible? If such is the moral standard, what have the various cooperating forces responsible for the enactment of this law to hope for in its administration?

The Evans Building case will not down—

That is the case where a fee of $5,500 was agreed to be paid—

A prominent citizen, who might in some contingencies have occasion to deal officially upon certain phases of it, in referring to the attorney's fee in that case, said, "The human mind can reach but one conclusion." A prominent lawyer, not identified in any way with the Antisaloon League, spoke to me of excise conditions and referred to them as being a public scandal. He did not specify the particulars, and was not asked for them. In this same case an eminent jurist said, "It was a great mistake to permit that place to have a license." Another eminent jurist here said to me, "It is the utmost folly for the United States to permit saloons to exist." Numerous nonofficial citizens have expressed their views in strong terms in this case. There is not the least doubt the board could have avoided all this comment by refusing the transfer—

They were not compelled to grant a transfer—

The applicant's attitude may be easily surmised. He certainly would not have agreed to pay what he did unless he thought he would get his money's worth. An attorney for the liquor interests recently stated in my office that the attorneys in that case had often done more work for $10 than they did in that case. Then why such fees? Before the transfer was granted, I wrote to you and asked that you investigate. You replied, but you did not investigate, and you did grant the transfer.

There are many other stories of large fees, in some instances much larger than the Evans Building case, and the insinuations are quite as unpleasant.

Then the writer refers in this letter to some of the facts to which I have already alluded in my remarks. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the remainder of the letter, but will ask that I may put it in the RECORD, remembering that this is a letter addressed to the excise board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the permission is granted.

The remainder of the letter is as follows:

Upon what theory can we explain the open bar at 407 Q Street NW., where no license was in existence from March 15, 1914, to June 27, 1914?

How can we explain the apparent attitude that the shortest course of travel is not the most direct route across a public right of way? In the opinion of many a contrary holding would not only be unjustifiable in law but must subject the board to criticism which could be avoided by the board. A contrary holding, in my opinion, would be a violation of the act which you have sworn to support.

In one instance, it is reliably reported, the board took the attitude that Congress had inadvertently omitted to state that clubs could be licensed in residential districts, and that the board would supply the omission.

You had before you an expression of the view of a man whose name the law bears as to the intention of Congress on the question of fire limits in the western section of the city. The ruling was in favor of the liquor interests. There is no law to compel you to grant any license in that disputed zone.

The authors of the law are grievously disappointed because the inspector provided by law has not inspected saloons in the sense in which saloons should be inspected. For this the inspector is not responsible.

We have to deal with a traffic whose attributes are so well known that characterization is useless. Certain evidences have been presented to you. It has been powerful enough to secure the removal of police officers who were not desired and has persistently violated the law.

Upon one occasion, in a statement before the board, I took the liberty of quoting from certain eminent authorities named by me, only to be told a few hours afterwards that a member of the board stated that I certainly did not believe what I had said in that statement. Notwithstanding that experience, I am now going to ask your indulgence while I quote from legal authorities on the rules of construction. I do this because of the importance of the matters before you and because when excise affairs in this District are sifted to the bottom by competent authority, as now seems probable, it may not be said that the rules of statutory construction were not presented to you.

In Heydon's case (3 Rep.) it is stated that it was resolved by the barons of the exchequer as follows:

"For the sure and true interpretation of all statutes in general, be they penal or beneficial, restrictive or enlarging of the common law, four things are to be discerned and considered:

"First. What was the common law before the making of the act?

"Second. What was the mischief and defect for which the common law did not provide?

"Third. What remedy the Parliament hath resolved and appointed to cure the disease of the Commonwealth.

"Fourth. The true reason of the remedy.

"In construing a statute the courts may recur to the history of the times when it was passed in order to ascertain the reason for its passage, as well as the meaning of its provisions." (United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 91 U. S., 72.)

In Platt v. Union Pacific Railroad (99 U. S., 48, 64) it was said: "But in endeavoring to ascertain what the Congress of 1862 intended we must, as far as possible, place ourselves in the light that Congress enjoyed, look at things as they appeared to it, and discover its purpose from the language used in connection with the attending circumstances."

In Siemens v. Sellers (123 U. S., 276, 285) the court said: "No doubt the words of the law are generally to have a controlling effect upon its construction; but the interpretation of these words is often to be sought from the surrounding circumstances and preceding history."

In the case of the Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States (143 U. S., 457–463), Mr. Justice Brewer, in delivering the opinion, said: "Again, another guide to the meaning of a statute is found in the evil which it is designed to remedy; and for this the court properly looks at contemporaneous events, the situation as it existed, and as it was pressed upon the attention of the legislative body. * * * It appears also from the petitions and in the testimony presented before the committees of Congress.

Sincerely, yours, ANDREW WILSON.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Washington give us the names of the excise board?

Mr. JONES. There is a Mr. Baker, a Mr. Smith, and Mr. Bride. Those gentlemen compose the board.

Mr. President, a petition or resolution was presented here yesterday from the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Washington protesting against this proposed legislation. What is the ground of their protest? They do not say anything in behalf of the business; they do not say any good word for the business; but what do they say? Oh, they say we ought not to put legislation on an appropriation bill. Since when have they become so interested about putting legislation onto appropriation bills? We have been doing it year after year and we have never heard from them any such protest. Mr. President, how was the passage of this resolution secured? Here is how it was secured: I have the Washington Times giving an account of this matter, and here is the way it reads:

Merchants send protests to Senate. Chamber of Commerce votes against prohibition and similar rider legislation. Members of the Senate to-day received * * * a vigorous protest—

Then the resolution is quoted, and following that occurs the following:

In introducing his resolution Mr. Harvey said—

Mr. Harvey introduced this resolution. Who is Mr. Harvey? Mr. Harvey is the representative of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of the United States, located in the city of Washington, and he is the Mr. Harvey whose name I read a moment ago as having secured a liquor license for the running of a saloon less than 400 feet from a church, contrary to the law. He is the spokesman for the chamber of commerce, the respectable business men of the city of Washington. Mr. Harvey appeared before our committee two years ago as the attorney for and as representing the liquor interests. He stayed there every day and every hour and every minute. He is a very affable, a very pleasant, and a very able gentleman. I will say that for him. He holds a liquor license contrary to law. He introduced a resolution in the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Washington; and what does he say when he introduces it? He is quoted as saying this:

The people of the District have not asked for this legislation—

Why, Mr. President, you know and I know that highly respectable, strong, and powerful organizations, as well as citizens of the District of Columbia, have been asking for this legislation for years—

It is being foisted upon us by persons the majority of whom have not a dollar's worth of property in this community. Our interests have not been consulted in any manner.

Why, Mr. President, we have been dealing with their interests for some time.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he knows how many members of the Washington Chamber of Commerce are engaged in the liquor business?

Mr. JONES. I do not. I do not know what we have a right to assume from this action.

The Jones-Works bill, the present excise measure, has only been in effect a few months—

Says Mr. Harvey—

and consequently has not yet had a fair trial—

Yes; I know it has not had a fair trial. Nobody has done more to prevent its having a fair trial than Mr. Harvey—

Those who are endeavoring to have the law changed are individuals who are anxious to make experiments, and select the District as the place to be experimented with.

Why, Mr. President, that is an insult to the honesty and the intelligence and the sincerity of the Senate and Senators. This is not an experimental station, but this is the place where we ought to put into effect what has been shown to be for the best interests of the people of the country after a trial in many sections of this country. Instead of Washington City being the model after which the rest of the country acts, Washington City, as a matter of fact, simply follows and reflects the consensus of the best sentiment and the best legislation of the country.

Then he says:

This bill, if enacted, most certainly will injure business in this city. The chamber of commerce is a business men's organization, and as such I ask—

Now, notice the dominating attitude of Mr. Harvey—as such I ask that you vote upon this resolution. I want action, whether it be favorable or not.

He wants action. He is bound to have it. He forced it through. Yet, Mr. President, what are the facts about that? Does this resolution represent the sentiment of the Chamber of Commerce of the District of Columbia?

I am told that the resolution was not offered until after they had held their meeting, it being an annual meeting, and elected their officers and adjourned for lunch, with the understanding that when they came back the choice of officers would be ratified and they would go home, and that, as a matter of fact, when the resolution was presented there were but very few members of the chamber of commerce present. I do not say that is the fact; I do not know whether it is or not; but here is what I saw in the Washington Herald, I presume of the next day, giving an account of the meeting. Listen to what the paper said:

Protest was made against prohibition, the Sheppard rider in the District appropriation bill by which the District would be made dry, and against riders in general at the annual meeting of the chamber of commerce last night.

Patrick T. Moran had been elected president, and Capt. James F. Oyster had moved adjournment when Hugh Harvey rose and offered the resolution.

Several members spoke for and against the resolution. The question was whether the chamber, in protesting against the rider that will be considered by the Senate to-day, should protest also against prohibition. Many members, believing there would be no more business, had left.

There is the account of the meeting in a newspaper, with no reason to mistake the facts. It corroborates what I have been told with reference to the matter.

With reference to Mr. Harvey a little bit further, I have here what was given to me by a very reputable gentleman, who says that it is a correct copy of an extract from a speech made by Mr. Harvey a little over a year ago here in the city of Washington. I want to read it to the Senate simply in order to show you what Mr. Harvey thinks, and the course he thinks ought to be taken in order to promote the welfare of the interests he so ably represents.

This is an address delivered by him before the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association at the Willard Hotel. This is what he said:

Here is the place where a national organization ought to see the national men who make the laws. [Applause.] Come here annually; every mother's son of you ought to go up there and see every man you know. Every year when you come here you should come here with all the influence you possibly can. Bring all the names of the people that amount to anything in your district and go and leave them with these men. Let them look forward every year to a visitation from you men.

That does not say to whom he was referring, but I have an idea as to who it was.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has called my attention to a little memorandum in the Liquor Dealer telling who the Washington Mercantile Association are. I think something from them was put in the RECORD yesterday protesting against this proposed legislation. Let us see:

The Washington Mercantile Association.
Office: National Hotel, corner Sixth and Pennsylvania Avenue NW.
* * *
President: William Muehleisen, jobber.
Secretary: Hugh F. Harvey, retailer.
Treasurer: Charles Jacobson, bottler.
Executive committee: Albert Carey, brewer; Joseph Bush, wholesaler; Frank P. Madigan, salesman.

That ought to have a powerful influence in this body. [Laughter.]

Then, Mr. President, I want to insert in the RECORD—I will not take the time to read it—an extract from the Washington Herald under date of November 16, 1913, and other papers. I do not believe, however, I shall ask to have it inserted in the RECORD, but I am just going to put this reference here, so that Senators who may want to read it may do so. At page 6046 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 50, part 6, Sixty-third Congress, first session, under date of November 29, you will find extracts from the leading papers of Washington City giving accounts of a most disgraceful episode in connection with the Ebbitt Hotel, showing violation of the excise law of the District of Columbia. I shall not take the time to read it.

Mr. President, I have presented these facts in the hope that the Senate might see the necessity of legislation of the character proposed, that they might see the futility of a regulative measure in the District of Columbia. That a prohibition law could be enforced here I have absolutely no doubt. If Congress will provide the force and the means to enforce a law providing that this trade shall not be carried on under any circumstances or any conditions, that law will be enforced in the District of Columbia much more effectively than anywhere else in the country, so far as that is concerned. But the question now before the Senate is, Will you permit a vote upon the merits of this question, or will you, under the plea that we must not put legislation on appropriation bills, deny to the Senate itself the right to express its opinion upon this question?

Mr. President, we are legislating every day on appropriation bills. The Post Office appropriation bill has legislation from beginning to end in it now. That bill will come before us. Will we hear any protest from Washington City against putting legislation in that bill? Will we hear anybody on the floor of the Senate protesting against its passage because it carries legislation? In the very bill we have before us now there is legislation. It is absolutely essential, under our system, if we are to get legislation passed, that we shall put it on appropriation bills, not for the purpose of embarrassing those measures but for the purpose of getting them enacted into law.

We have not hesitated in the past to put legislation on appropriation bills even though it might be embarrassing to the Executive. Only two years ago there was placed on the sundry civil bill a rider of the highest importance, to which there was tremendous opposition. I heard nobody on this floor on the other side protesting against it on the ground that it would embarrass the Chief Executive. You sent it to the President. He vetoed it. Then we passed it again with that provision in it.

No, Mr. President; in my judgment there is no excuse for preventing a vote upon the merits of this proposition at this time.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if the bill he has been talking about, the excise bill, was not enacted in this same way by attaching it to this very same appropriation bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes. The Senator probably was not here, but I described all that in the first part of my remarks. I wish I had had a quorum here when I showed how it was done, but I did not, and I did not ask for a quorum for that purpose.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss now the merits of the amendment of the Senator from Texas. I am not going to discuss the character of this business. As I said before, nobody has a good word for it. This business is an outlaw by law and in practice. It is declared unlawful, but it is permitted to exist and do business upon certain conditions. These conditions continue from year to year. They may be terminated without ground for complaint and without violating any vested right. It is a business for which no good word can be said. It hides behind respectability to promote its own advantage, but for respectability it has no regard in its hellish and damning influences and effects. It prevents legislation by fair means and foul, and when passed it perverts, violates, and nullifies it. It corrupts officials, debauches attorneys, terrorizes individuals, scoffs at public opinion, commercializes womanhood, blackens character, and undermines society. Such a business can not permanently exist. Its doom is certain. It may not come to-day in the District of Columbia, but just as surely as time rolls on the Capital of this Republic will be free from this curse carried on as a business. Public opinion may move slowly, but it is as inexorable as fate.

Mr. President, in this District the liquor interests have nullified a reasonable regulative measure; and if not to-day in the very near future they will face absolute prohibition.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I move to take from the tab'e Order of Business No. 33, being Senate resolution 519.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the resolution may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 519, authorizing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to employ an additional clerk.

Mr. SMOOT. Is not this the resolution to the consideration of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] objected on yesterday?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator by stating that it is not. This resolution was reported last night in executive session, but the reporters were not here at the time, and it was laid over. It is simply to authorize the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to employ a clerk for 30 days in order to help out on some important business during that time.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the resolution. The only point is, the Senator from Michigan objects to any business being done by unanimous consent as long as we do not have a morning hour.

Mr. BRYAN. Have I not the right to call it up, Mr. President?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. A resolution of a similar character was passed a few days ago when the Senator from Michigan was in the Senate, and he did not object. Therefore I shall not object to this; but so far as general legislation of any kind is concerned, I shall object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is hereby authorized to employ an additional clerk for a period of one month at a salary of $75 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Joseph Madden, of Keene, N. H., chairman of the committee on legislation of the Commercial Law League of America, praying for the enactment of legislation for the appointment of official stenographers in all Federal courts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Walbridge & Thayer, of Peterboro, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the Federal grading and inspection of grain, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McLEAN presented a memorial of the Business Men's Association of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against an investigation as to the preparedness of the United States for war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. POMERENE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Valley City, Wapakoneta, Rawson, Hamler, Alliance, Lima, Irwin, Sandusky, East Akron, Bridgeport, Youngstown, Apple Creek, Dalton, Orrville, Canton, New Richmond, Martins Ferry, and Cleveland; of the German-American Alliance, of Tiffin, representing over 500 members; of St. Joseph's Commandery of the Knights of St. John, of Lorain, representing 54 members; of the German-American Catholic District League, of Cleveland; of sundry citizens of Deshler; of the Catholic Benevolent Mutual Association, of Tiffin; of the German Aid Society, of Tiffin, and of the German Consolidated Newspaper Co., of Cleveland, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch, German-American Alliance, of Lima, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the President to place an embargo upon all contraband of war, with the exception of foodstuffs, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4602) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 917) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14196) authorizing the Tuscarora Nation of New York Indians to lease or sell the limestone deposits upon their reservation, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 918) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 7319) granting certain land to the board of education of the village of Mahnomen, Minn. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7320) granting an increase of pension to Mercy A. Martin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 7321) granting a pension to Clara McGaughey;

A bill (S. 7322) granting a pension to Edward H. Baldwin;

A bill (S. 7323) granting an increase of pension to Joseph England;

A bill (S. 7324) granting a pension to John H. Hopewell; and

A bill (S. 7325) granting an increase of pension to William J. Cottrell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURLEIGH:

A bill (S. 7326) granting a pension to Fred Lajoie; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 7327) granting an increase of pension to Alicen W. Poe (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment relative to the allowance to be made for third-class post offices having postal-savings deposits exceeding $75,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19906), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill (H. R. 8846), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Saturday, January 16, 1915) the Senate took a recess until Monday, January 18, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 16, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Creator, upholder and sustainer of all things, and who in Thy providence dost mark the sparrow's fall, be graciously near to Thy children everywhere, especially to those who are in distress and sorrow; alleviate their distress and comfort them in their sorrows. So move upon the hearts of the leaders of men throughout the world that they may devise ways and means for the betterment of conditions in all the walks of life; that wars may cease and peace and happiness fill every home. And to Thee we will give all praise, in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE SENATOR BACON.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the date of January 24, 1915, set apart in the House for eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the late Senator AUGUSTUS O. BACON, of Georgia, be changed to February 21, 1915, on account of the fact that gentlemen who expected to be present can not be present on the day that has been set.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the order for eulogies on the late Senator BACON for the 24th of January be vacated, and that Sunday, February 21, be set apart instead. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, which, with accompanying report (No. 1287), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] raises the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ainey	Dixon	Kinkead, N. J.	Post
Allen	Dooling	Korbly	Powers
Anderson	Driscoll	Kreider	Price
Anthony	Drukker	Langham	Ragsdale

Difenderfer	Kennedy, R. I.	Peterson

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 293 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceeding under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6060. An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States; and

H. J. Res. 234. Joint resolution directing the selection of a site for the erection of a statue in Washington, D. C., to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20189, with Mr. RAINEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20189, the river and harbor bill. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oklawaha River, Fla.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 8 and 9, on page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, by striking out lines 8 and 9.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, if this item was for maintenance alone, I would not make the motion. It is for continuing improvement, in addition to maintenance, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that this item called for $175,000 in the last bill. It is placed at $10,000 here. The new project has not been extended in this year's bill. That was a $733,000 project.

A very interesting fact in connection with that project is that while the House insisted it should remain in the bill last year when the bill went to the other side of the Capitol the Senate committee struck it out before it was referred to that body. This action indicated to some degree the merit of criticisms that were leveled at the item in this House. It now reads for $10,000 on a different project, and I desire to present one or two facts, because they may have some bearing upon the future consideration of the $733,000 project when it is offered.

There has been appropriated on this river $78,710—not a very large appropriation as appropriations go—and the balance available was $10,046 on July 1, 1914.

In view of the fact that this is a very small project in character, it seems to me that the balance which remains on hand could very profitably be used at the present time, and we might save that amount of money—$10,000—which is proposed in the bill. The engineers state that the navigation on the upper river is obstructed by water hyacinths and eel grass; that the dredges Florida and Captain McGuire in three months in 1914 removed 1,298 snags, 991 overhanging boughs, 478 logs, and 144 stumps, aggregating about 3,000 obstructions removed from this stream last year. It would seem that that ought to be sufficient under ordinary circumstances to get most of the stumps out of the river. The commerce on that river last year amounted to 14,622 tons, of which 6,210 tons were logs.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will not the gentleman repeat what he just read? As I caught it, I thought it was interesting.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly. On page 2101 of the second volume of the 1914 report, the engineers state that the dredges Florida and Captain McGuire in three months in 1914 on the Oklawaha River removed 1,298 snags, 991 overhanging boughs, 478 logs, and 144 stumps; in all, nearly 3,000 obstructions. It would seem that this work ought to have cleared the river reasonably well, if it were not for the notation on page 595, wherein it is stated that navigation on the upper river is much obstructed by hyacinths and eel grass. The suggestion has been made to me, and possible it will occur to every other Member, that it would be well in conducting navigation on this stream to go armed with a lawn mower and a pair of clipping shears for the branches. [Laughter.] The commerce on this stream, however, is of some importance. In 1914 it aggregated 14,622 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes more in view of the interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. The commerce, as I said, in 1914 aggregated 14,622 tons, of which 6,210 tons consisted of logs afloat, making a net result of 8,412 tons of valuable traffic, for which $733,000 was asked for the same stream in the project presented last year. In view of the fact that a little more than $10,000 was on hand at the last report, it occurs to me that we ought to save this money, if possible, at this time. I move to strike out the two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian River, Fla.: Continuing improvement between Goat Creek and Jupiter Inlet and for maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this is called Goat Creek. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if that signifies a place where there is water only occasionally? Is the Government money being spent in trying to make a waterway of a creek? My understanding of a creek is a place where there is water only a part of the year. I ask that question of some member of the committee who knows anything about it, if Goat Creek is a place where there is water only a part of the year? What do you mean by the word "creek"?

Mr. EDWARDS. If the gentleman will read that item a little more carefully, he will see that this is for the Indian River between Goat Creek and Jupiter Inlet, and is not for Goat Creek.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to apologize to the committee for not reading the paragraph more carefully.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman did not get our goat that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crystal River, Fla.: For maintenance, $3,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to consider this river and the next one together, and I move at this time to strike out line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, amend by striking out line 17.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this is a very small project, of course; only about the size of the Oklawaha. I call attention to the character of a few streams among the 30 different projects in Florida which are in this bill. I wish to show the character of some of these projects. Crystal River is one of them, as is the next item, the Anclote River.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman stated that this is one of some 30 projects in Florida. Does the gentleman mean to infer that Florida has a greater number of projects in the bill than any other locality in the United States?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, I do not ask anyone to draw any inference from what I say. I try to give facts from which inferences can be drawn.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wish to say that Florida has more harbors than any other State in the Union, unless it is New York. It also has more seacoast than any other State, and nearly as great a mileage of navigable rivers and canals as any other State, only two or three others exceeding it.

Mr. FREAR. I am very much pleased to be interrupted by the chairman of the committee. However, I will say that, outside of two harbors, I do not know that it has any very large traffic, so far as the engineer's report shows, except logs.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman is mistaken about that, for it has about 12,000,000 tons of commerce; that is to say, the rivers and harbors inside of the State or Florida carry, in round figures, 12,000,000 tons of commerce annually.

Mr. FREAR. Is that true of the 30 projects in the bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is the annual water-borne commerce of the State.

Mr. FREAR. I will say to the gentleman, as we are passing the compliments backward and forward, that there is a harbor in my own State that has almost four times the total commerce of all the rivers and harbors of Florida combined.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to have the gentleman name that harbor.

Mr. FREAR. Duluth and Superior, which has been combined by the engineers and has 46,000,000 tons. The city of Milwaukee has over 8,000,000 tons, and I can give you some others having over 5,000,000 tons, for instance, Ashland.

Mr. SPARKMAN. A great deal of that is iron ore, but it is very good commerce to be sure.

Mr. FREAR. And yours is largely lumber.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, no; relatively a small part is lumber, besides 1 ton of commerce in Florida would buy about 15 or 20 tons of yours.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would not apply so far as Milwaukee is concerned. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It would if Milwaukee beer went to Florida.

Mr. FREAR. I accept the statistical correction of the gentleman from Milwaukee.

Crystal River has had an appropriation of $34,000 thus far. On July 1, 1914, the balance on hand was $4,000. Nothing was spent in 1913, so that a balance presumably is still on hand for this little stream.

According to the engineer's report the project was completed at 6 feet in 1902. It is a short, 9-mile creek to Crystal. The commerce in 1913 on this important waterway amounted for all purposes to 1,240 tons, about 3 tons a day going one way, or 4 tons at the outside. It has no regular steamers. The trade carried on by water amounts to 2 per cent of the total trade. No effect on freight rates. It is entirely used by private launches according to the statement of the engineer.

I move to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Just one moment, Mr. Chairman. Wherever there is a diminishing commerce it always attracts my attention, as it should that of anyone. Any person who wishes to act intelligently on a river and harbor bill should seek to understand the growth and fluctuations of water-borne commerce.

Now, the commerce on Crystal River has fallen off, but it is because of the fact that for the last three or four years the engineers have not recommended enough money to keep that channel open. At one time we had 6 feet of water. That was brought about by the expenditure of about $30,000, and not $80,000, as I am told a newspaper in New York stated the other day. When that $30,000 was expended it resulted in a channel with a depth, I think, of 6 feet of water.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Just one moment. Then the commerce began to increase. In 1907 it was 7,888 tons and in 1908 it went up to 48,000 tons. In 1909 it dropped to 33,000 tons, and then continued to fall off gradually, because the channel was not kept open, and last year it was down to the tonnage the gentleman has just mentioned.

Mr. FREAR. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Just one moment. I have no doubt that when this money is expended and the channel is reopened to a proper depth commerce will increase therein, because while the stream is only 9 miles in length, it is an important waterway and carries at all times very important commerce. I want to say again to this House that in that section of Florida where the country has not reached its full growth it is not falling back, but still growing and developing commerce, both by rail and water—is increasing rapidly and not diminishing. Wherever there is a falling off in the case of any harbor or river it can safely be attributed to the fact either that the waterway is not sufficiently commodious or that the commerce statistics have not been properly gathered.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How much more coast line has Florida than Michigan?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I could not tell, but I think about twice as much. I may be mistaken, but I fancy not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Anclote River, Fla.: For maintenance, $5,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, strike out line 18.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not offer this for the purpose of needlessly repeating in reference to small projects. It occurs to me that in this project is to be found a full explanation of the argument just made in reference to the large amount of traffic which occurs at certain times upon some of these small streams.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee is not in order. We are entitled to hear what the gentleman has to say, and the members of the committee are keeping up a continual humdrum conversation, without any regard to propriety or decency in conducting debate in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I had not observed it with the members of the committee. They certainly owe no explanation or apology to me, for I think they have been very courteous, so far as I have noticed, and I appreciate it very much. On this project I believe is to be found a complete answer to the statement of the gentleman from Florida with reference to Crystal River. Referring to the engineer's report, on page 627, we find that it is a project for a 4-foot channel begun in 1899. We have expended upon it $56,500, and now we are asked for $5,000 more. The project has been completed. The commerce upon this stream, which apparently is much like that of Crystal River, amounted to 22,730 tons. That is quite a large commerce; but logs and timber amounted to 21,100 tons, which is practically all of it. There were only 1,630 tons of other commerce. The commerce decreased 33 per cent from the preceding year—from 1912—according to the engineer's report, at page 627. There are no regular steamers in the trade, and one boat was abandoned, due to railroad rates, according to page 2126 of the engineer's report. In a case where the railroads had driven out all of the commerce and the only boat line has been taken off, it occurs to me that we ought to think twice before making an appropriation.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the gentleman notice that the value of that commerce to which he refers is $1,381,700?

Mr. FREAR. That is, including the timber?

Mr. EDWARDS. Regardless of what it is, it is commerce and is of that value. Whether it is iron ore or logs, it is commerce found there. Of course, if it was iron ore it would make a very great difference in the gentleman's opinion, but they do not find much of that in Florida.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman is making an argument, I want my time extended in order to reply to it.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman noticed also that there are 200 launches and yachts on that stream. Does he not know that on these small rivers where there are no railroads in the vicinity, as is the case here, the people have to rely largely on launches for carrying of their freight, which is not taken into account in compiling the tonnage in the reports?

Mr. FREAR. Let me say to the gentleman that if he is acquainted with the methods of logging he will know that not more than 4 feet is ordinarily required to float logs. That is the character of commerce floated on that stream. As a member of the committee the gentleman ought to know these facts. If the gentleman will only glance at the preceding item in regard to Crystal River, he will find that only 2 per cent of the commerce was carried on the Crystal River last year.

Mr. EDWARDS. But we are discussing the Anclote River now.

Mr. FREAR. I am discussing the other to show the character of it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that this log commerce referred to is not regularly carried on on the streams, but that these logs are cut and prepared and floated down on the rise in rafts?

Mr. FREAR. I assume that is so. That is the case in most places.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And does not the gentleman know that is the way they raft timber and float it down the stream to the sawmills, that they catch them in booms, and that it is not necessary at all to have any expenditure to carry on this kind of commerce?

Mr. FREAR. I will answer the gentleman by saying that we have just taken 3,000 snags and old stumps out of the last place, and that is strong evidence of a sawmill. Those obstructions are left usually for the Government to clear up.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that a lot of this commerce is simply the gravel and sand and stuff they float up and down the river to improve the river, to make these locks and dams and things of that kind, and that they report that as commerce on the river?

Mr. FREAR. There is no question about that on some of the other streams. The engineers say so in many cases.

Mr. CALLAWAY. From the information that the committee gives as to this claim, is it possible for any man who has not made a study of it to give any legitimate, reasonable, intelligent thought to it from the facts that they give as to whether or not the projects ought to be continued or discontinued?

Mr. FREAR. I leave that for the chairman of the committee, who is about to rise.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. It is true some of the commerce going over that river is lumber, but that is not all produced there. The most of it is shipped there by water from other places where there are sawmills and is carried up the river mainly for use in the construction of houses. The town of Tarpon Springs, which is very near the river—in fact, extends to the river—is quite a flourishing town and uses a great deal of building material, hence the large tonnage of lumber on the river. In addition to that it is an important harbor of refuge for vessels in that section of the country, a great many small vessels going in there for shelter in stormy weather. Very large vessels can not go in there, but small craft, fishing smacks, and sponging vessels go in, and some good-sized vessels. And I may say in passing this is the greatest sponge center in the United States, Key West being the next. Nearly all sponges now taken in American waters are gathered in that vicinity and carried to Tarpon Springs, up this very river, where they are cured and dried and sent thence to all parts of the country; some to foreign countries. There are likewise some fish carried in there from up and down the coast and shipped to other parts of the country. I have not had time to investigate as to why the commerce fell off last year, but I may say that it should not have fallen off, as it is a rapidly growing town; one of the most flourishing and progressive towns in the country, and I take it that there has been no real falling off in the commerce. On the contrary, I am sure it is increasing all the while.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, just a few words. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], whether intentionally or unintentionally—and I think intentionally—has left the impression upon the minds of the Members of this House that the only commerce that floats upon that stream—Anclote River—consists of a few logs——

Mr. FREAR. I gave the statistics of the full amount.

Mr. EDWARDS. Let us see if the gentleman did. The gentleman did not mention fish as an item of commerce.

Mr. FREAR. I gave 1,600 tons.

Mr. EDWARDS. There are 800 barrels of fish carried over that stream, and there were 1,500,000 feet b. m. of lumber. The gentleman did not mention merchandise, and there are 1,000 tons of merchandise carried over it. The gentleman did not mention sponges, valued at $1,210,000, that go over this river. He merely pointed out the item of logs and said that that practically was all that goes over the stream. The logs amount in value to only $45,000, while the whole commerce of this river amounts to $1,381,700.

I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if he is going to enlighten the country he ought to deal fairly with this House and with the country, and when he undertakes to attack a stream he ought to give the commerce of it and point out what constitutes the commerce. Now, the sponge item alone in value is $1,210,000. Gentlemen of the House, the item that is carried in this bill for this particular project is only $5,000, and is for the maintenance of the stream, and yet the gentleman tells you in effect this is a great blot upon the country because we appropriate $5,000 to maintain this stream, that has over a million dollars' worth of commerce on it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does not the census report for 1909 show that Florida is the forty-fifth State in the Union in point of commerce? I ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It shows nothing of the kind. It shows it is about the twelfth or thirteenth in point of tonnage.

Mr. DONOVAN. That would be important testimony.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am not advised as to that, but I am quite confident that is not true. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I think it is ridiculous for a Member of this House to stand up here and criticize an item of this kind—$5,000 for maintenance of a stream that carries over a million dollars' worth of commerce—and want to crucify the committee because we have carried that item in the bill, and I think it is but fair to the House when an item of this kind is attacked by a Member that he should give the House the whole truth and not have the House labor under a misapprehension in reference to it.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDWARDS. I will.

Mr. DIES. That is about 20 cents a ton, I take it, for maintaining that stream. That is a very low average for maintaining the waterways of the country, whether ports or rivers, with regard to the amount per ton required for maintenance, is it not?

Mr. EDWARDS. I can not say as to that, but I think it is true.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman from Georgia understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin would abandon all of these streams and ports by cutting off the appropriations for their maintenance?

Mr. EDWARDS. I am persuaded to believe he would abandon everything except those in Wisconsin. Wisconsin has drawn from the National Treasury, down to 1913, the sum of $16,220,390.90, practically everything in Wisconsin completed, and that does not include the Soo, that required something like $50,000,000, and now, Wisconsin having been taken care of, the rest of the States must go begging before the country to have their commerce developed and taken care of.

Mr. DIES. Now that the gentleman is reminded of this perfidious way of getting money from the Treasury and the needs of his State have been supplied, probably he will introduce a bill to return to the Government every dollar which has been so extracted.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would hardly think so; but we will wait and see.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Just one word more. I want to answer the gentleman from Connecticut. He stated a moment ago, interrogatively to be sure, but it was a statement nevertheless, that Florida was the forty-fifth State of the Union in its commerce. I said offhand that it was the fourteenth. I find it is the thirteenth, and has twice as much commerce as the State of Connecticut. Florida, for instance, has about 12,000,000 tons of commerce annually, while his State has about 6,000,000 tons. [Applause.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. There is one thing sure, that Florida has several times as many fingers in the Treasury of the United States as Connecticut. There is no doubt about that. But if he wants to quote from the census, let him tell us the page and line on which he finds it. I ask the question of the gentleman. He assumes so much knowledge, and, of course, if he has so much knowledge, he can answer. I did not make the assertion. It was interrogatory on my part. The gentleman can state truly, and without fear of contradiction, that when it comes to putting fingers in the Treasury Florida has got Connecticut skinned in every way.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can state this also, that when we came to cut the estimates furnished by the War Department for this bill, as we did, we cut 36 per cent out of those for Florida and did not cut one cent from those for the State of Connecticut. [Applause.]

Mr. DONOVAN. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, if I am allowed, that nothing is so pleasing as the applause of the committee when one of the Members has something to say. [Applause.] The committee is in trouble on account of their system of doing business. There is hardly a Member of this House who can vote on a single item of this bill intelligently. I am having trouble to get information. I go to the committee, go to the clerk, and it is not given to me. Now, the gentleman comes in here, and he is in a serious disturbance of mind because a query is propounded. But the applause of the committee is music to his ears. It is always pleasing to gentlemen who are dividing the swag to have our associates sustain us.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The House is very apt to applaud the truth.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] jumps on the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], and asks him if he thinks 20 cents per ton expenditure on a river proposition is excessive. The actual cost of carrying a ton a mile on a railroad, I believe, is between 6 and 7 mills. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] does not think the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to jump on this project when it does not cost over 20 cents a ton for what goes over the route. How far would 20 cents at 7 mills a ton-mile carry freight?

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY (continuing). At 20 cents per ton, it would carry it 285 miles.

Mr. FREAR. I want to assure the gentleman that his basis of computation is entirely wrong, because that freight is costing the Government to-day at the rate of $3 per ton, as I propose to show, after counting the floating logs out.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I am not taking that. I am taking the gentleman's own figures. Twenty cents a ton-mile, the cost of carrying it by rail, would carry every ton on this stream 285 miles. I guarantee—and the gentleman from Texas will not contradict or question that statement—that the freight on that stream is not carried 285 miles for every ton, or one-tenth that far.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. CALLAWAY. If you will calculate the tons that are carried per mile on this stream and see how far actually each ton is carried, you will find that instead of it costing 7 mills a ton-mile, what it costs the railroads of the country, that the Government is paying out ten times 7 mills a ton-mile, or 70 mills a ton, for every ton of freight that is carried on that project. And you object to criticism of a proposition like that.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. The owner does not pay this 20 cents a ton for the carrying of freight. It is the Government's gift for preparing the way to carry the freight.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion to remark last evening that all the revenues of the Government are now going to pay pensions and provide for the wars of the past and the present. I can readily understand what moves the bowels of wrath of my friend to my right from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], but I am puzzled about my colleague from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY]. My friend from Indiana wants to save a little on commerce in order to save the pension appropriation, but where does the trouble of my friend from Texas come in?

Mr. CALLAWAY. It comes in when I see the Treasury looted either by these river and harbor raiders or by the pension raiders, the Army and Navy raiders, and the gentleman from Texas will not dispute that my course has been consistent every time this body has tried to raid the Treasury for pensions, for the Army, for the Navy, or any other of these outrages that are parceled out like this is parceled out.

Mr. DIES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to concede that my friend has objected to a great part of the 76 cents on the dollar of the entire money that is appropriated, and that goes to support war past and present, but does he not think in view of the fact that these pensions are saddled upon us and this great war preparation is saddled upon us that we ought to let some commerce get away from the hills and valleys of this country and pass down its rivers and through its ports to the marts of the world in order to pay the bill? [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DIES. Just a moment.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to answer the question.

Mr. DIES. We have got to develop this great country with its 90,000,000 of people and its broad acres and pay the pensions of my friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], and I ask of him not to become impatient to get it all, but let us build up some business and pay what we already owe.

Now I yield to my friend from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think you can make this donkey, that is already loaded to the "gunnels," rise and hump himself by piling on another brick house.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the truth of it is this: The outgoing commerce of this country is almost $2,000,000,000 a year. Its incoming commerce is tremendous, reaching into the hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet gentlemen stand here and talk about the river and harbor bill as being "graft," affording meat and bread for the sensational newspapers of this country. They do a vast and violent injustice to the commerce through the ports and rivers of this country. [Applause.] Men may laugh at it, but it is not a laughing matter. I know I represent a district, gentlemen of the committee, where 12 years ago we tried to get aid from the Government, and men like the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] were then on the floor of the House and laughed it to scorn, and we could not get a cent for that project; and yet we built it at our own private cost and gave it as a gift to the Government, and to-day it is one of the most important ports in the United States and carries more than 4,000,000 tons of commerce, with a value of almost $100,000,000. I refer to Port Arthur, Tex. If the character of statesmanship now being expressed by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] could have controlled that waterway, Port Arthur would still be a cow range and the Government would have saved its means.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have great respect for the honesty of purpose of both the gentleman from Wisconsin and my colleague from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY], but I think they owe it to their country—and I think my friend from Wisconsin owes it to his State and my other friend and colleague owes it to his State and to the country—to investigate these propositions before they talk about them so glibly.

Just last evening my friend was complaining of a pitiful sum to be expended on three rivers that carried a burden of 300,000 tons. How is the commerce to be carried through the arteries of trade, how is the country to be developed, how are we to carry our lumber and oil and wheat and timber and agricultural products and commerce in general to the sea and through the ports of the sea to the markets of the world, unless the United States Government shall carry on this work? [Applause.] While I respect the integrity and patriotism and purity of purpose of these gentlemen, I do pity their judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, for the enlightenment of the committee I desire to say that the Government engineers——

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a request for unanimous consent, that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto end in five minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes. I have responded to three different interjections that I have had from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I want to speak for five minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then make it eight minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in eight minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that there were 354 rivers and harbors investigated by the Government engineers costing $506,671,600, and on a 3 per cent investment the cost of traffic annually per ton-mile for improving these harbors and streams would be 2$\frac{1}{10}$ mills per ton. The cost of maintenance of these harbors that have been investigated, which is $9,248,900, amounts to 1$\frac{7}{10}$ mills per ton-mile. The original investment at 3 per cent, so far as they have investigated, amounts to 2$\frac{1}{10}$ mills per ton-mile for the tonnage carried. The maintenance to keep them up year by year is 1$\frac{7}{10}$ mills per ton-mile. The commerce on the rivers and harbors I have referred to was originally 276,000,000 tons—in 1907 it was 648,026,400 tons, and in 1912, 722,885,400 tons—showing an increase in place of a decrease, so far as they have been able to investigate. I desire to say that these 354 projects do not include some of the greatest and largest commerce-carrying streams and harbors in the country. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, after the applause ceases from the members of the committee I would like to be heard for a moment. There are two or three gentlemen that I would like to respond to; first, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS].

I will say to him that if anyone on this floor makes a misstatement, either purposely or by mistake, the attention of the House ought to be called to it, and conclusions will then be drawn. For that reason, knowing that the gentleman is mistaken in his statement regarding myself, I call the attention of the House to his quotation from myself when he said I had asserted that logs were all that went over this stream. Was that the gentleman's quotation?

Mr. EDWARDS. No. I said that was the impression left upon the Members' minds by the gentleman's statement.

Mr. FREAR. That was the statement of the gentleman, as reported, and I leave it to the Reporter's notes to determine. I clearly stated that there was 1,600 tons over and above the timber that floated down the stream. The Reporter's notes will so show. If not, it is a fact, nevertheless. I am sure that was my statement.

Mr. EDWARDS. I want to state to the gentleman that I would not knowingly do him an injustice.

Mr. FREAR. I believe not. Yesterday in all the statements and statistics that I offered on this floor I was never corrected in a single instance.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman can hardly ever be corrected in all of them, because that is next to an impossibility.

Mr. FREAR. There is no dispute about the statistics I quoted here, because they came from the engineer's report. I do not desire to misrepresent in a single case.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] I realize, too, that he has certain projects to which we are approaching, and he has been very diligent in calling attention to my own lack of information on some things. He has done it very fairly, and I appreciate the spirit in which he has done it. However, in this case he suggests what is the cost of freight and places it at a very erroneous figure.

This stream, according to the engineers' report, has been improved only 2½ miles. It is a 20-mile project. Outside of the logs that have been floated down the stream, so far as we can gather from the engineers' report, it gives about 1,600 tons as being taken out in little boats, and so on; sixteen hundred and some odd tons at an expenditure of $5,000 is more than a few cents a ton. It amounts to over $3 a ton for 2½ miles. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] says, that is what the Government pays to get a waterway, $3 a ton. The transportation, of course, must thereafter be paid. So I am calling attention to what seems to be an exorbitant figure for carrying on that transportation, $3 a ton for an insignificant commerce. I believe I have done it fairly, or attempted to do so.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I want to finish this thought, because I may not have a chance otherwise.

The gentleman states that the question of pensions enters into it. Gentlemen, I truly believe we all feel that this is the country that we all love now, and we all stand together and are glad that things resulted as they did. The men of the North went down to Texas and did what they could to keep Texas in this Government, whether right or wrong. We are living under that Government now. Those men are old now. I have introduced several pension bills. I have been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions only once, and that was when I was called before the committee. I think I have introduced six or seven bills and perhaps more. In any event, those bills went before this gentleman who sits here at my side, Gen. SHERWOOD, one of the leading Democrats of this House, one of the ablest men in the House, one of the most patriotic men in the House, and I have left it to his judgment and the judgment of his committee entirely as to the merits of those propositions. I believe he would not permit a pension bill to go through that was not a just one, and of course each case has to go through the board down at the Pension Bureau for a report.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is constantly moving to strike out appropriations for the maintenance of rivers and harbors. Is the gentleman sincere about that?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, yes.

Mr. DIES. Would the gentleman have the Government cease to maintain our waterways?

Mr. FREAR. I would not have the Government cease to maintain any reputable waterway. I have said that repeatedly and I reiterate it.

Mr. DIES. What I say about pensions is that we want you to let us do a little business so that we can make the money to pay them.

Mr. FREAR. I do not think it is a question of rubbing one shoulder against another. It seems to me we should legislate on broader grounds, and base our action on the necessity of the Government and the requirements of navigation. For that reason I would urge that anything worthy ought to be cared for. But I do not accept the judgment of a committee that is compelled to sit here and be buffeted around from one Member to another who has projects to put through. The poor chairman of this committee has been made a martyr, as we well know, just by the constant urging of various communities. We have had an evidence of that here upon the floor. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] speaks about appropriations. His State, as I remember, has had $22,000,000 represented in the projects here, and that does not include Galveston Harbor, which I think has had something over $12,000,000, making over $34,000,000. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Removing the water hyacinth, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas: For the removal of the water hyacinth from the navigable waters in the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, so far as it is or may become an obstruction to navigation, $25,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee, whose attention I will appreciate, whether the amount appropriated in this section responds to the request made by the department on the subject?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It does; exactly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to ask him if it is not true that an additional State has been provided for in this appropriation without any increase in the amount?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Does the gentleman mean Alabama?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mississippi.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There was one State added; yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And yet the same amount is appropriated, to be apportioned to five States instead of four.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The assistant to the Chief of Engineers told our committee that that amount would be enough for all of them.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am glad to be told that, so that I may be able to inform the local engineer that we have been assured by the War Department that the amount appropriated here would be enough. In response to my numerous requests for a dredge to clear the rivers of the water hyacinths his reply is always either that the dredge is somewhere else or that there is not a sufficient amount of money for that purpose. May I ask how many dredges there are available for this purpose?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can not tell that. They are not using many dredges in Florida for that purpose.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I know that they are using them in Louisiana, and when the demand is made for a dredge it is always somewhere else, or there is no money available. Some other State has used the proportion of money that ought to have gone to Louisiana.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Dredges are used but very little, if at all, in Florida for that purpose.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I hope the gentleman will allow me to use all the money in my own district, because all the hyacinths in the country seem to congregate there. Sometimes it gets so thick in a stream that even a heavyweight like the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] could walk across it with perfect impunity.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no doubt the gentleman would like to see it all used in his State, but we are going to leave that to the engineers.

Mr. HARRISON. I should not like to see the gentleman use it all in his district. I have some hyacinths in my district.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I notice that Mississippi is included in this paragraph. I hope there will be enough to go around, now that I am assured Florida will not need any of it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope that Mississippi may be able to have some of it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the report of the engineer will show that very little is expended for hyacinths in Florida.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I know very little about hyacinth, for there is none of it in the part of Texas where I live. It appears to me that this would be equivalent to making appropriations to remove hogweed from the public highway. The idea of weeds growing up and stopping traffic in a stream seems ridiculous to me. The idea of a great commercial highway and weeds growing up in it to stop the traffic, and we have got to have an appropriation to get the weeds out of it.

I do not know about these things, but from my knowledge of weeds I never saw them grow up where there was any amount of traffic or commerce. If there is anything growing along there, it looks like it would be a disturbance, and it would not be necessary to appropriate $25,000 to clean the weeds out of a great commercial highway that was necessary to furnish money for pensions, and so forth.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It was not necessary, Mr. Chairman, for the gentleman to inform the House that he did not know anything about hyacinths, for his remarks demonstrate that fact. If he did, he would not be making this speech.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is not the gentleman confusing hyacinths with cactus?

Mr. CALLAWAY. No; cactus does not grow in the highway. Hogweed does not grow in the highway, but hogweed and cactus and hyacinths will come up when there is no traffic there to keep it down. You have got to have some one go along and clean out the bushes and the weeds and the cactus and other stuff when you have nothing else to keep them out of the highway.

Now, I would like to say to the gentleman from Texas who said that this commerce would help us pay our debts. A man engaged in five or six different enterprises would not add another enterprise to it that was not a paying proposition in order to help him. Here is a Government loaded to the gunwales with pensions, naval expenses, Army expenditures, and other follies, and now we want to add a river and harbor bill to enable us to arise and come down the turnpike at a regular Nancy Hanks gait.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin said that the commerce in that stream instead of costing 70 mills a ton-mile to the Government costs $3 a ton for 2 miles, or $1.50 a ton-mile, to carry it, and to engage in that kind of industry is not going to help us pay these debts.

I am willing for this Government, and I want it to lay out any legitimate expenditure on rivers and harbors, but a legitimate expenditure is one that brings a dividend on the expenditure. That is the only kind of a legitimate expenditure for rivers and harbors.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] gave a long list of increased tonnage that comes into the rivers and harbors. The fight that has been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself on the river and harbor bill shows that the tonnage had decreased on the rivers and the canals, and that there had been a steady decrease since 1881. We never questioned the tonnage of the harbors like New York, Galveston, San Francisco, and Philadelphia. When he comes to these it goes to make up the total estimate of the tonnage on rivers and harbors. They do not meet the arguments as to what the tonnage is on the inland rivers and the canals. They give the tonnage where boats have been increasing from 18 feet to 30 and 40 feet, carrying from 1,000 to 15,000 tons of freight. They want to lug that in to swell the total and defend these raids.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] makes some eloquent observations in regard to appropriations concerning water hyacinth. I have often noticed that men frequently make the most eloquent observations about those things concerning which they know the least. Recently I was at Panama on the canal. I noticed on Lake Gatun, which is quite a body of water, and in the streams running into the lake also, vast fields of water lettuce and a few water hyacinth. The water lettuce, which, like the hyacinth, is a water plant, is a plant which propagates rapidly. It has quite a short root, and vessels can go through it without difficulty. The water hyacinth, which also propagates very rapidly, has a very long root, and the people at the canal, after full investigation of the subject, still, possibly, not knowing as much about it as does the distinguished gentleman from Texas, wherever a water hyacinth makes its appearance on any of those waters proceed at once to put it out of business, because they know, if the gentleman from Texas does not know, that if the channel of the canal becomes filled with water hyacinth the most powerful boat will become so entangled in it with its propeller that it will not be able to proceed. Of course, such observations or information will have no effect on the distinguished gentleman from Texas, who fights the hardest when he knows the least.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Blackwater River, Fla.: Completing improvement, $5,000.

[Mr. DONOVAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Channel from Apalachicola River to St. Andrews Bay, Fla.: For maintenance, $10,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to pay to the treasurer of Calhoun County, Fla., out of any funds heretofore appropriated for improving channel from Apalachicola River to St. Andrews Bay, the sum of $400 as full compensation for damage done public highways of said county at points where the adopted line of said channel intersects said highways.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I make the point of order on that portion of the paragraph following the figures "$10,000."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman last year, when the 1914 bill was before the House, made a similar point of order, which was either withdrawn or overruled, because the bill passed, as I recall, with this item in it.

Mr. MANN. I offered to reserve the point of order just this minute. I do not want to waste very much time over a $400 item.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Perhaps the gentleman does not wish to insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. The point of order, I think, was not overruled. It certainly is a good point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Perhaps the gentleman does not care to insist upon his point of order.

Mr. MANN. With my present information, I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman insists upon it I would like to have him state the grounds of his point of order. I did not understand that the gentleman insisted upon it.

Mr. MANN. This is a proposition to pay a claim against the Government, and clearly the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction over that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, we have been doing just that kind of thing from time to time in the river and harbor bills. I know that since I have been a member of this committee we have appropriated sums for like purposes quite a number of times, and it may be true that points of order were made against some of them, and that several of them have been adopted. It is very clear from the reading of the item what it is intended to do. When that channel was constructed through Calhoun County in the western part of Florida, it went across two highways, as I recall, causing damage to the county. The purpose of this provision is to reimburse the county for this damage. If we are authorized to dig a channel there across the highways, it would seem to me that we should also have authority to pay the county for whatever damage we may cause her. In other words, that where we cause damage or incur a debt in the interest of navigation, that we should and would have the power and authority to discharge the debt or pay the damage.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I served on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in 1909–10, and during my membership on that committee the committee reported an item for the reimbursement of the owners of property on the Monongahela River, which was destroyed as the result of a flood that broke down a dam adjacent to the property. A point of order was made against the recommendation of the committee and a suggestion was made that the person in whose behalf the recommendation was made could have nothing more than a claim against the Government. The then presiding officer of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union held that the point of order was well taken. The item was stricken from the bill and it was referred to the Committee on Claims, where I presume it is now pending. It is on all fours with this, and this is undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. In the same bill of 1910 I find an item on page 25 in respect to the Kentucky River:

Provided further, That out of the amount herein appropriated the sum of $6,000 may be expended for the construction of a bridge——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum in the committee, and the parliamentary procedure and our rules require that a quorum be present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members are present, a quorum. [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, when interrupted by the point of no quorum I was calling attention to the bill of 1910 to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] referred. At the bottom of page 25, and in the shape of a proviso, it says:

Provided further, That of the amcunt herein appropriated the sum of $6,000 may be expended in the construction of a bridge across Tates Creek and restoration of the county road near Otter Creek, both of which items of work have been rendered necessary by construction of Locks and Dams 9 and 10, Kentucky River.

And in the bill of 1912 there was a similar item:

For reimbursing the county of Madison, in the State of Kentucky, for moneys expended by said county for the repair of said county roads near Otter Creek.

Of course that does not fully answer the point of order in that the point of order was not made. It simply shows what we have been doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Did these items remain in the bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was reading from the act as approved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Might I ask the gentleman if the gentleman means to cite a paragraph of a former act as a warrant that it is within the power of the committee to report an item in case a point of order has not been raised?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I would not go to that extent; I was simply stating the manner in which we had proceeded heretofore. Custom often makes law, at least in construing a rule it is always useful to know what has been the practice under it.

Mr. DONOVAN Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has a Member the right to demand a division or tellers if there should be a dispute on account of the number present when trying to find a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair is uncertain of the correctness of the count, the Chair may order a count.

Mr. DONOVAN. That question was suggested by my looking over the crowd here. I think there was a mistake made in finding 125.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not take the trouble to count. There are at least 150.

Mr. DONOVAN. Oh, the gentleman may be a lightning calculator, but——

Mr. MANN. Well, I made the count, and that is more than the gentleman from Connecticut did.

Mr. DONOVAN. There are a good many things I do not make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair counted.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the Chair decide we are entitled to tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair thinks tellers are necessary, the Chair will order them. [Applause.] No; a Member is not entitled to call for tellers.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has he a right to have a division?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair thinks not. The Chair is in doubt as to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, as to what the proper decision is, and, if there is no objection, the Chair would like to pass that over for a short time.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Choctawhatchee River, Fla. and Ala.: For maintenance of improvement, including Cypress Top Outlet, $30,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I desire to say, in this connection, Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to present in these projects different kinds of propositions, so far as possible. The gentleman from Florida asked me a few moments ago if sentiment controlled my soul to such an extent that I refused to strike out the Suwanee River. I had not noticed the Suwanee River, and only know it ranks deservedly high in the halls of fame. Many of these projects I have examined, and in reference to some of the projects I have considered particular phases that are presented in the engineer's report, and I have such a case to present. It is not a duplication of the same character of traffic or anything of that kind, but it presents a different proposition entirely. I trust the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee will aid us in arriving at an understanding of what the engineers mean in this case. The Choctawhatchee River has a total appropriation of $255,300. There was available October, 1914, $20,079, and $30,000 is asked for here. The project has been completed, according to the engineer's report. This is what I desire to call the attention of the committee to: "From the mouth of the Holmes River," the engineers say, "to the mouth of the Choctawhatchee River, 40 miles, a channel of 4 feet exists." "This is the head of navigation," say the engineers, page 657; and they further say that there is no commerce on the river above the mouth of Holmes River, except for logs. Now, the commerce is given on page 2156 as 73,877 tons, of which logs and timber amount to 46,841, leaving a net traffic, after deducting floatable material, of 27,036 tons. This lumber is all upon a 40-mile haul, according to the engineer's report, but if you will examine on page 2156, you will observe, next to the last column, the freight traffic. The intelligent engineer says that the average haul is from 110 to 120 miles for all this traffic.

Now, how is that possible to occur on a 40-mile stream, which is the head of navigation according to his own statement? How can you get the per-ton mileage, as they endeavored to do here, of 110 to 120 miles for all this traffic? I ask for the purpose of getting information as to the accuracy of such a report.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the gentleman ask that question of me?

Mr. FREAR. No; of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the length of the river.

Mr. FREAR. I will give the gentleman the pages on which the information can be found.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of the entire river, I think it is from 150 to 160 miles.

Mr. FREAR. The engineer says that no commerce exists above the mouth of Holmes River except logs—page 657—and also says:

From the mouth of the Holmes River to the mouth of the Choctawhatchee River, a distance of about 40 miles.

Mr. SPARKMAN. To be exact, the precise length of the project is 162 miles.

Mr. FREAR. Then the engineer is mistaken in his statement that no commerce on the river exists above the mouth of the Holmes River?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It seems he is correct except as to the logs.

Mr. FREAR. Except the logs. He takes all the items, and if the gentleman will examine the record he will find about 20 of them. With the exception of one item of 90 miles, they all run from 100 to 120 miles. We have been frequently referred to the engineers in regard to the ton-mile——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no explanation to make myself. Probably it is a typographical error. I would like to read something here when the gentleman has finished, or I can read it now if he prefers, and I think it will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. In reference to this project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; on the estimate. It is a report made by the Chief of Engineers or the assistant to the chief—Col. Taylor—to the committee regarding that particular work. He says:

We have not had money enough there to properly snag the river, and all of the money that has been appropriated for several years has been expended on the lower river.

That is the part where navigation now exists; and I want to say that I personally know something of this river. It is not in the district I now represent. I did represent it years ago, but Florida has grown so that west Florida, in which this stream is located, is outside of my district. When I knew it there was quite a traffic above the point where it is said to exist now. I have seen steamboats running up beyond the point which they say is the head of steamboat navigation now. Col. Taylor says further:

Lately they have attempted to establish a steamboat line on the upper river, and we have been unable, on account of a scarcity of money, to do the work which ought to have been done and which they now say they will make use of on the upper river. All the balance there is the money that was allotted from the 1914 act. Work has been stopped there for some time. We have not had money enough to extend the work up as far as it should have been done. His estimate calls for dredging at the mouth of Cypress Top Outlet, $10,000; snagging between the mouth and Geneva, $40,000; total, $50,000; less balance available, $20,000, leaves $30,000 to be provided.

Now, this project extends up into the State of Alabama, and, as I have just said, there was an important commerce on that river years ago, and by reason of the fact that the stream was permitted to deteriorate the steamboat navigation has stopped. They want to restore it, and that is the purpose of this appropriation.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to read those portions of the engineer's report which have been given to us. This is the information that comes to the committee and to the House. He says, on page 657:

The total amount expended on all projects to the end of the fiscal year 1914 was $233,128.92.

The project has been completed, and the additional work required is for maintenance.

Then reading down below:

The actual head of navigation for regular traffic on June 30, 1914, was the mouth of Holmes River.

Variation in water surface from 0 at mean low water to 28 feet at upper limit of the project.

There is no commerce on the river above the mouth of Holmes River with the possible exception of a small movement of logs. Below this point there is a large commerce in logs and hewn timbers, and several steamers ply between Pensacola and Vernon on the Holmes River.

I gave the amount of commerce shown by the report. The question I desire to call the committee's attention to at this time is, Why does the engineer, on page 156, give the average haul and distance freight carried? Does he do so in order to ascertain the rate per ton-mile, and how does he reach from 100 to 120 miles, when, as a matter of fact, he says right in the same connection it is only 40 miles? All miscellaneous traffic runs only 40 miles, according to his statement, and yet he puts it 120 miles. What I ask the chairman is, Can we rely on the engineer's report in regard to the amount of traffic?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—I am not going to object at this time, but I will object to any further extension. We have been on this bill very nearly a week, and time is valuable in this Congress. There has been a vaudeville performance against this bill going on for some time.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from Georgia is not talking to the point of order. He can not take the floor on a subterfuge and talk about extraneous matters.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman is mistaken as usual.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me to be a remarkable spectacle that in the $34,000,000 bill that has been discussed less than two entire days, we should be criticized for inquiring as to facts. We are entitled to know the truth as to items like this in which engineers have made a wrong statement. I can not believe it was done purposely. I say it is a remarkable thing that we can not acquire information and are challenged as to our right of inquiry. I do not believe the gentleman from Georgia is going to insist upon that course of conduct. At least he will surely not expedite matters by so doing. I have found many cases in which the engineers failed to give satisfactory responses in regard to the amount of commerce, but if there is no explanation to be offered, of course, that is all I can ask in regard to it. I think, in view of the situation, that paragraph ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that should be done by any means. I can not at this moment explain what the gentleman thinks is a discrepancy between the two statements. Possibly the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MULKEY], whose constituents are interested in the portion of the stream in Alabama and also in that part in Florida, can explain.

Mr. FREAR. I did not want to make him responsible for the engineer's act, because I do not think the engineer himself can explain.

Mr. MULKEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MULKEY. I think the statement of the gentleman should not go unchallenged as to this particular river. I happen to live at the head of navigation on the Choctawhatchee, in the town of Geneva. And the river from that point to the bay is 120 miles in length. I happen to go up and down the river twice a year in a gasoline launch. If the gentleman would go down there and take one of those fishing trips with me and encounter the snags and the timber and the rocks, as we do, and have to go overboard occasionally, he would not only be willing to give us this appropriation, but he would be willing to augment it.

Now, there is a large class of people below me for 30 or 40 miles who practically have no market. The country is filling up. The lack of market is due to the fact that we can not get transportation on the river by which their wants as to merchandise can be supplied, and through which they could get their commodities to market. The upper portion of the river has been navigable for years. Steamboats ran regularly from Pensacola to Geneva for a number of years, and ought to run now in the interests of the people and the merchants. The navigable portion of the river is 120 miles in length. I know that to be true. I wish to disabuse the mind of the gentleman to the effect that it is only 46 miles. I wish to state that the appropriation for this object is absolutely worthy, but inadequate. Thirty thousand dollars, I believe, is the amount. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his opposition to it, and I feel that if he knew the facts as I do he would not. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut calls for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes were 7 and the noes were 57.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum. The body can proceed to business.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut withdraws the point of no quorum. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alabama River, Ala.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, including the Alabama and Coosa Rivers between Montgomery and Wetumpka, $125,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, strike out lines 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I would say this in respect to the paragraph, that I dislike to be placed in a position of striking out the entire appropriation, although there may be a sufficient amount of money on hand to take care of it.

But I want to call attention to what has occurred on the Alabama River. The total appropriation has been $1,214,000 and there was allotted last October $50,000, leaving a balance of $63,609. The existing project has a 4-foot depth from Wetumpka on the Coosa River. In October, 1914, the maximum draft to Montgomery was 2½ feet. Between Montgomery and Wetumpka it was 2 feet. The variation of water was 59 feet. The commerce reported is 250,000 tons; logs and timber rafted, 73,000 tons; and does not cover other timber. Snag boats reported trees removed, 130; logs removed, 529; snags removed, 145; piles, 138; logs from banks, 137; overhanging trees clipped, 577; trees trimmed, 60; total, 1,196.

The point I want to make is this: On page 669 appears this statement:

One of the barge lines established in 1910 has been abandoned.

I realize the condition on that river may be sufficient to cause the abandonment of a line of boats. I will ask the chairman if he can give us any light on that or reason for that in view of the fact that there is $63,000 now available, or whatever the amount is, for improvement on that river?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman to this effect: If the gentleman had noticed more closely, he would have found that this sum of $125,000 was the largest amount yet appropriated for that particular project. It is due to the fact that it is for 15 months instead of the ordinary time of 12 months' appropriation. When the matter was up before the committee we sent for the engineer, to know whether it could be reduced. The reply was it could not be, because of the longer time to elapse before another appropriation could be had.

As to the barge line the gentleman speaks of, I do not know the details of it. I did not expect such an inquiry. It did not strike me as important. All I knew about it was what I read casually in a newspaper. I think the temporary stoppage of the barge line grew out of some trouble down at my end of the river at Mobile. But it did not affect the merits of this project, so far as I can understand.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I happen to know that one of the reasons why this barge line was temporarily discontinued was due to the fact of unusually low water for about 15 or 20 miles below Montgomery during the particular season of the year when the principal produce shipped out of Montgomery—that of cotton—was being handled.

The appropriation is for the purpose of making this river deeper; and whenever the depth reaches a point that the line can be operated all the year round from Montgomery, the capital of the State, to Mobile, then the merchants of Montgomery themselves will see that this barge line is continued, as they have done heretofore. [Applause.]

I desire to add in this connection the following item, appearing in the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser of January 15, as follows:

RIVER TRAFFIC TO MOBILE OPEN AGAIN—NAVIGATION OF ALABAMA WILL BE RESUMED AT ONCE IS ANNOUNCEMENT—SCHEDULE BEGINS TUESDAY.

River navigation will be resumed between Montgomery and Mobile. This was the text of an announcement made by the transportation committee of the chamber of commerce yesterday afternoon.

The river steamer America will reach the Montgomery wharf Saturday afternoon and will leave with a full cargo early Sunday morning bound for Mobile and intermediate points.

The regular schedule will begin next Tuesday afternoon. A river steamer, probably the Peerless, will reach Montgomery every Tuesday afternoon between 4 and 7 o'clock and will leave the next morning early for the return trip to Mobile.

Earl G. Lutz has been appointed the local agent for those promoting the new river line, and he is authority for the statement that this line is permanent.

I call attention to the fact that in 1909 the city of Montgomery, in its municipal capacity, established a modern wharf, which permits free loading and unloading at any stage of the river.

The freight of all descriptions on this river during the calendar year 1913 amounted to 153,295 short tons, of the value of $6,141,808. It is unnecessary to say more in behalf of this item of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the Chair reserved his decision on the point of order which I made on page 17, lines 11 to 18. Upon refreshing my recollection of what took place last year on this item, I wish to withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, just to suggest what was not put in the RECORD a moment ago, I desire to say that on the Alabama River last year there was something more than $6,000,000 of commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tombigbee River, Ala. and Miss.: For maintenance of improvement from the mouth to Demopolis, Ala., $54,500, and from Demopolis, Ala., to Walkers Bridge, Miss., $10,000; in all, $64,500.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. I asked it yesterday, but I am inclined to think it was not granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago some question was raised with regard to the Suwanee River in Florida. I think the objection was based very largely upon poetic grounds. The Suwanee River has a place in history, and I hope in practice it works out as well as in popular song

Mr. DONOVAN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not talking to the subject matter before us.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has no music or poetry in his soul. I was beginning to approach the subject in a perfectly parliamentary way. I said that reference had been made to the Suwanee River as a poetic stream. Evidently up in the gentleman's district they do not appreciate music.

The Tombigbee River is a stream which is just as classic as the Suwanee. Ballads have been written about it, prose has been woven about it, men have spoken eloquently upon it, swains have paddled their canoes upon it, but I have seldom heard anyone describe its usefulness as an artery of commerce. I desired to know whether there was anyone in the House who could tell us just why we should spend this large sum of money, $64,500, upon a stream that is famous chiefly in song and story.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the gentleman expect me to answer his question?

Mr. MOORE. I had not thought of it. I usually ask a question with the expectation that some one will answer who knows something about the subject. Therefore I would not be apt to ask the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman might at least propound his questions in a parliamentary way.

Mr. MOORE. I am still within my rights, Mr. Chairman, I think, speaking in my own time.

Mr. MADDEN. I think there is only one man on the floor of the House who understands the Tombigbee River, and that is my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. I suppose he could answer the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Now that is a happy suggestion. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is usually on the floor. I have been wondering whether he could tell us about this interesting item of the Tombigbee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. This is not his part of the river.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Mississippi does not fool with the big end of the river. It is the little poetic end of it with which he is familiar.

Mr. GOULDEN. I submit that he knows all about it, from one end to the other.

Mr. MOORE. "On the Tombigee River, so bright. I was born, in a hut made of husks of the tall yellow corn." I think that is the way it goes. Now, if the gentleman from Mississippi can not find inspiration there, I would be glad to have him explain the financial part of the item.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is very easy to do, Mr. Chairman. There is no question but that this is one of the most magnificent rivers in all the world. It is known in poetry and song. It has inspired poets. It would inspire anyone who has the milk of human kindness in his soul. It has inspired the most beautiful poetry in all the world.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman favor spending this sum of $64,500 on the Tombigbee River?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Why, certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not interrupt his own witness. He has brought him out and he is estopped from interfering with him.

Mr. MOORE. I was doing it dreamingly, in my own time, which was more than the gentleman from Georgia was doing, for he was borrowing time which belonged to me—and time is precious.

Mr. ADAMSON. I made a point of order, and that did not come out of anybody's time.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman if this river sleeps in its own bed?

Mr. FREAR. Before yielding to the gentleman from Mississippi I just want to state the facts and to ask a question of the gentleman from Mississippi, who is probably familiar with the river.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. I am not going to strike out this item, because the appeal of the gentleman from Mississippi starts the milk of human kindness——

Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Wisconsin has just indicated that he does not intend to strike out this item. My parliamentary inquiry is, Can the gentleman, being but a single Member of the House, strike out the item?

Mr. FREAR. I accept the correction of my friend from Pennsylvania. To follow along his line of argument, I will state that there has been spent upon the Tombigbee River so far $9,901,295.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. I did not hear the amount the gentleman stated.

Mr. FREAR. There has been expended on the river $9,901,295.

Mr. DONOVAN. Nearly $10,000,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is, on the whole system of rivers there.

Mr. FREAR. Yes. The commerce has amounted to 64,523 tons, including timber and stone to the amount of 48,492 tons, leaving a balance of 16,031 tons besides timber and stone.

Mr. MOORE. And the appropriation here contemplated is $64,500?

Mr. FREAR. It is $64,500.

Mr. MOORE. On a tonnage of what?

Mr. FREAR. The tonnage is 64,523, including 48,492 tons of timber and stone.

Mr. MOORE. That is a good river to sing about.

Mr. FREAR. I wish to ask a question, which I am going to put to the gentleman from Alabama. To my mind, this is of much importance to the committee. The engineer's report, on page 690, states:

Such a traffic was inaugurated during the fiscal year by a fleet of six self-propelled steel barges, each of about 1,000 tons capacity, transporting coal from a point on the Black Warrior River near Gilmore, Ala., to New Orleans. Due to the unfinished state of the project, upon the approach of low water operations had to be abandoned, 31,865 tons having been shipped to New Orleans.

I wish to ask the gentleman whom I interrupted a few moments ago whether or not it has been found practicable to undertake a commercial business upon that river with a 63-foot lock, with six barges, as has been stated by the engineers, who report that it has been abandoned? Is it possible to do that in the future, no matter what provisions you have made for the river?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. In the judgment of the committee, not until the river is made navigable. You can not run barges until the river is made navigable.

Mr. FREAR. What would be the probable expense?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Let me answer your question as you put it.

Mr. FREAR. I was going to supplement it by asking what, in the judgment of the gentleman, would be the probable expense of making the river navigable. I am not asking technically, for I could get that from the engineer's report, but in a general way?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I see that the gentleman is not asking it technically.

Mr. FREAR. No; because I could get that from the engineer's report, providing anybody knows.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The Tombigbee River, as a matter of fact, not as the gentleman has it in his mind, begins in the central part of Alabama.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, there is no motion before the House at the present time.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I thought I moved to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is discussing the subject matter of the paragraph and will proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the Tombigbee River starts with the name of that river from Demopolis, and 50 miles above Mobile it joins with the Alabama and makes the Mobile River. At Demopolis it goes northwest into the State of Mississippi and is called the Bigbee River. To the right and northeast to Tuscaloosa it is called the Warrior River, and from Tuscaloosa up to the forks it is called the Black Warrior River. At the forks it is called the Mulberry and the Locust Forks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I ask for five minutes to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The river in Alabama is known and called in its several parts from head to mouth the Black Warrior, the Warrior, the Tombigbee, and the Mobile. That is the entire length of that river. That is the waterway that has cost in the neighborhood of $9,000,000. This project will be finished as a canalization by the completion of the lock and dam at Lock 17. It is not finished to-day, but it is expected that it will be finished early in January. I expect to see it finished, at least, by the 1st of March, 1915.

Above Lock 17, as originally reported, there were four locks to be built, and in 1911 or 1912 these four locks were merged into one to save expense and to make better slack-water navigation. This one dam was raised to 63-foot lift, making it one of the highest dams in the United States. That lock and dam have been pushed expeditiously by the contractor, and, I am informed and believe, will be finished in this month or by spring. Then there will be navigation throughout. There never can be navigation to reach the Great Warrior coal fields until Lock 17 is completed. My information is that barges are now ready to take advantage of that business just as soon as this lock is finished.

It is necessary that they should have the $54,500, so the engineers say, and that is the lowest sum that could be safely appropriated at this time in this bill in order to put into operation the canal upon which the $9,000,000 has been expended. If the gentleman desires any further information, I will be glad to give it to him.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, my previous remarks were made as a preface to making later a statement in reference to the commerce. In response to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my good friend Mr. MOORE, as to whether I thought this appropriation was justifiable, I will state I certainly do think so, as the commerce on the river as shown by the report was 287,034 tons, of a value of $4,925,490. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR], who has just taken his seat, gave a history of the improvement of the lower part of the river. The improvement on the lower part, of course, should be done before the improvement on the upper part, which will bring splendid results. There is no question about the commerce; there is no question about the value. We want the money to open it up, and we will show that it is a good investment for the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Channel connecting Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound, Ala.: The $20,000 conditionally appropriated by the river and harbor act approved March 4, 1913, for improvement of said channel by way of Grants Pass is hereby made available for maintenance of the existing improved channel by way of Pass aux Herons.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item looks to me as though it was a great deal like the proposition which was offered last night, which was not allowed. I think it was the Maryland proposition, if I remember rightly. All they asked was an appropriation to be allowed that had not been expended, that had been voted at some previous time.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It was for Virginia.

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, whatever it was. Here the committee is asking that $20,000, heretofore conditionally appropriated, be made available for this particular channel. Is that the channel which it was originally appropriated for, I will ask some member of the committee? I do not seem to get any reply.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. DONOVAN. They tell me there are twenty-odd members of the committee here, and I do not know whether they are neglecting their duty or not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I would be very glad if the gentleman would confine himself to questions, if he is addressing me.

Mr. DONOVAN. I am not necessarily questioning the gentleman from Alabama. Is this appropriation by this act for the same channel that it was originally appropriated for? Is it for the channel between Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound? Was it originally voted for that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I can not answer the question without stating exactly the conditions.

Mr. DONOVAN. Take all the time I have—go ahead.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Oh, no.

Mr. DONOVAN. It is information that we want.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I will endeavor to give it to the gentleman. There was a pass, called Grants Pass, connecting Mobile Bay with Mississippi Sound for many years, owned by old Capt. Grant, whose rights in that pass, which it was thought were absolute, have been practically vested in the Catholic Church in the city of Mobile. The right to make charges and collect tolls was claimed on vessels passing through what is called Grants Pass. For many years there has been considerable agitation of the question in Mobile, and sometimes in Congress. At last a survey was ordered to establish definitely a pass that would be satisfactory from Mobile Bay into Mississippi Sound, either by way of the Pass aux Herons or Grants Pass, which lay very close together. On the report of the engineers the following law was enacted as part of the river and harbor act of 1913:

Improving channel connecting Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound, Ala.: The project adopted by the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, may, upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and approval of the Secretary of War, be modified to include the whole or any part of Grants Pass: Provided, That all rights claimed in and to Grants Pass shall be released and surrendered to the United States, and that any saving or difference in the cost of actual construction that may result from the use of any or all of Grants Pass may, as compensation for said rights, be paid to the present owners of the pass or their assigns: Provided further, That the total cost of the completion of the project shall not be thereby increased except to the extent of $20,000, which amount is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That not more than $20,000 shall be paid in any case for all rights claimed in and to said Grants Pass.

The $20,000 so appropriated conditionally is still in the hands of the Government. Every effort has been made to have the War Department so construe the language that that $20,000 could be paid over to the owners of Grants Pass, but the legal authorities who have investigated the matter say that that was not the meaning of the law and that it can not be done. Therefore that money remains in the Treasury unexpended. The engineers called for $20,000 for maintenance this year at Pass aux Herons, and when we were trying to cut this bill as much as we could, asking whether $20,000 was not too much, whether it could not be cut, they said no, but that there was a fund which had already been appropriated and was unexpended and which could be diverted and used for maintenance at this pass. If the gentleman will read the language of the act, he will find that that was exactly what is done in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph for the purpose of getting further information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DONOVAN. This is true, is it not, that the $20,000 originally appropriated was for another place, another channel from this pass for which it is going to be appropriated. Is that right?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I do not think that is true.

Mr. DONOVAN. But this Grants Pass was a private way, so to speak. It was claimed to be a private right.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. It was claimed to be a private right. It was originally granted by the State of Alabama.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is this improved channel the same place?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No; it is Pass aux Herons, and the two run side by side.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then it is a different place where this money is to be used?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No; it is the pass that the engineers reported to Congress, that was adopted by Congress, and is now called Pass aux Herons.

Mr. DONOVAN. But you got rid of meeting this question of private ownership and private interest, is that it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. No; we did not get rid of that at all. That question can come up. I have so advised the owners and will be very glad to help them in any way to bring this matter up as a matter of claim, but not through the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut withdraws the amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pascagoula Harbor, Miss.: For maintenance of channels through Horn Island Pass, Mississippi Sound, Pascagoula River, and Dog River, $15,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Out of deference to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], I am not going to move to strike out the paragraph; in fact, it is an inquiry I wish to make, if I can get enlightenment from him. I will give the facts, and then I will ask the question. The past appropriations for this project have amounted to $1,312,153 and this item of the bill carries $121,000, with $30,123 on hand July 1, 1914, for a channel with a proposed depth of 25 feet. The part I wish to call attention to is this: On page 730 the engineer says that under the present contract local interests must give assurance to contribute $100,000, at $20,000 per annum, and also 800 feet of wharf. Dropping down to page 2209 of volume 2, the engineer says this:

It is believed the wharf will be built and the payment of $100,000 will not have to be made by local interests.

What is the reason the contribution of $100,000 first insisted upon by the engineers is not made, and why has the change occurred?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in whose district this is.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that this improvement at Pascagoula, Miss., is not new. We have been expending money there for quite a while and through these appropriations they have built up quite a large commerce there. The commerce at Pascagoula now approximates $7,000,000 annually, and their desire is to obtain approximately 22 feet depth. The reason why the $100,000 conditional provision was stricken out was because the Board of Engineers, after having investigated it thoroughly, and the committee as well, concluded it was an unfair condition that they had imposed upon the Pascagoula people. For instance, the estimate for the 17-foot channel at Pascagoula which they now have was $1,050,000. The 17-foot channel which they have now finished cost the Government practically $800,000.

Mr. FREAR. At this point may I ask the gentleman what is the character of the commerce?

Mr. HARRISON. The character of the commerce is largely lumber.

Mr. FREAR. Is there a sawmill in operation there?

Mr. HARRISON. There are a good many sawmills there, as well as other large industries.

Mr. FREAR. That is what I assumed.

Mr. HARRISON. Also naval stores and things of that kind, but largely lumber; so the Government on the 17-foot project really was saving about $250,000 or $300,000 from what the Board of Army Engineers estimated it would cost to build a 17-foot project, and when the 22-foot project was estimated at a cost of $383,000 they imposed a condition there—notwithstanding the fact that the harbor did not cost within $200,000 to $300,000 of the original estimate of the engineers—that at Moss Point and Pascagoula, which are 4 miles apart, public wharves must be provided. The citizens had no objection to that. They are small towns, with 2,500 or 3,500 people living there. They have provided these public wharves at an expense of about $50,000. The wharves at one of these towns cost, I think, $20,000 and the other $25,000. When this unjust $100,000 condition was placed before the Board of Army Engineers they said: "We will not approve this project of $383,000 without the condition being complied with, but we will cut it down to $283,000, and allow the expenditure by the Government of that much, provided the two towns provide these public wharves and the citizens pay for it, so that such depth can be procured there as possible with an appropriation of $283,000." We hope to obtain the 20-foot or 21-foot channel with the appropriation.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to strike out the paragraph, and as I said I do not intend to pursue that course hereafter simply to get facts, but what I do desire to say is this, that this project emphasizes the fact, in my judgment, that it is improper under present conditions to leave these questions to Army engineers to determine for themselves what amount should be charged up against a locality. Here is a community which is required to pay a certain proportion while another is relieved, and injustice occur necessarily in many cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the present system is indefensible.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. In just a moment. I will give way to the gentleman in a moment. I desire to say that the Army engineers are not more competent to pass upon these questions nor do they pass upon them with any degree of accuracy, because conditions are very frequently modified. It seems to me the responsibility should be delegated to some one else if a contribution is to be imposed in any case. Take this case. Here is practically a sawmill operation by which there is something like 20,000 tons, of which 15,000 is charcoal. Now, they impose this charge. I think the responsibility ought not to be left with the Army engineers.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman, who has made a study of these questions, whether he believes the Army engineers in their report pass upon the feasibility, the real commercial feasibility, of a project, or whether they simply say that this can be done regardless of expense?

Mr. FREAR. They assume to pass upon the commercial possibility and set those questions out in their report and give the possibilities of commerce very frequently. As to their ability to do so, I do not believe they are competent to do so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman says they assume to do it. The law requires them to do it.

Mr. FREAR. I presume that is true.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And while I agree very largely with what the gentleman says about the Army engineers perhaps not being better qualified than anybody else, does he not think they are as well qualified to determine——

Mr. FREAR. I think a board composed of men of the high character, such as the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that would measure the possibilities of commerce, would be far better able to handle such matters.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is it not a fact that these Army engineers are usually West Pointers, that go into West Point before they have ever had any experience in business, and we spend $22,000 educating them as scientific engineers, and they come out in the Government service and draw a monthly stipend? As a general thing the men passing on this are not experienced men at all in operating business on their own hook, where they necessarily must make their business pay a dividend. Is it not a fact that these are the men that this committee is handing up to us each day as passing on these projects as to whether or not they are good commercial investments, men that were not required ever to earn their living in the marts of trade or any other business, but have drawn a salary all their lives?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest something right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The Panama Canal was dreamed of 400 years ago. The first dream that ever came was in the mind of a Spanish engineer. He was not a railroad engineer—I mean, he did not drive an engine—but he was a civil engineer under the Spanish King, and he dreamed of opening the canal between the two oceans. For 400 years that matter was dreamed of, talked of, thought of. France took it and tried to carry it on for a number of years along the line the gentleman speaks of. Men of intelligence, men of high engineering capacity, men of importance, men of affairs—but they failed. The United States took it up, and put it in the hands of such men as the gentleman speaks of, and very properly, and for a time they tried it—but they failed. The canal was never built until a United States engineer took charge of it, and now it is a finished thing. [Applause.]

I want to say the man who has the highest credit for the building of it, Col. Goethals, was educated on the Tennessee River in Alabama, and learned there how to build the Panama Canal; that the man who built the Gatun Dam at Panama was born in Alabama and educated on the Tennessee River along the very line we are discussing here of river and harbor improvement. His name is William L. Siebert. He built the Gatun Dam and stopped the mighty torrent of the Chagres River. In the days of old, when Canute spoke as a king, before the days of the kings of commerce and the kings of finance, and stood at the ocean side and ordered the sea to stand still, it paid no attention to him. But when you put an Army boy, an Army engineer educated at West Point, in front of the Chagres River, which had stampeded France with all her intelligence, at the end of 10 years, under the charge of William L. Siebert and of Col. Goethals and of Col. Gaillard and all those other gentlemen educated at West Point, it stood still, and to-day it is still. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, that is a very eloquent speech.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. One minute, my friend.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I have never said anything about the capacity of these men to determine whether or not a thing could be done. The question is not whether these projects can be carried out if you put money enough in them. The point that I made was, and the question that ought to concern this House is, and the question that concerns these people that put up the money is, whether or not this is a good investment from a business viewpoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes, Mr. Chairman, in order to complete my statement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. The gentleman was discussing the Army engineers, and I thought I would give him a little light on the subject.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You want to give light, but you run into the darkness with your candle. That is the way with this committee. It does not meet the issue at all. It was not a question of whether or not a project is feasible after these engineers have passed on it. Of course they are educated to determine whether or not a thing can be accomplished. They go there and work out their plan and determine its feasibility. They are educated with capacity to do that. They can tell whether or not it can be done. But they have no experience in earning money. They have not gone out into the highways and byways of commerce and labored to make a dollar bring back a dividend. They have never had any experience of that kind, and when they come in with the feasibility of a project, we can say, "Oh, yes; you are to determine whether or not it can be done." But when you go to determine whether or not it is a proper outlay of our money, then we ought to come to the front and determine, after they have given us the expert and scientific knowledge, whether or not our dollars put into that proposition are going to bring back a dividend on the investment.

I hire a doctor to come and doctor me, and I take his medicine because I look to his scientific knowledge. I hire an engineer to go and lay out a proposition for me and determine whether or not it can be done, what the expense of it will be; but when that is done I determine for myself whether or not I want to carry that proposition out and put my money into it. I do not ask him to determine whether or not my money shall go into it, and this is the thing I am objecting to in following these engineers' reports. I say—and there is no question about the rightness of it—that they have had no experience in the world of business; they have never earned their dollars. They have worked to determine whether a thing can be done. We wish to follow them so far as their scientific knowledge can determine those questions, and then put our experience and observation to it to determine whether or not we want to put our money in it.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. Does not the gentleman think the Army engineers are as competent as anybody he could pick to gather statistics under the law, with the appropriations Congress makes for such purpose?

Mr. CALLAWAY. That is not the thing I am talking about. I said that they could gather statistics, and should. You want us to follow them as to whether or not we put our money into it.

Mr. SWITZER. Another thing.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Blaze away.

Mr. SWITZER. Is it not a fact that they gather all the facts pertaining to a proposition, and report on them to the Congress, that go to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the Rivers and Harbors Committee first passes on them and then this House passes on them?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Are you not a member of the committee?

Mr. SWITZER. Is it not a fact that——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more. I have not heretofore taken up much of the time of this committee, Mr. Chairman, and I have consistently and persistently opposed these measures for three years, and I think I ought to be heard on matters like this when members of the committee are shooting at me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph end after three minutes.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this paragraph end in eight minutes, then.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Who is to have the eight minutes?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Three to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] and five to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] asked me to yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman claim that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is bound by the report of the Army engineers as to whether a project will be a paying proposition or not? Is not that matter left to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and to the Congress?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Under the law, according to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], they are required to find that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But we are not required to follow them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Of course; neither is the House required to follow you; but it does, just as sheep follow the bellwether.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The House follows its own judgment in the matter. The gentleman would not want to handicap the House in that direction, would he?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that you do follow the engineers' reports, and whenever we question you you cite us to the volumes of engineers' reports as to whether or not it ought to be done, and what the commerce on the river will be? Those are the things you cite us to. Those were the things I inquired about when I asked about this Beaufort expenditure.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. We do not follow the engineers simply because they make a favorable recommendation. The gentleman is advised that $100,000,000 of projects have been recommended now that we have declined to accept.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I thought you said $150,000,000 yesterday, and added: "Just wait until next year; we will attend to them then."

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Has the gentleman explained why the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has not done exactly what he advocated?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I have never outlined a policy to anybody to follow at any time.

Mr. PARKER of New York. It seems that the Army engineers have made their estimates as to whether a proposition is feasible or practicable, and it is left to these gentlemen to determine whether it would be commercially profitable or not.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Are you a member of the committee?

Mr. PARKER of New York. I am not.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Did you hear the gentleman say that under the law it was left for the engineers to determine? He said they were required to determine whether or not the proposition was feasible.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I did not so understand any member of the committee.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Under the law they are required to report whether or not it will be a paying proposition.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Pardon me, will the gentleman state that again?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Under the law the engineers are required to find that, as a proposition, according to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it would be fair to say that what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] refers to is a provision for a survey of new projects. We insert an item in the bill requiring the engineers to survey new projects. Under the law they are prohibited from making a recommendation until they first determine whether it will be a profitable investment, and that is what the law provides.

Now, gentlemen have referred to the Army engineers with as much opprobrium as they could. Some gentlemen have insisted that we ought to have, not the opinion of Army engineers, but the opinions of business men, men who make money for themselves and for the corporations which they represent. I am going to give an illustration of the kind of opinions we get under such circumstances. The river and harbor engineers reported some provision—and I will not refer to what it is—concerning Chicago and Illinois. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors in reporting the bill did not include all of the money which the engineers have said might be profitably expended, and thereupon I received this letter from a business man, and other letters like it from business men—men of great reputation, some of them. I have received letters along the line of this one, which I will show, from heads of great banks, from heads of great corporations, all great business men, of great business experience, making lots of money for themselves and their corporations. Here is a letter which I ask leave to extend in full in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a letter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. It is from the secretary of the Illinois delegation to the 1914 National Rivers and Harbors Congress, Mr. John J. Commons, addressed to the members of the Illinois delegation to the Rivers and Harbors Congress, asking the people to write in reference to this resolution:

Resolved, That each member of the Illinois delegation write each Senator and Representative from Illinois urging him to use his best endeavor to have the Committee of Commerce of the United States Senate restore to the rivers and harbors bill of this session the amounts recommended for Illinois projects by the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress.
